Mr. Oldham next dealt with Crests, which he said were a variety in which marks did not count. A Crest ought to be massive in body, having the crest nice and round, and of good veiny feather and droop. There were various types; some were long like Lancashires, but he preferred the Norwich type with nice, compact body, when breeding for head feather. He contended that we sometimes got too much feather in body, also that a bird with a flat crest sometimes appeared to be larger in head than one with a drooping crest. The ideal bird to aim at was one with a clear body and dark crest. In the lecturer's opinion the Crest had not improved in head feather since the plate that was issued in 1902.

The Norwich Crestbred.

He next dealt at length with the Crestbred. This bird, he considered, was the most important in the Fancy, as a Crestbred for the breeding room was not always the best looking bird in head properties. A crestbred should have a nice cushion head, should be well lashed, and carry feather well down the back of head. But one could not always tell which would do the most good in a crestbred, as sometimes if you double crest you get a Crestbred which will have a small head with long feather; in his opinion such was the bird to keep for one's own use. In the lecturer's opinion double cresting was essential, but one must be careful in selecting for same. Those full in feather at front, and spare in feather behind, were the birds to double crest with.

Crests were not a vigorous variety; therefore he recommended fanciers to breed from the most vigorous birds. Blindness, he said, was considered by some to be hereditary; he was thankful to say that his birds had been free from it. He thought it might be caused through wildness and by the birds knocking their heads, causing some disease; or, again, through lime in the cage.

After a few useful hints Mr. Oldham closed his lecture, but the Chairman soon had him up again by inviting the members to ask Mr. Oldham questions. Mr. Nelson asked why he recommended double-cresting for new beginners?—If you get a Crestbred from such a cross you can mate it up with a Crest next year, and you will know how it was bred. You could tell better in buying a Crest than a Crestbred. A very interesting discussion took place, Messrs. Massey, Hill, Garner, Nelson, Dickenson, Davies, Beswick, and Stafford contributing. After this Mr. W. Stafford proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Oldham for his very able lecture. Mr. W. T. Hill seconded, and this was carried. Mr. Oldham replied, and said that if any member had benefited he was amply repaid for his trouble, and he hoped to see as many at next meeting to hear the secretary on "The management of young birds."—W. STAFFORD, Secretary.

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

BRADFORD and County British Bird and Mule Club hold their First Annual General Meeting to-day (Saturday), and much business of interest is to be brought forward, on the formation of this club the annual subscription was fixed at one shilling, but this is inadequate to run a club, and on Saturday this matter will be one of the most important under consideration. Many think 2s. 6d. is small enough, while others are of the opinion it is too much. A large number of the members are Canary fanciers, who keep just one or two British birds, and the Club will do well to bear these in mind when fixing the amount of future subscriptions.

THE Tong and District Society had Mr. A. Bottomley, of Laisterdyke, at their headquarters on Tuesday, the 14th inst., to read a paper on breeding, colour feeding, and exhibiting. The evening was very interesting, as the lecturer dealt in a lucid manner with the principal points of our hobby, his remarks being closely followed throughout. The Society has now a membership of about 30, and hopes to increase the number in a very short time. At their last meeting it was decided to join the Yorkshire Union, and this fact will doubtless bring more members into the fold, as I hear several were holding aloof pending this event.

WIBSEY O.S. are having a grand tea and entertainment on Saturday, May 2nd, and expect a big turn up of fanciers from all the surrounding districts. If the tea is anything like the suppers this Society provide, it will be as the Yankees say, "all O.K."; and for the entertainment in the evening a grand programme has been arranged. One of the most interesting items is the presentation to their energetic secretary, Mr. E. W. Johnson, of a splendid framed picture containing Mr. J.'s photo as a centrepiece, surrounded by photos of above 60 of his co-members. It is given as a mark of appreciation of his valuable services to the Society; and well does he deserve it.

BRADFORD East had an excursion arranged for Easter Monday, and the venue selected was Grassington. The day proved fair so far as the weather was concerned, and a ramble through the district is always interesting, bird life being abundant. Many birds not often seen by town dwellers are to be found there in good numbers.

IT was my good fortune to have a day's outing on Good Friday with an ardent observer of Bird Life. Two of the items were of great interest, viz., a Dipper's nest containing eggs, and a view of several pairs of Herons disporting themselves in and about their nests on the tree tops, truly two good things to see on one day. Many of the wild birds are later this year than for many years past. To-day (Sunday) I have seen several nests of Blackbirds, Song and Missel Thrushes, with the hens sitting, but these are fully a fortnight later than is their wont; in fact, I have seen in the same place nests of the same species containing eggs in the second week in March.

STRAIGHT UN.

Kindly thank applicants for my Pom Bitch advertised in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. H. Wilcock (Sheffield), as the replies are too numerous to answer individually. I have had letters from all parts, and this speaks well for CAGE BIRDS as an advertising medium. I sold the Pom Bitch before a great many had got their copy of the paper. I also find CAGE BIRDS very instructive, and would not be without it.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES.

HOW TO BREED, MANAGE AND EXHIBIT.

By H. W. BATTYE (President of the Yorkshire Union). Illustrated by Messrs. H. Norman and A. J. Simpson.

Price 1/- nett. Post Free 1.1½.

This book is absolutely the very best that has been put on the market. It deals fully with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties, and should, without doubt be in the hands of every breeder of the bird of Grace and Beauty. It contains instruction upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, Exhibiting and how to treat this popular variety in both health and disease.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention.

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:—

NOTE.—Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John. British Birds, Mules and Hybrids—G. E. Weston. Foreign Birds—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S., &c., Park and Lake Aviculture—Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. M.B.O.U., &c. Wild Bird Life—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc. of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his question for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

A Troublesome Cinnamon.

Cinnamon.—Your bird has evidently been a troublesome subject, but most of its troubles are due to mismanagement, I think. You must first get the bird well and in good condition before you think of mating him. Carry out the following treatment for a month, and then report result. First give the cage a thorough overhauling inside and out, and re-distemper and varnish to get rid of the red-mite, which are a serious obstacle to the bird's recovery. Whilst the bird is in temporary quarters give it a tepid bath daily with a few drops of quassia in it, but do not overdo it; you evidently made it much too strong when you gave such a bath before. Keep it quite free from chills and draughts. Feed on a mixture of three parts Canary and one part rape as a staple, and give half a teaspoonful of hemp twice a week separately. Every second day give half a teaspoonful of crumbs of stale sponge cake with five drops of sherry and three of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed with it, and sprinkle it with a few grains of gold of pleasure seed. In the drinking water for the first two days give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and afterwards ten of chemical food in the water every second day; on the alternate days five drops of aromatic sulphuric acid for a week. Then drop the acid and give instead five drops of tincture of steel twice a week. Give a little chickweed or dandelion daily—two small leaves of the latter will be plenty

Success and Failure.

"Patience."—It is certainly disappointing that you should have tried four years to breed birds, and succeeded each time in getting birds, and having good feeding hens, and still having all the young die. Perhaps your egg cake is at fault, but you give no details as to how it is made. You might compare your method with some recipe mentioned in a recent instalment of the "Novices' Notebook." You might try mixing an equal bulk of bread crumbs with your egg cake if you really wish to avoid boiled eggs. I would, however, advise you to try the usual mode of feeding with your first nests and note the result. Boil eggs ten minutes; take out yolks when cold, chop them into very small grains on a plate; you may add a slight sprinkling of fine sugar to help the mincing process; then add at least twice the bulk of bread crumbs and well mix together, and give to the birds. This is for ordinary use after the birds are a few days old. On the day they are hatched give the pure yolk without bread, and afterwards gradually add the bread in greater proportions each day until it is the above strength. All you need be chary about is allowing the egg food to become stale. Keep it freshly made every day. You should be able to get young leaves of dandelion almost anywhere now. Every field, hedgerow, country lane, or waste place will yield its quota. The symptoms of inflammation naturally depend upon the part inflamed, but there is always great and apparent prostration and rapid exhaustion.

Feeding and Feather Plucking.

A. Johnson.—1. The feeding of Norwich Greens whilst breeding should be the same as for any other variety. The mixture you suggest is not an ideal one by any means, and a teaspoonful of egg food every day for each bird is far too much. As a staple give a mixture of two parts Canary to one part rape, and give all the other seeds separately, allowing a teaspoonful of hemp every second day to each pair of birds, and on the intervening days, but not often, give a similar quantity of egg and biscuit to each pair, and a small pinch of inga in addition. Give a little green food daily, and if the birds are backward let it consist of one or two small leaves of dandelion to each bird. As soon as the hen has laid the third egg drop off the inga, and also the egg food as soon as she commences to sit, and withhold it until the young are due to hatch. The inga will not be required again until the hen is getting forward with her second nest. For further details you should look up our "Novice's Note-book" page. 2. It is quite clear that insect pests are the cause of the German hen picking her feathers. It is probably the cage that requires attention more than the bird. Give it a thorough overhaul before the warm weather comes, and meanwhile give the bird a bath with a little quassia in it daily.

In a Bad Way.

G.F.K.—I am afraid your pair of birds were not in a fit condition for mating at all. Therefore, do not be disappointed if you find the eggs turn out to be unfertile. The birds have either been exposed to draughts or damp, or had a severe chill. You must strictly guard against these now; keep the birds warm and comfortable; withhold the bath until the weather is warmer; and follow up this treatment for two or three weeks. Give half a teaspoonful of stale sponge cake crumbs with five drops of sherry wine and five of cod liver oil emulsion mixed with it every second day, and in the drinking water give one day twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glyceerine, and five each of syrup of squills and sweet spirits of nitre. Next day give twelve drops of chemical food, and continue these on alternate days for the length of time named. Give a little green food daily, and, of course, the usual seed diet. You had better treat the hen the same. If she sits out her time try to have another hen available to take to the young and rear them, if there should by chance be any hatched, as this hen will not be fit to rear them.

Moulting for Two Years.

E.H.D.—Your management is at fault somewhere. Is the bird kept in a position where there are great variations of heat, or above a gas jet when alight? If so, these conditions must be altered by placing it where the heat is more regular, the air pure, but free from draughts. Feed on plain Canary seed, with a small piece of sponge-cake daily, with five drops cod liver oil emulsion on it, and twice a week give half a teaspoonful of hemp seed, and a similar quantity of scalded rape twice a week. In the drinking water give one day fifteen drops of chemical food; next day twenty drops of sherry and five of tincture of steel; the third day give pure water. Then begin again, and repeat this over again and again for two or three weeks, or until the bird ceases dropping feathers.

Brevities.

A Prolific Canary (J.H.B.).—Your hen which laid over forty eggs last year, and has begun laying again this year, although not mated, is simply exhausting herself. If the treatment you are now giving her does not stop the diarrhœa, discontinue egg food and bread and milk altogether, and substitute every second day a teaspoonful of crumbs of stale sponge cake slightly "peppered" with prepared chalk. Withhold green food, and do not give cold baths until the weather is warmer. In the water give fifteen drops of chemical food one day, and the next day fifteen drops of sherry wine and five of tincture of steel. Repeat these on alternate days for a fortnight.

Two and Three (J.H.B.).—The second and third queries you send seem to point to the fact that there is something radically wrong with your management. If you write again, state definitely and clearly how you feed and manage your stock, then I may be better able to help you. The hens appear to be greatly over-stimulated. Feed No. 2 hen on a plain diet, with a little green food daily—watercress, chickweed, or lettuce, but no dandelion at all—and add a few grains of Epsom Salts to the water three times a week. When she has reached a normal condition, mate her to a healthy vigorous cock without any previous feeding up. No. 3: Treat this cock for a fortnight by giving the medicine advised for the No. 1 prolific laying hen. This should soon put him right.

Birds with Sore Beaks (F.J.H.).—Have written you about the birds with sores round the beaks. Should the bathing with warm, strong boracic solution not prove quite successful, and you find it necessary to write again, do not fail to describe the appearance of the sores, and say how the birds are fed and kept, and whether the complaint spreads quickly from one bird to another in the same cage, or in the same room but in separate cages.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

More Pairing Matters.

C.L.—Did you notice the reply to "Beginner" in last week's issue? It seems to me to cover the queries you now put. I point out (1) that you leave the partition between the birds until both show signs of readiness to nest; or at least until the hen begins to carry nesting stuff about with intention of starting to build. In the latter case, however, if the cock bird is not also "wound up" to breeding pitch, then clear eggs may be one's portion for that clutch. (2) That it is no use putting in the nest-box until the hen evidences a desire for such a receptacle. Her condition and action guide one as to this, and, of course, if you stick a little nesting material between the cage wires, she will, when ready, be seen carrying it about the cage. Even then, however, a hen is frequently some little time before she starts seriously on the task of nest-building, and during this time some "play" at nest-building, carrying bits of stuff into the nest-box, and then carting them out again, sometimes even getting the nest partly constructed, only to pull it to bits again. One has to "humour" such hens. I see no reason why you should not mate cock Goldfinch to hen Canary; this cross is a very common one. The Goldfinch is a late breeder by nature; in captivity some Goldies may be got to breed very early, however.

Siberian Goldfinch Very Fat.

Devonport.—You did not, in my opinion, give the Siberian Goldfinch a lengthy enough spell in the flight cage. You should turn him into the latter for three weeks at least; longer, if possible. Let him have a "reduced" diet; that is, give in the stock mixture Canary and teazle seeds, with just a very light sprinkling of rape and linseed. Give half a teaspoonful of hemp one day, mixed niger and maw the next, and a teaspoonful of sunflower the next. Let him have the opportunity to take a bath daily should he desire to do so. Every second day, for about 10 days, dissolve in every two tablespoonfuls of drinking water just about as much sulphate of soda as will cover a shilling. You will have to use your discretion in this, for you only want to make his bowels move freely—not to give the soda so as to make the bird's excreta very loose and watery. This treatment will get rid of the superfluous "yellow fat" you describe, and bring the Goldie into condition again. Probably he is one of the "lazy" kind; occasionally you get such a lethargic bird among the Siberians.

Concerning the Robin.

Anxious.—1. The young Robin assumes the red breast at the first moult, i.e., when it loses its spotted nestling plumage, at the end of the summer (broadly speaking) during which it was born. 2. Robins do not change their colour with the seasons, in the same way, that is, as many other species—the Grey and Pied Wagtails, for instance. But the male Robin is duller in colour during the winter, especially on the breast, which takes on a much ruddier tint as the breeding season approaches. 3. I am not good at defining colours in exact shades, but the breast colour of an adult cock Robin I should describe as cinnamon-red in the winter, brightening to a deep orange-red in summer. The young male (one year old) never, by the bye, has the breast colour so intense as two and three-year-old males. In a good specimen the red extends down the breast to the abdomen—usually extending further down the flanks than it does in the centre of the breast. I am judging by the pet Robin, which I have myself in a cage, and which I fancy is a decent bird from the exhibition point of view.

The Crow Family Again.

J.C.—No doubt you would notice that in our last issue I dealt with a similar query to yours, and gave details of the feeding of various members of the Crow family. An aviary 25 ft. long, 12 wide, and 7 high ought to make an admirable place to keep a few of our Corvine friends in. You could choose between Raven, Chough (both Cornish and Alpine), Jay, Jackdaw, Magpie, and Nutcracker, or include them all, and add a Rook and a Crow if it pleased you to do so. I should not advise you to attempt anything elaborate in the way of "fittings"—a weather-proof shelter, plenty of stout branches and perches, and an artistic rockery (or imitation rocky cliff) will "fill the bill" admirably. You should consult Mr. Norman's book on "Aviaries." I do not know that either a Gull or a Stork requires any special "sleeping accommodation" beyond, say, a sheltered corner it can retire to when so disposed. I am sure you would find the projected aviary of the Crow family a very interesting one, and not at all in the nature of a difficult problem, providing you can easily fill the birds' wants so far as food is concerned. A large bathing trough (not deep, but of considerable area) would be a decided acquisition to the place, and should be compassed if at all possible.

Owing to the Easter Holidays many Queries have necessarily to wait until our next issue for an answer.—EDITOR.

An Anxious Mule Breeder.

Yorkie.—It is no use being "anxious." What will you gain if you pair up the Goldfinch and the Canary only to get clear eggs? As I am often pointing out, May is the earliest month (especially if we have cold, backward weather during the early spring), in which the Hybrid-breeder can hope to get full clutches. Just look at the weather we have had this last week! In a state of nature the Goldfinch is a late breeder, May being well turned ere he is far embarked upon domestic duties. Of course, we sometimes hear of Goldfinches kept in captivity (in, say, a heated living-room), and fed on stimulating seeds, fertilising eggs in February, or even January. But don't be misled by reports such as these. I cannot do more than assure you that the majority of my own muling and hybrid couples have not been finally put together yet.

Treatment of Buntings.

A. Stenson.—You are right; the Yellowhammer, Cirl, and Corn Buntings require practically identical treatment when in captivity. The only "stock mixture," in fact, you require for all Buntings is plain Canary seed. Few will eat any quantity of other seeds, though now and again small oats, wild seed mixture, rape, cracked hemp, coarse oatmeal, or maw, seeds will be picked over and a few grains eaten. To make up a little variety in the diet, it is best to give a feed of soaked ants' eggs frequently, and live insect food (mealworms, flies, scoured gentles, small beetles, and grubs generally) according to season. Fresh (live) ants' eggs are relished exceedingly. "Shop" ants' eggs (get the best quality only) are well liked if soaked in a little new milk, drained on a cloth, and then given the birds. Many Finches, too, appreciate them when prepared in this way. It is well to mix a sprinkling of a good insectivorous food among the ants' eggs, gradually increasing the quantity, as in this way Buntings (other species, too) can be got to eat it readily; and it is very good for them. Green food these birds are not keen on, but you can always offer them a sprig of whatever you may happen to have in the place.

Bullfinch with Eye Trouble.

Bombadoss.—Put the bird in a larger cage; clean the perches daily. Dissolve a small teaspoonful of boric acid in a pint of boiling water; use a little of this, just nicely warm, to bathe the eyes with twice daily, morning and evening. A piece of very soft old linen, gently applied, will answer for the latter purpose. Afterwards dab dry with a soft cloth (used lightly), and lightly smear the scurfy parts around the eyes with a little mild sulphur ointment, applied with the tip of a finger. The ointment and acid you can obtain from any chemist. Give a fair daily supply of green-food to eat; buds from hawthorn hedges, fruit trees and bushes, also seeding dandelion, shepherd's-purse, chickweed, groundsel, etc., and young dandelion leaves. If you persevere with this treatment, you will find the troublesome and objectionable condition gradually righted.

Brevities.

Off-Song Goldfinches (A.H.).—The seed mixture is not at fault, so probably the conditions under which the birds are kept may be to blame. Let me know what style of cage you use, whether you keep them in a heated room, and whether you think they may be troubled with red-mite, and I will try to put things right, with pleasure.

Thistle Seed (Hardbill).—I note your further letter with interest. Thanks for writing.

An Aviary (A.L.N.).—Certainly; your aviary would, in fact, easily accommodate three or four more hen Canaries.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

What Parrakeet?

W. H. Boxley.—Your bird is either the Indian or African Ring-necked Parrakeet. From what you say as to its size, I think it is the latter. Most Ring-necks make very fair talkers, but there is a great deal of individualism with these birds, and some are much more teachable than others. Keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation, also teach it by the constant repetition of words and short phrases. See that it neither gets scared nor yet irritated, or instead of talking it may do nothing but scream. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, nor yet any kind of animal food. Diet: A seed mixture of Canary, millet, wheat, dari, oats, hemp and sunflower, one part each of the two latter kinds, and two parts each of the others. To vary the diet, also give ripe fruit, plain biscuit, nuts (shelled walnuts are best), cuttlefish, grit, and water for drinking and bathing.

Breeding Budgerigars.

Enquirer.—(1) Canary, white and spray millet seeds, with a few oats once or twice a week; green-food (grass in flower or fresh lettuce), cuttlefish, grit and water. (2) I think, if anything, the original stock, viz., the Green variety is the more hardy, but still both are sufficiently so to be kept out of doors all the year round. (3) Both varieties are free breeders, and providing the sexes are equal in number, and the aviary is not overcrowded, two or three pairs together usually breed with greater freedom than a single pair. You must note the following: They readily cross pair, and the progeny of such are pure Greens, so that if you require any Yellows start with two pairs Yellows and one pair Green, and then you will be sure of having one pair of Yellows properly mated. Also note, you must hang up double the number of nesting husks that you have pairs of birds. Birds purchased now should commence breeding as soon as they have become accustomed to their quarters.

Zebra Finches.

A.W.—You did quite right in removing the Love-birds; such are never safe even in a large aviary with Finches, and are really dangerous in a cage such as yours. If you really wish to try and get a hybrid, then get hens of either of the following: Diamond Finch, Silverbill, Bengalee, or Bronzewing Mannikin. Whichever you choose, put it in with the Zebra Finch and leave them pretty well to themselves. With hybrid breeding you need a lot of patience, and they may remain together several seasons without attempting to nest; on the other hand, they may do so almost at once. One thing in your favour is that a Zebra Finch is always anxious to nest under almost any conditions, and if he can only get the hen to condescend to his attentions, undoubtedly some young hybrids will be the result. Your other alternative is to get another hen Zebra, and breeding results should follow. A hen Canary put out as soon as the weather is warmer could be left out all the year, but any result from such an union would be very improbable.

Grey Parrot's Strained Leg.

W. Ellis.—I am rather at a loss how to advise you; you give me practically no history of the trouble, as to whether it is of quite recent origin, or whether the bird has been in this condition for some time. As you cannot handle the bird you cannot foment or anything of that kind, but I strongly suspect it to be a case of constitutional weakness. Remove the grating from bottom of cage, and place food vessels within easy reach and let the perch be fixed only a few inches from cage bottom. Make its drinking water the colour of pale port with Parrish's Chemical Food for, say, a month or six weeks at least, and give twice a week a piece of bread, plain biscuit, or something similar which it will eat, into which you have soaked one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia. Do not give table scraps, milk, tea or coffee slops, or any kind of animal food whatever. Let your diet consist of the usual seed mixture, ripe fruit, green-food, plain biscuit, nuts (shelled walnuts are best), cuttlefish, and water. If you write again giving fuller particulars, also stating how you have been dieting the bird, possibly I might help you further.

Budgerigars not Breeding.

T.S.—I am afraid I can suggest but little, but the time is now fast approaching when you can easily procure grass flowers or seeding grass. Give them as much of this as they will consume. Supply them with old mortar rubbish and crushed cuttlefish. From your description I should say they would soon settle down to breeding, unless you have got hold of old and worn-out males. I presume mice are not occupying the husks, and so interfering with the birds' nesting arrangements. However, so far as this year is concerned, there is plenty of time, and it is quite as well they have not yet started; at any rate, so long as the present awful weather lasts. Have you got a friend you could exchange a pair with? Sometimes this acts as a stimulant.

Moustache Parrakeets, etc.

Parrakeets.—I much regret if a query of yours has been overlooked, and I certainly do not remember a case referring to this species, though often I am compelled to defer a reply for a week. It is not easy to give you the sexual distinctions, as there are several near species sold as Moustache Parrakeets, but I am assuming your bird is Palæornis javanicus. The male has the breast rosy, and the whole of the head, excepting the black streaks, grass-green. In the female the breast is green, the head much suffused with yellow, and the moustachial streak much shorter and of a downward tendency. I expect you lost your cock Dove from the effects of importation; many of these arrive in a very rough condition. Once they get over this they are hardy enough. There are two species, the Indian and the Australian; the former is of a darker hue generally than the Australian species; otherwise they are much alike. Give the hen, if she still lives, a dose of Dinneford's Magnesia (one teaspoonful) in the drinking water (one ounce) for one day. Follow this, by putting in the same quantity of water as much prepared chalk as will lie on a shilling, and five drops of laudanum; well stir up occasionally. Rosiumps are the hardiest of Parrakeets, and you have been most unfortunate; Canary, millet, oats, and a little hemp, with liberal supplies of green-food is about all they require. The White-eats are not unduly noisy, though they have a shrill call, and should do well in your aviary. If you care to send me a rough plan and description of your aviary, perhaps I may be able to assist you re your losses.

What Bird, etc.?

Java.—(1) From your description I should say it is some kind of Cowbird, and a female. As to whether it is rare or otherwise I cannot say from your details. Can you give me a few more details, as to shape of head, beak, etc.? In form does it resemble a Thrush as well as in size, or is it a Grosbeak like bird? (2) Cardinals are bad breeders in captivity; they will build, lay and incubate well, but very few young are reared, and this only at the cost of keeping up an almost constant supply of live insects—cockroaches, mealworms, beetles smooth caterpillars, etc. (3) Give the bird a dose or two of Epsom salts; make the drinking water just saline with the salts. If this does not give relief, I should say it is crop-bound, and you had better let a vet. see to it. (4) If these hens were mine, I should get rid of them. Turn them loose in some open space or park where there is plenty of grass, and get one or two fresh ones; these will never be of any use for breeding, in my opinion. Do not let your male Budgerigar pair till it is quite recovered.

Brevities.

Cockatiels, British and Foreign Finches (J.W.J.).—Cockatiels are quite safe; I never knew them to harm the smallest Waxbill, but Budgerigars are quite another matter, and are really dangerous company for Finches, etc., even though you keep them together without loss for a year or so; sooner or later you will be finding maimed and dead bodies about, and the Budgerigars will be the culprits. The only British birds I should advise you to include are Goldfinches, Bullfinches, Siskins, Twites, Brown Linnets, and Redpolls; you could also include a pair of Norwich Canaries. You can accommodate in your aviary 60 or 70 birds.

Ring necked Parrakeet in Poor Plumage (Roller).—Continue the treatment already advised; a good many Parrots and Parrakeets are moulting now. Continue the Parrish's Chemical Food, making the drinking water the colour of port wine. Soak a piece of stale household bread or biscuit daily, then squeeze out all the water possible, and well dust the sop with flour of sulphur. Persevere with the treatment previously advised, with above modifications, and it should ultimately hear fruit. As it recovers tone its plumage should improve, but usually in such cases this is somewhat slow.

Teaching Parrot to Talk (A.H.K.).—As near as possible make the bird one of the family. See that it is neither irritated nor scared. Keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation, also teach it, by constant repetition, such words and short phrases as you wish it to repeat; it will pick up others from the general conversation.

Avadavat not Regaining Seasonal Plumage (M.O.T.).—I should say the temperature you keep your bird room at is too enervating for the birds; 50 degrees Fahr. would be ample. I may say I have kept these birds out of doors all the year round, and they usually came into colour fairly regularly. See that your birds get plenty of fresh air without draught. Give them small squares of turf (grass in flower), blighty foliage, and a liberal supply of spray millet, as well as Canary and white millet seeds. Well tint their drinking water every other day for the next month with Parrish's Chemical Food.

Foreign Songsters (Ireland).—Seed-eaters, Grey and Green Singing Finches, Alario Finch, Cape Canary. All the Serins are of fully average merit as songsters. Insectivorous: Grey Bulbul, most of the Foreign Thrushes, Mocking Birds, Pekin Robins (individuals vary much in song capacity). The Persian Bulbul is a very fine songster. Repeat query if above does not cover your need. Cockatiels are rather erratic breeders. Some pairs do nothing much but lay eggs, forsaking them when half incubated, and then lay another clutch. You certainly have a probable chance of success.

What Dove? (J.C.).—Before I attempt to name your bird, please give me some idea of its size, and state whether it is stoutly or slenderly built. I have kept your description by me, and will name it for you on receipt of above particulars. I may say there are but few species that will breed under any other conditions than those of the outdoor aviary, but there are some species that must be taken indoors in the winter.

What Parrot? (H. G. Nap).—Before I can name your bird you must tell me whether it has a long or short tail, and the colour of its beak. Upon receipt of these particulars I shall have pleasure in attempting to name it for you.

PARK & LAKE AVICULTURE

Answered by FRANK FINN, B.A., F.Z.S., M.B.O.U., etc.

Misfortunes of Married Mandarins.

H. Lewis.—A mated Mandarin Drake never shows more than toleration to any other Duck than the one he really cares for, and sometimes they will be, as in your case, really spiteful to her. Naturally, also, the real mate does not care much about the presence of a third party. Often, however, a drake will fertilise the eggs of both, but this does not seem likely in your case, and I should advise you to dispose of the bird he dislikes, unless you prefer to get another Drake and try your luck with the two pairs. The fact that your Drake prefers the Duck, which was originally a stranger to him, to the one you got along with him, shows how exclusive these birds often are in their attachments, and if you got a new Drake you might find the despised Duck cherished a hopeless love for the other. The mated Duck ought to lay soon now, but breeding is not such a certainty with Mandarins as with some of the coarser fancy waterfowl. Nowadays, so many of them are wild-caught, and, as the species is such a nervous one, I think this has made them uncertain breeders. Your surroundings, however, seem favourable; you should put in a covered nesting-box raised above the ground, with a ladder leading to it if the birds are pinioned.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Border Canary (Border).—Tumour involving base of lung and liver, ending with rupture of blood vessels.

Canary (M. Sharrock).—Inflammation of liver, lungs, and spleen, suggestive of fever.

Canary (C. Lloyd). Effusion of blood on brain, possibly caused through a knock against a perch.

Cock Canary (Miss Martin).—Apoplexy. Body overloaded with fat.

Canary (Novice).—Immediate cause of death was apoplexy, but this resulted from a feverish condition of liver, lungs, and spleen, suggestive of bird fever.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Outdoor Aviary (W. Tuck).—You will find designs (photographs, as well) of outdoor aviaries, and full particulars for their erection, in our handbook entitled "Aviaries, Birdrooms and Cages," which can be sent you post free in return for postal order value 2s. 3d.

Postcards (John Kay).—We are afraid we cannot promise to produce the postcards you mention this season. Will see what can be done with regard to the other matter.

A Canary Seed Problem (T. Reynolds).—We are interested in hearing you have a home-made machine for getting rid of the husks of seed. Why not send a sketch and description of it, and so lend a helping hand to the enquirer?

Suggestion (Yorkie).—Thanks. We shall adopt your suggestion. The book by Buffon we should have no use for, but some reader might entertain an exchange with you.

Catching (W.B.).—The "close season," generally speaking, is from March 1st to August 1st, but certain birds are protected in certain parts of the country all the year round. You could get a copy of the act as applying to your district, by sending a request, accompanied by a stamped addressed envelope, to the town clerk. This would give a list of the species fully protected. It is illegal to use a trap cage in the "close season," of course, for the purpose of taking protected birds, just the same as it is nets.

Paper (G. Peters).—Thanks very much for the paper, which we will see is returned to you in due course.

Sea Sand (Val).—We hardly think the town authorities would entertain the project of sending you on a portion of their beach now and again. The ordinary (very fine) sea sand is useless for birds—it is the gritty kind (small shingle) that bird-keepers require. An advertisement in our columns would probably get you in touch with some fancier residing at the seaside who would be willing to put you a small quantity on rail as required.

A Mixed Family (A. C. Eley).—Thanks for your interesting photograph, which we shall hope to reproduce in the near future.

LONG EATON AND DIS. C.B.S.

General meeting held at the Co-operative Room, Station Street, on April 11th, when there was a good turn-out of members, including several of the vice-presidents. Mr. H. M. K. Berridge (vice-president) occupied the chair. Mr. A. Horward was nominated for membership. The election of President and vice-presidents for 1908 resulted as follows:—President, Councillor G. Smith, J.P.; vice-presidents, Mr. F. R. Claye, J.P., Mr. J. Orchard, J.P., Councillor F. Mansfield, Councillor A. Chester, Councillor G. A. Perks, Councillor E. Wallis, Messrs. F. C. W. Dakin, G. Wilcox, J. R. Smith, T. C. Guttridge, W. Hooton, W. Wallis, W. H. Morris, B. Storey, J. G. Smith, H. M. K. Berridge. The date of members' show was altered from December 26th to December 19th, which we found will be more suitable to the members. A silver cup was offered for competition by Mr. G. A. Perks for the best young Norwich Plainhead, to be won three times, not necessarily in succession. Silver cup also offered by Mr. H. M. K. Berridge for best young Yorkshire, to be won on the same lines. This makes four silver cups in the Society, which we think is very good, and most encouraging to our members. These gentlemen were greatly cheered by all present for their kind offers. —TURNER and BARKER, Secretaries.

RUGBY AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

An Interesting Washing Competition.

The bird-lovers of Rugby and District spent a pleasant evening at the club house, the Moat Restaurant, on April 13th. Recognising the importance of cleanliness on the show bench, and desiring that those connected with the society should have an opportunity of seeing how a bird ought to be washed, the committee had invited Mr. George Hall (Leamington) to give an exhibition in the washing of birds. Five Canaries were "tubbed" by Mr. Hall, and one was treated by a member of the society; it need hardly be said that the whole lot survived the ordeal, and looked much the cleaner for it. Mr. Hall went about his work in his own way, and he certainly was not long over it. Confidence he regarded as the great essential to success. Three ordinary wash-hand basins were procured, and each was half filled with nice, soft water. In the first basin about a teaspoonful of borax was dissolved, and from a piece of special soap a good lather was quickly produced on the surface of the water. For soaping the bird Mr. Hall used a piece of flannel, which he considers better than anything else, and the ease with which the dirt was removed was really surprising. The tail first received attention, then the back and wings, the neck and head being dealt with later, care being taken the while to wipe away all grime from the base of the beak, where it accumulates so readily and so often. With dexterity, the bird was next turned over and well washed on the underside, the butts of the wings not being omitted. "Use plenty of water" was one piece of advice given, and "always apply the flannel in the same direction" was another, the direction indicated being, of course, towards the tail. The first stage being completed, and hints having been given as to the correct way of holding the bird, with the tail lying across the wrist, etc., "Dickie" was passed on to basin No. 2, containing clear water; here the bird's feathers were "stroked" with a camel-hair brush, in order to free the plumage of the dirty soap. The third basin was reserved for the purpose of rinsing the bird. To help produce a gloss and put on a better finish, about a tablespoonful of glycerine had been added to this water, which was applied with a sponge, held above the bird's back, and squeezed over him several times. The sponge also came in handy for partially drying the bird, and before being placed in the drying cage our feathered friend was also wiped with a silk handkerchief. The temperature of the cage was raised to 100 degrees, and as the process of drying advanced was gradually reduced to somewhere about 60 degrees. This was easily effected by drawing the cage back from the fire. Mr. Hall placed a damp towel over the muslin front, as he thought this helped to ensure the feathers drying out soft, and would help to give that sheen we all like to see on an exhibition specimen. A number of questions were asked and satisfactorily answered, and Mr. Hall was heartily thanked.—CLEM. F. SAVAGE, Sec.

THE BREEDING AND MANAGEMENT OF CANARIES.

By S. R. COMPSTON.

Notes from a Lecture delivered before the Macclesfield and District C.B.S. on March 28th.

One of a series of interesting lectures during 1908 was delivered by Mr. S. R. Compston (Whirley). Councillor Thompson presided, and in opening the meeting said it was a great pleasure for him to be amongst them. He was delighted, he said, to find the society in such a flourishing condition, and so evidently on the up-grade.

Mr. Compston said: I am only too pleased to assist by giving you a few hints on this remarkable subject, Canary breeding and management. There are many varieties of Canaries from which the fancier is able to make his own choice. The address I am giving you to day applies equally to all varieties.

Selection and Mating of Stock.

As to the selection of your birds, don't buy birds you know nothing about, or all your efforts will end in disappointment. It is nothing to buy a large number of birds, and all of them have had points about them. Whatever you do, don't mate two birds together that have both bad points about them, and if you want good birds, start at the beginning with good ones. Remember the old saying, which assures us that like breeds like, and that therefore blood will tell.

The best possible time to mate up your birds is, according to my idea, when the birds themselves tell you they are ready. There is no useful purpose served in forcing them, as the saying is; let them gradually come on themselves. Another guide as to the proper time to mate them up is when you see the wild birds outside beginning to pair up and build their nests; then is your proper time.

In the management of your birds, see you get plenty of fresh air in the birdroom; this is one of the most important points in having healthy birds. A Canary can stand a considerable amount of cold, but be careful to avoid draughts. A pure atmosphere is one of the chief points in a bird's health. Next comes the water; if you can change this two or three times a day, so much the better, as it becomes stagnant and impure. Use plenty of good grit, as it contains the mineral salts necessary for the birds in the digestion of their food. Use only good, clean, white seed for the staple food, giving a change of mixed seed occasionally.

Feeding and Doctoring.

Of course you all have your own ideas as to feeding the young when they arrive. Most of you will use the ordinary egg and bread, but I think when you are making your egg-food, you should use the crust of bread or biscuit, as it is far superior to soft bread. A little dog biscuit (Spratt's puppy) powdered very fine and slightly damped, will be found very beneficial, and will afford a nice change for the birds; but do not use this every day, only now and again.

I should like to advise you a little on the important subject of medicines. Before using any kind of drugs, always try and find out what ails your bird. When a bird is ill you will find that very probably it is feverish. One drop of aconite given in the drinking water, fresh each day, will suffice to bring down the temperature of the bird to its normal point in a day or two. Every bird lover should keep aconite in the bird room, as it is a most valuable medicine.

Inflammation.

Inflammation is indeed a complaint that is often met with by the bird fancier. Many fanciers believe in turpentine, which is all right as far as it goes, providing when the turpentine has been on a bit you just go over the same place with a little olive oil; but as we all know, turpentine burns, more so in some cases than in others. Belladona is, I think, a good cure for inflammation, and one that is inexpensive.

After the lecture, several important questions were put to Mr. Compston, which he answered very satisfactorily. Mr. W. Lee proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman and Mr. S. R. Compston for the services they had rendered. This was seconded by Mr. F. Broadhurst (Secretary), and carried unanimously.—H. WALLWORTH, Assistant Secretary.

A COLUMN FOR FANCIERS.

Appended are brief particulars of some of "Cage Birds" SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS for keepers and lovers of birds, with post free prices.

"THE HYGIENE OF BIRD-KEEPING." - 1/1.
By W. GEO. CRESWELL, M.D.
A most useful manual, thoroughly treating of modern hygiene in bird-keeping, by the most eminent living authority on the subject.

"SEPTIC FEVER OR CANARY PLAGUE." - 7d.
By K. H. CLARKE, M.D.,
A very useful booklet concerning this dread disease. It is the only one published, and should be found in every bird-lover's library. Dr. Clarke has given the subject very special study.

"THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD CANARY." 1½d.
By J. H. PAYNE.
A Lecture reprinted from CAGE BIRDS, delivered by this leading judge and expert before the London and Provincial Ornithological Society, and pronounced by all experts to be a most valuable pamphlet concerning the breeding of the variety.

BREEDING CAGE LABELS, 1d. doz., 7 doz. 6d.
A boon to all breeders. Neatly printed in sets of twelve, on perforated gummed paper. They can be torn off, and affixed to the breeding cage in a moment, and prevent all confusion. Useful alike to both small and large breeders of birds.

CARD BREEDING REGISTERS, 1d. each, 4 for 3d., 9 for 6d.
For hanging up in the birdroom. Printed on suitable stiff card, they are ruled to hold a complete record of the breeding results of six pairs of birds; invaluable for future reference, to ensure that knowledge of one's stock essential to accurate breeding.

LIVE BIRD LABELS, 24, 3d.; 50, 6d.; 100, 1/-.
For use when despatching live birds on journeys by rail, or to the shows, etc. Printed in red ink and gummed on back. The simplest, neatest, and best on the market.

NOTE PAPER & POSTCARDS, 250 for 2/-; 500 for 2/6.
Until further notice we have decided to supply below cost price artistic Memorandum Forms and stout postcards, with name, address, twelve words of particulars, and blocks of any special variety of bird at half cost for cash. Carriage paid to any address in the U.K. Our latest style of note-head and postcard has been universally admired, and we will gladly send specimens to anyone enclosing stamped addressed envelope.

BLOCKS OF BIRDS, 1/6 each, 5 for 6/-, or 9 for 10/-.
For inserting in advertisements and for printing memorandums blocks of all kinds of birds at above low prices can be supplied. Larger blocks to order at cheapest possible rates. These dainty little blocks immensely enhance the appearance of note paper, postcards, and advertisements.

PICTURE POSTCARDS, 1d. each; set of six, 6d.
The most delightful and appropriate postcards of Canaries, British Birds, and Hybrids on the market, executed in colours by Mr. H. Norman. Ideal for Fanciers' correspondence. All represent exact and correct show types and have accompanying descriptions. State which bird or birds are required, or whether a mixed selection is preferred.
The latest set is entitled, "Pairs Matched for Breeding"; very educational art postcards. Price 3d. set of 8.

ORNAMENTAL PLATES, 1/- & 1/6 each.
The following coloured plates of cage Birds can be obtained mounted on stiff card and gelatined. This process makes them washable and gives them the handsome appearance and all the durability of framed plates under glass:—Bullfinch, Blackbird and Robin, Border Fancy Canary, Bullfinch Hybrids, Cinnamon Canary, Cinnamon Marked Yorkshires, Foreign Finches, Goldfinch and Bullfinch, Hybrids (popular), Lancashire and Lizards, Mules (popular), Norwich (Yellow), Parrakeets, Yorkshires. Price 1s. each. Crests, Desirable Aliens (Foreign Birds), Larks and Pipits, Norwich (Blaze of Colour), Wagtails and Stonechat. Price 1s. 6d. each.
Also a padded plate of KINGFISHER having all the appearance of a hand painting executed on ivory. A most charming ornament for brackets, occasional tables, etc. Price 1s. All are post free.
Why spend large sums on decorating the house with other pictures?

FANCIERS' PRINTING.
Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A SUITABLE EXCHANGE.

SIR,—To those who advertise for a "suitable exchange" in the exchange column, may I point out that it is difficult to surmise the nature of the exchange desired. I suggest that if advertisers mention their trade or profession they would be more likely to get satisfaction.

H. WALLACE.

THE CHALLENGE CUP AT NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

SIR,—I have looked up the 1908 directory of Newcastle, and the only "John Harker" I can find in it resides at Tankerville Terrace. He has not exhibited at either of the shows held by the present Newcastle C.B.S., nor do I think he keeps birds, except it is an ordinary songster.

T. C. CRAWHALL.

A PROPOSED NEW SOCIETY FOR MORLEY, YORKS.

SIR,—I shall be pleased if you will allow me space to announce in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, that a meeting for the formation of a Cage Bird Society will be held in the Sycamore Hotel, High Street, Morley, on Saturday, April 25th, at eight o'clock p.m. prompt. All interested are cordially invited.

TWO EGGS IN ONE DAY.

SIR,—Your readers, J. S. and E. W. Lunt, may be interested to know that one of my hens last year laid two eggs every time she laid. Her nest consisted of four eggs each time. She would lay two eggs one morning, and then miss a morning, and lay two more on the day following. This is an old bird now. The year before she laid alright, and had twenty young birds. All last season she laid two every time and reared eight young. This year she is laying alright again. The first nest of young are on the perches and she is laying her next clutch now (Friday). By the bye, has any fancier had any trouble in getting a cock bird to mate up to a clear yellow hen? I have a buff cock that will mate to variegated hens, but not clear ones. Is there any water colour I could put on the hen (of course harmless) so as to darken her? I am very anxious to get it this year to pair with a clear yellow hen—a good show bird. I should be pleased to know if anybody else has such a fussy cock bird.

BIRD LOVER.

THE CAGE BIRD UNION AND CLASHING OF SHOWS.

SIR,—I am Secretary of a mixed Society, which we will call A, and joined the C.B.U. at its formation. B is a Cage Bird Society which was formed, and joined the C.B.U. last year, and is situated not 25 miles from A. A's show for 1908 was fixed and registered with the C.B.U. at least 21 days before B's date was fixed, which is the same date as A's. Is it fair and just for the Cage Bird Union to allow B to hold their show on the same date as A? Notwithstanding a protest was lodged, the Secretary of the C.B.U. informs the Secretary of A Society that he cannot compel B to alter their date, and as both are affilliated to the C.B.U. both shows can be held on the same date. Now, I thought one of the ideas of the C.B.U. was to prevent the clashing of shows. Does this seem like it? Perhaps B's subscription is larger than A's, and the C.B.U. are afraid of offending them? If this kind of thing goes on the quicker Societies take steps to boycot the C.B.U. the better for all concerned. Perhaps there are other mixed Societies who have been treated the same way. If so, speak up, and let us unite and see if we cannot amend some of the grievances against the C.B.U.

DISGUSTED.

INTER-CLUB NEST FEATHER SHOWS.

SIR,—The breeding season has now commenced in earnest, and the various Cage Bird Societies are making arrangements for their young bird shows, the success of which depends on the results obtained in the breeding room. If these results have been satisfactory all well and good, but if otherwise, nest feather shows are disappointing both in numbers and quality, and in many cases shows have to be postponed or cancelled. As a remedy for this I would like to suggest that Societies should hold Inter-Club Shows with one or two of their neighbouring Societies, by which means the success of each venture is assured. The Inter-Club Nest Feather Shows which were held by the Potteries C.B.A. and Crewe O.S. last season, were most successful in every way, and I feel sure that if the idea was generally adopted by Cage Bird Societies it would prove most beneficial to all concerned. There are many advantages which will readily occur to those who give this their consideration. In the first place it would create an interest in young Bird Shows that has hitherto been lacking. Each Society would be sure of a good show. If a member has no birds ready for one show he may have for the other. There would be no more expense attached to the working of the show than if confined to the members of one Society, whilst the receipts would show a considerable increase, especially if a small sum was deducted from each entry fee towards expense. The public, too, would be more likely to visit a show of this description. And what fancier within a 10 mile radius is there who takes any interest in Cage Bird Shows but would try to visit a show held by, say, Manchester, Liverpool, Wolverhampton, Birmingham, or such Societies as are in close proximity?

EARLY YOUNG BIRDS.

SIR,—I have seen some young Robins flying about here (Road, near Bath) to-day which had just left the nest, and also a Hedge Sparrow's nest with four young in it, almost fledged. By the time this appears they will have left the nest if the cats leave them alone. They are close to a stream of water in a cosy yew tree. There is a Thrush's nest with four young (about 17 days old now) on the opposite side of the stream. I can stay and see the old birds feeding them. It is rather interesting to watch them. I hear there are also some Linnet Mules (about 16 days old), only their parents have been kept in a warm kitchen all the winter.

A LINNET AND GOLDFINCH PROBLEM.

SIR,—Seeing a letter in CAGE BIRDS on the feeding of Linnets and Goldfinches, and being a Linnet lover with seven birds all in the pink of health, I should like to write of my experience. Three years ago I started with Linnets, but they did not live long. They used to be all right for a time, and then they would sit moping. At first I thought they were bound up; anyhow I lost about 12 birds in less than a month. I got very much "downhearted," and gave up keeping them altogether. But I was eager to start again; and have been keeping them for about eight months. Now I thought I would try a new seed mixture of my own — no Canary seed whatever, as I think it dries them up. Since using the mixture of my own make I find they come on very well both in song and health. My mixture is as follows:—Two parts rape, one part cole, one part niger mixed. I wish CAGE BIRDS every further success.

A LONDON TOWN BIRD'S COUNTRY RAMBLE.

SIR,—I am perforce condemned to study bricks and mortar the greater part of the year. However, when I get a chance, I like a country ramble, and Easter falling late this year gave me my opportunity. On Good Friday (April 17th) I was one of a party who went to Boxhill, and I heard my first migrant this year—the Chiff Chaff, on the top of Boxhill. I may add that I do not know any other place so near London where one can see the Mistletoe growing strong, as near Burford Bridge Hotel—an ideal spot. On the Saturday following (April 18th) I took a "Metropolitan Railway walk" from Uxbridge to Denham, and I think there is no spot except Epping Forest where I find such a number and variety of birds. This is a short walk, taking my companion and myself barely an hour, sauntering leisurely. The place is ideal for birds, the walk being along the Colne Valley, wooded, sheltered, and well watered. We identified Swallows (one or two), a few Martins (House), two Chiff Chaffs, Reed Bunting, Wild Ducks (flying over us), Tufted Ducks (the last named probably partly domesticated), and we found a Hedge Sparrow's nest with three eggs in it, and saw the hen then on nest, but out of reach. One little Chiff Chaff was hopping about in a hedge by the side of the road, and singing (rather feebly) all the time. I thought of that little fellow on Easter Sunday, and later when the snow showers were passing over. We varied our observations by more than once taking note of some fine trout in the clear running water. On Easter Monday (April 20th) I took another "Metropolitan Railway walk"; this time from Chalfont Road, through Latimer, to or near Flaunden and back by Chenies, and there I found the following additional kinds worth noting: Dabchicks, Tree Creeper (one,) Coots, Magpies, a pair, with new nest, bower and all apparently complete (I did not go up, not being as young as I once was), Jay, Great Tit and Long Tailed Tit. I saw a young Thrush brancher. I also again saw numerous trout in the clear running Chess. In the rambles. I identified thirty-five kinds of birds.

MORE TROUBLE IN IRELAND.

SIR,—Having carefully studied the rules and bye laws of the Y.C.C. of Ireland, it seems to me that Mr. Devitt has been suspended illegally, as there is no record of any charge against him constituting an offence. Under these circumstances I shall withhold my coming subscription until this matter is settled, as I still consider Mr. Devitt to be the chairman of the Y.C.C. of I.

ONE IN THE COUNTRY.

SIR,—The report of the Y.C.C. of Ireland Meeting published the week before last is a conglomeration of misleading statements and untruths from beginning to end, and it is for this very reason I have been always at loggerheads with what I might term the "family-party" of the Committee.

Now, to deal with the letter complained of in CAGE BIRDS of March 7th. Here it is:—

SIR,—The report of committee meeting furnished you by the secretary, and published in CAGE BIRDS, February 29th, is decidedly misleading to the absent committee members and the general body of members, who carefully watch your journal to see what takes place at the club meetings, as same is the only notification they can get. The secretary reports receipt of 20s. from Mr. Barclay, J.P., but carefully omits to mention that in the same letter Mr. Barclay requested to have his name withdrawn as vice-president, and remain on as an ordinary member. Mr. Barclay is a far-seeing man, and I make no further comment at this stage. With regard to my resolution to separate the challenge cup points from the colour and non-colour fed classes instead of bulking them in the whole, this was to show where points were gained in such classes, where there was an ordinary amount of competition. The correct points are:—C. A. O'Reilly, 86; J. J. Cloke, 81; Sheridan and Fry, 28, for colour-fed classes. Messrs. Sheridan and Fry claim the cup by having nominated birds in the non-fed classes, and thus gained 86 points extra in classes where there was practically no competition. Members will see from this why there were so many non-colour-fed classes at the Irish shows for this season, some of the said classes having been guaranteed by the secretary personally, where the show secretaries could not see their way to grant non-colour-fed classes, and thus Messrs. Sheridan and Fry could keep up their points at these shows. Perhaps the cup next year will be gained for the third time in tail-fed classes.

RICHARD DEVITT, Chairman, Y.C.C. of I.

Now I am supposed to be suspended for three months for writing the above letter. They "declare such allegations to be untrue and without foundation." Really, I wish they were. I will now prove who is right, and how this intolerant family-party rule the club's affairs. Let the Secretary answer the following questions, which I take from my letter:

1.—Did not the Secretary omit to mention that Mr. Barclay requested to have his name withdrawn as Vice-President?

2.—Is not Mr. Barclay a far-seeing man?

3.—Are not the points correct?

4.—Were not two non-fed classes guaranteed personally by the Secretary at Belfast Show?

5.—Is not the Secretary of the Y.C.C. of Ireland a Committee-man of the Dublin Pigeon and Cage Bird Association, at which show several non-fed classes were given under the patronage of the Y.C.C., which is tantamount to a guarantee?

6.—I will send the Editor £5 for any Dublin Hospital if "allegations be untrue and without foundation." Will the "family-party" do the same?

If not trespassing too much on your space, Sir, kindly publish following letter sent by me, but which "they could not accept as bona-fide":—

RE ADJOURNED EXTRAORDINARY MEETING.

DEAR SIR,—

I faced the music at the previous meeting, which was such an absurd farce, that I do not see the utility of again attending this evening, except to hear, in extenso, the new song composed biennially by Messrs. Sheridan and Fry, entitled, "Halloa! Halloa! Halloa! What! a different chairman again?"

The inconsistency of the object of the meeting is appalling, viz., to consider my conduct for daring to bring truth to the surface. I defy anyone to contradict my letter except having accused the secretary of guaranteeing more shows than one, for non-colour classes. I regretted this, and do not withdraw one other single statement. Yet the flagrant conduct of Messrs. Sheridan and Fry in hectoring and badgering your chairman at the annual show is allowed to pass unnoticed. If their dignity in the bird world is wounded by the exposure of bald, truthful facts, they have the consolation of knowing that my self-respect is wounded in presiding at meetings in their presence.

I, therefore, sever absolutely my connection with the Y.C.C. of Ireland when the present club year is ended, and am notifying CAGE BIRDS of my resignation, so that members who pressed me to again stand will know my final decision.

Please have committee meeting convened as early as possible to wind up present year, and oblige,

Yours faithfully,

R. DEVITT.

W. C. Sholedice, Esq., Secretary, Y.C.C. of Ireland.

What a splendid opportunity they have lost of being rid of their second obnoxious chairman, and within such a short period. And what a strange coincidence!—the identical family party again squabbling. In playing with the rope to "suspend" me they have "hanged" themselves, and I will thrash the matter out at all costs. To wind up I state emphatically that I absolutely refused at the meeting to withdraw my letter of 7th March, or offer the slightest apology to the Secretary. I agreed to withdraw the word "shows" for "show," he guaranteed classes personally, and although Messrs. Sheridan and Fry did not nominate Cup Birds at non-fed classes at Belfast, it was because they had got a sufficient pull in hand at other non-fed classes previously to enable them to stand down and show in the colour-feds at Belfast. I could dwell further on this matter, but await replies to my six questions. RICHARD DEVITT.
Chairman Y.C.C. of Ireland.

SIR,—It was with considerable regret that I saw Mr. Devitt's letter in CAGE BIRDS announcing his resignation, and I hope he will reconsider his decision. So long as he fights the unfancier-like tactics of a certain clique who rule the roost at Dublin he can rest assured the great body of country members will give him their whole support. No doubt these people would like to "suspend" the chairman; they want him out of the way before the annual meeting, which usually takes place on or before the 17th March (by the way it would be interesting to know why it is delayed this year, as there are many sinister rumours abroad). The report of meetings recently held in Dublin require a pinch of salt, and before swallowing it I shall await Mr. Devitt's reply. I can hardly think that a meeting of 14 members could be so lacking in intelligence as to pass a resolution suspending the chairman when they have no power conferred by the rules to do so.

STRAIGHT 'UN (Dublin.)

A TALE OF WOE.

SIR,—As an enthusiastic reader of CAGE BIRDS I thought I would tell you my tale of woe. In my garden I erected a very large aviary in which I had stocked over 130 birds, British and Foreign and Canaries. Between the hours of 1 a.m. and 6 a.m. on a recent morning some person or persons broke into the aviary, and stole or let away 50 of the birds, which included all my best specimens which were beauties in my eyes, and the very acme of tameness—Bullfinches, Siskins, Chaffinches, Brown and Green Linnets, hen Canaries, Yellowhammers, Tree Pipits, Tree Sparrows, Bramblefinches, Redpolls, and three extra large red breasted Mealy Redpolls. When I went out to feed them at seven a.m. I nearly fainted when I saw the aviary door standing wide open and almost half the birds gone. Those that were left in would not come out—as I had had them for a few years, the homing instinct kept them in I suppose. I have also lost a hand-reared Mavis, three years old this spring, which I would not have taken £5 for. As a singer he was a champion, and charmed all the neighbourhood. My aviary and birds were a delight to a great many visitors and friends who came to see and hear them sing, also to watch me feeding them from the hand with mealworms, seeds, and titbits. They all knew their names, and came when they were called. You may imagine my grief at the loss I have sustained through losing the pets that had taken me so much into their confidence. I am not an exhibitor, although I had a good few show specimens. I kept them to enjoy seeing them fly about, and to give others enjoyment seeing them flying about.

A WORD OF ADVICE.

SIR,—I should feel obliged to you if you could publish a word of advice to your readers. I advertised in your last issue for a Linnet or Goldfinch. Result, answers from all over England. But unfortunately, many who replied, forgot to put their address, hence I was quite unable to reply. I may also state that one of the replies came from an old friend of mine living only three miles away, and whom I had been seeking for some time. I trust people who answer the advertisements in your valuable paper will in future take care to put in their address. Wishing CAGE BIRDS the prosperity it so richly deserves I remain,

A MULE AND HYBRID PROBLEM.

SIR,—Can any of your readers tell me if it is possible to breed young from a Hybrid and a Canary, seeing that the Hybrid is a cross between two British birds—for instance between a Goldfinch-Greenfinch cock or Lintie-Bullie cock, and a hen Canary? Seeing that the Mule has never been known to breed with a Canary, I was wondering if it has ever been recorded that breeding has taken place with a Hybrid. A Hybrid evidently can't be a Mule or a Mule a Hybrid, seeing that a Mule has a Canary for one of its parents. I remain a reader of your very useful paper, which is good value for the money.

THE FANCY IN BARNSLEY.

SIR,—I was surprised to see in your issue of April 11th, in "Under the White Rose," the announcement regarding the Barnsley and District Cage Bird Society. I think your informant is not one connected with the society, or he would have written quite differently. We are desirous of enrolling new members, but the announcement by "Straight 'Un" is not very encouraging to fanciers in the district, who wish to join us. We have now chosen the officers and committee for the year, and have a balance in hand of nearly £4, so you will see that the collapse which is spoken of, is far from correct. I myself think that the society is stronger and on a sounder footing to-day than it has been for the last four years.

A. GREEN, Treasurer.

It affords us pleasure to publish Mr. Green's letter, and even greater pleasure to learn that the Barnsley Society is to-day in a sound condition. We hope that bird-lovers in the neighbourhood will note our correspondent's remarks anent the enrolling of new members, and will at once send along their names to the secretary, Mr. E. Carlisle, Church Street, Gawber, Barnsley, thus helping to keep the Fancy flourishing in the district.—EDITOR.

A DULWICH AND PECKHAM MATTER.

SIR,—For downright effrontery, I think the letter in last week's CAGE BIRDS, signed "Tit Lark," suggesting that the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. should alter its name because a rival club has recently been formed in the district, "takes the biscuit." Seeing that the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. (which I am pleased to say is very much alive and flourishing) was first in the field by some four years, might I suggest that the newly-formed club should change its title to the Herne Tavern (Dulwich) O.S. This would, as "Tit Lark" appears to wish, prevent a lot of confusion in the Fancy, as it would sufficiently differentiate between the new society and the older organisation, known throughout the country as the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. Since "Tit Lark" adopted a nom-de-plume, I will subscribe myself, ANONYMOUS.

SIR,—I crave your indulgence to answer "Tit Lark." There will be no confusion between The D. and P.C.B.S. and The D.O.S. The fancy at large know very well which is which. I can assure "Tit Lark" that the original Society is now managed by business men, and that his reasons for altering the names of these Societies are too transparent. Surely it must be a sign of weakness; time quickly flies; it is not so very far to October and November. You say most of the D.O.S. are Dulwichites; then what are The D. and P.C.B.S.? They are pretty evenly spread over the whole of South London, and not one or two districts only; so what is in a name after all?

MEMBER OF THE D. AND P.C.B.S.

SIR,—Kindly allow me to thank your correspondent, "Tit Lark," for his advice that the Dulwich and Peckham Cage Bird Society should change its name. I feel so pleased he does not wish to dictate in any way; but what a pity it is he has to sail under a nom-de-plume himself, after suggesting we should alter our name to what he thinks is our proper name. I can tell him he is all at sea when he writes: "We have only three members who reside in Dulwich." We have nearly as many members in Dulwich as ever we had, and we have quite as many officials residing in Dulwich (including our worthy secretary, and assistant secretary) as we have in Peckham, and our headquarters are in the electoral area of Dulwich. If the Dulwich O.S. is in Dulwich, why do they call their headquarters "The Herne, Peckham Rye"? Looking down their list of officials, I find it is false when "Tit Lark" states they mostly reside in Dulwich. When the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. was formed in February, 1904, it was given the above name, and will still hold that name, although some of its late officials have cleared out to start another club on our doorstep. If "Tit Lark" is the person I think he is, he will not answer this, but if he is really ignorant of why there are two societies, a few of we old ones, who have served on several committees, can tell him. One who is not afraid of his name.

W. J. CRANFIELD.

SIR,—In reply to "Tit Lark's" impudent note of last week anent the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., it would be well for members of the fancy generally not to allow dust to be thrown in their eyes. The bidding of "Tit Lark" to alter the name of the D. and P.C.B.S. is ridiculous, and his remarks also about the new headquarters are very misleading. The new home is centrally situated, absolutely on the border-line of the two districts, Dulwich and Peckham, and the members coming from these places are about equally divided. The old headquarters, though very convenient for regular habitues living in close proximity, were far too inaccessible generally, being situated close to Forest Hill Cemetery. The assertion that the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. has "left" Dulwich is, therefore, untrue, and statements made to discredit it should be taken at their proper worth.

EAST DULWICH RESIDENT.

[Correspondents must please confine their remarks to the point at issue, and steer clear of personalities. From some of the above letters, we have had to delete remarks concerning the last D. and P. C.B.S. open show, a matter which has already been ventilated, and "closured" in our columns.—EDITOR.]

A NEW SOCIETY FOR DUNS AND DISTRICT, BERWICKSHIRE.

SIR,—A cage bird society has just been formed in Duns, Berwickshire. There are a number of fanciers in the town and district, and the object of the society is to promote friendly rivalry and to further extend the interest in the breeding and rearing of all classes of cage birds. The society will hold its inaugural show on Wednesday, 4th November, 1908. Competition is confined to a radius of 16 miles, which includes the towns of Berwick-on-Tweed, and Kelso. The society is to be known as the Duns and District C.B.S.

AGE AND COLOUR CHANGES OF THE BULLFINCH.

SIR,—I have read with great interest the account in your valuable paper of a Bullfinch changing colour. Having at the present time a Bullfinch which has turned almost black after moulting very badly last year, I though it would be of interest to your many readers if I communicated the fact to them. About a month ago he began to moult again, and I did not think he would live. But he has now recovered, although still has a very bad colour.

M. B. PIGOT.

SIR,—Being a passionate lover of Bullfinches, and having closely watched their habits in my bird-room, I have read with great interest the letter of G. H. Morton, in CAGE BIRDS, of April 11th. I would like to mention the change of colour in a Bullfinch which came into my possession about three years ago. The bird was originally a fine handsome cock bird, 2nd prize winner at Worthing show in that year, and I bought him for a lady. After some months she brought him to me, the bird suffering from acute indigestion and diarrhœa. Good, wholesome food cured the former complaint, and the usual chalk and brandy mixture the latter; but the handsome bird had become nearly black with an under tint of red on the breast, and the white rump feathers were quite black so that it was hard to recognise the original bird. As his health improved, the shine on his plumage increased, until he was in lovely condition, and very tame. We called him "Smutty" on account of his blackness. He moulted during his stay with us, and developed two white feathers in each wing. At the end of 13 weeks he seemed perfectly well, and was in full song, so that I felt bound to return him to his former owner. She brought him back to me, after two days, saying that he was fretting for his former companion, Old Charlie Pippin, an aged Russian cock Bullfinch. Certainly his diarrhœa had returned and he seemed queer, so she gave him to me. Directly I put him back in the cage with Old Charlie, the two birds kissed each other and seemed happy, and "Smutty" flourished amazingly till I sent him to Peckham show, where he was "wrong classed," took a chill and died soon after his return. The food I gave him was Canary, German rape, white sunflower seeds with green food, and I imagine his age was about three years.

MRS. M. B. PARTRIDGE.

ROLLER CANARIES AT THE PALACE SHOW.

SIR,—Seeing that Mr. Whittaker still persists in doubting Mr. Norris's word to the effect that several members were quite willing to accept his challenge, I think it only fair and just to Mr. Norris to state I was one of the members who was quite willing to accept his (Mr. Whittaker's) challenge. But Mr. Norris preferred that the challenge should be accepted by a member in Mr. Whittaker's own district. CHARLES ROEHL.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Parr's letter, my remarks were not intended to give offence to the buyers of the birds; but knowing Mr. Whittaker's views that members should keep their best birds and breed from them, it seemed surprising that he should have sold these two birds. The only harm I wish Mr. Whittaker is that the novices may beat him during the next show season.

J. W. NORRIS.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Whittaker's letter of last week, I am enclosing you my deposit of £5, and also the letters that I received from the member who accepted the challenge, and shall be pleased if you will consent to act as referee. J. W. NORRIS.

[After reading Mr. Whittaker's letter, in which he accepted Mr. Norris's challenge, and nominated us as referee, we felt that it would not be fair to Mr. Norris to prevent him from nominating a joint arbitrator, if he so desired, and we wrote him to that effect, informing him at the same time that we should require a letter from both parties agreeing to abide by whatever decision the joint arbitrators arrived at, without any appeal at law. This we felt would the more effectively close a dispute which cannot but be detrimental to the best interests of the Roller Canary. Mr. Norris has expressed his willingness to abide by whatever decision the joint arbitrators should arrive at, and nominates Mr. J. Robson to act with us. We are quite willing that Mr. Robson should act as arbitrator with ourselves subject, of course, to his own acceptance. We have also communicated with Mr. Whittaker to a similar effect, and await his reply, which will be published in our next issue.—EDITOR, CAGE BIRDS.]

AN EGG-LAYING FREAK; WHAT NEXT?

SIR,—I have had a remarkable occurrence of egg laying on the part of a Norwich hen, of which your readers perhaps would like to hear. On April 5th I put a Yorkshire cock with an odd Norwich hen. They paired, and she built a good nest. On the evening of the 13th I noticed the hen was very queer, and was constantly laying on the perch; but I let things remain until the 14th, when I looked in the nest at 6 a.m. She had not laid, but was on the floor of the breeding cage. When I came home to breakfast at 8 a.m. I looked again, and to my surprise I found a double egg—two distinct eggs in fact, one smaller than the other, but joined together. As I picked the eggs out of the nest they parted. The larger egg was left intact, but for a piece of skin where they were joined; but it broke the skin where the smaller egg was joined. I have saved the eggs so that if any of your interested readers would like to see them I would show them willingly. I may say that at the time of writing the hen is very queer.

A Homing Sparrow.

My father had in his garden aviary a very mischievous House Sparrow; so he said he would let it go. We went for a walk (about half a mile), and took the bird with us and let it go. But when we arrived home the bird was there trying to get in the aviary, so we caught it, and put it in again, and next day we took it further away, but it came back again. We took it many times, but it always came back again.—Sent by F. A. Hibbert (age 9), Hawley's Row, Apperknowl, Unstone, Sheffield.

*Canary up a Chimney.

A friend of ours once had a Canary, which she bought off my father. It used to hop about the house. One day she missed the bird, it having flown up the chimney. Soon after a neighbour tapped at the door, and said there was a bird on the house-top. Our friend put the cage outside, and the bird, seeing its own cage, flew back again; but I am sorry to say that instead of the little bird being of its natural colour, it was like a chimney sweep. Our friend was much surprised, however, and thought herself lucky to get the little Canary back again.—Sent by Lena Bratherton (age 11), 63a, Gladstone Road, Edge Hill, Liverpool.

The Cute Starling.

An old huntsman named Maurice had a Starling, which he had taught to say a few words, and when he came into the room he used to say, "Starling, where are you?" The Starling would answer, "Here I am." Now, Maurice had a little neighbour who was very fond of the bird, and used often to come and see it. One day when he came to pay his usual visit, old Maurice was not in the room, and the boy was seized with a sudden temptation, for he always wished for such a bird for his own. He took the Starling and put it in his pocket, but just as he was going away the owner opened the door. He cried out as usual, "Starling, where are you?" and the bird in the boy's pocket answered, "Here I am."—Sent by Eva Hall, age 14 years, 15, Holyoake Terrace, Long Buckby, Northants.

*Sparrow versus Dragon Fly.

A very large green and black dragon-fly was flying up the street pursued by a Sparrow. The Sparrow would make a dart at the dragon-fly, but before he could get near enough to strike with his beak the fly would give a quick flit with its wings, and turn either to right or left, and before the Sparrow could turn again, would be sailing serenely up the street. This happened several times, till, I suppose, the Sparrow tired of the chase flew to the other side of the street and settled in the gutter. No sooner had he settled than the dragon-fly turned and headed straight at the Sparrow, who flew off in fright. The fly pursued him a little distance, and turned back, and idly flew up and down the street. The fly seemed to know the Sparrow could not catch him, and to show its utter contempt drove him away.—Sent by Master Albert Hutton (age 13), 49, Church Street, Sheffield.

How to meet Breeders' Difficulties.

At the meeting held at headquarters on April 14th the chief item on the agenda was a lecture by Mr. F. J. Weaver, on "Bird Breeders' Difficulties and How to Surmount them." Mr. Weaver delivered himself well on the subject, speaking for quite an hour. He spoke of the difficulties met with when first mating up the birds. He said it was a good plan to let the pairs you intend running together make each other's acquaintance before letting them run together; by doing so the Fancier would avoid a lot of trouble, and perhaps save the life of a good bird. If the birds are in good condition there ought to be eggs in eight days. He did not, he said, approve of using late-bred hens for the first round, for it was these hens that very often went wrong. When the hens are sitting, it is a good plan to give them a little extra food, about three times a week, as he thought Canary seed hardly stimulating enough for the early season, especially if the cock had been removed. He said that the young often go wrong when about seven days old, the hen refusing to feed; this was often caused through the hen being over-anxious, and by eating the excreta from the young for too long a period, thus causing her to give up feeding. When this occurred a good plan was to hand-feed the young, and to give the hen the last thing at night a little cooling medicine; by changing her food next morning and giving a little soaked rape she would often start feeding again. When the young are about three weeks old they will leave the nest, and to save them from being plucked it is best to put them into a nursery cage, or if your breeding cage is a double one put in the wire slide. Another difficulty will often arise when the young are removed from their parents, to do for themselves; it is not wise to give them, as many Fanciers do, solely egg food. This is the cause of so many dying between the ages of four and six weeks; they would find it a good plan to give, in addition to the egg food, crushed seed (hemp and Canary) in a separate pot, and not forget a little soaked rape. Even when they can crack the seed continue giving them a little egg food each day until they have finished moulting. Mr. Weaver said that under this treatment he had lost very few young. Young birds, he continued, often go wrong through drinking too much; a few drops of tincture of gentian in the water would prevent this, and do them good.—Mr. A. Wellings, of Prescot, being on a visit in the town, looked in, and received a very hearty welcome.—A vote of thanks to Mr. Weaver brought a very interesting evening to a close.—F. HOWES, Sec.

A Lecture before the City and Suburban A.C.B. on April 13th.

"Threefold the stride of time, from first to last,
Loitering slow the future creepeth,
Arrow-swift the present sweepeth,
And motionless for ever stands the past." —Schiller.

It is now just over 9 years since I read this paper before the members of the N.B.B. and M.C., and I have pleasant memories of the kindly way in which it was received. It was also the means of my making one or two close friends, whose friendship I highly prize. Nine years ago! It seems but yesterday. It is my wish this evening to interest and amuse you, and if I travel outside the sunny shire for illustration or anecdote, I shall rely upon your forbearance.

In claiming your attention, I may mention that what I have written is the outcome of 30 years' observation and experience. As the description North Hants is somewhat vague, I will ask you to take the town of Basingstoke as our centre, and follow me in my ramblings within a ten-mile radius. It is a splendid country, hilly and densely wooded with parks of immense size, woods, copses, cornfields, surrounded by high hedges, water meadows, thickly studded with thorn bushes, swamps; abounding in reeds, rushes, and other water herbage—these all afford the ornithologist, and many other "ologists" a splendid field of study.

Some Birds of the Sunny Shire.

The species of British Birds, their nests, and eggs, I have personally met with in the vicinity are as follows:—Barn Owl, Kestral, Sparrow-Hawk, Crow, Rook Magpie, Jackdaw, Pheasant, Partridge, Red-legged Partridge, Jay, Turtle Dove, Wood Pigeon, Blackbird, Thrush, Missel Thrush, Starling, Lark, Coot, Moorhen, Little Grebe or Dabchick, Wild Duck, Pied Wagtail, Bullfinch, Goldfinch, Chaffinch, Greenfinch, Linnet, Wren, Wood Wren, Golden Crested Wren, Great Tit, Blue Tit, Longtailed Tit, Robin, Kingfisher, Hedge-Sparrow, House-Sparrow, Yellow Hammer, Nightingale, Night-Jar, or Goatsucker, Lapwing or Peewit, Sedge Warbler, Hawfinch, Swallow, Switt, Red-backed Strike, Greater White-throat, Lesser White-throat, and Spotted Flycatcher.

The foregoing are species the nests and eggs of which, in most instances, have frequently come under my notice; it is to my regret that in the years when I had ample time for observation, I contented myself with finding the nests, and annexing part of the contents to add to my collection, instead of studying the birds themselves, and their habits, more closely than I did.

I will just mention a few birds that are to be met with in the same locality, but as their nests, or nesting places have hitherto escaped me, I shall pass them with slight notice, hoping they will be brought to the front in discussion. First the Long-eared Owl (a pair of which, that had been snared, were a few years ago presented to my father, who kept them but a short time, in a large outdoor aviary, but as they seemed to pine, he restored to them their liberty); Tawny Owl, Greater Spotted Woodpecker, Green Woodpecker, locally called the Yaffle, Tree Creeper, Common or Corn Bunting, Redstart, Nuthatch, Wryneck, Corn Crake, Reed Warbler, Garden Warbler, Blackcap, Snipe, Yellow Wagtail, Sand Martin, Tree Pipit, Meadow Pipit, Whinchat, or Furzechat. This, gentlemen, completes my list. I have no doubt there are many birds I have missed, but as I will describe the districts in which I have met the birds and their nests, and when they are enumerated, any member so inclined can make search for those I have omitted to mention.

Coots, Dabchicks and Kingfishers.

I would call your special attention to three birds in the above list, viz.: Coot, Lesser Grebe or Dabchick, and Kingfisher, for this reason: Mr. Norman Gilroy, known to most of you as a most ardent naturalist, wrote me saying that he was desirous of obtaining a clutch of eggs of each of these species. In reply I invited him to come and spend an evening with me. The invitation was accepted, and one winter night we met; it was a meeting of congenial spirits, and it lasted into the small hours. The birds, their habits, nests, and eggs, were discussed, and anecdote followed anecdote of strange adventure by field and flood. We parted after mutually agreeing to meet at Basingstoke one fine day in the early summer of the following year, the date to be fixed later. It was also agreed that I was to find him a clutch of eggs of each of the three species before mentioned. How I redeemed my promise, and the adventures of the day were duly related in an article I wrote in 1902 entitled "Twixt Saturday and Monday."

On a Voyage of Discovery.

At this point I will ask the meeting to accompany me in fancy through my two favourite and most frequented routes, promising to show my hearers most of the varieties mentioned by the way. I must here mention that it would only be possible in imagination to find them all in a single day, as it would take many days to explore the ground described, and in reality, I am sure you would not expect to meet with the migrating birds or their nests on the same early day in spring on which you find the nests and eggs of Rooks, Crows, Magpies or Jackdaws.

We are soon clear of the ancient and historic, and somewhat sleepy town of Basingstoke (referred to in the Doomsday book as Basingtoches), and in a very few minutes we commence operations by discovering the nest of a Hedge-Sparrow by the roadside, containing three or four of the well-known pretty, blue eggs. The nests of a Blackbird, a Thrush, and a Linnet are found in quick succession.

But let us get along; in front of us stands one of the gates of Hackwood Park, Lord Bolton's beautiful estate. Once inside the fun commences in earnest. A Wren's nest, with five white, pink-spotted eggs, is seen in the ivy on the wall, and a Missel Thrush in the thorn tree, which it is impossible to miss seeing, it is so conspicuous; the eggs are of greeny white, thickly spotted with white, four or five in number. There are several Rookeries, so we will select one among the firs; it will be a fairly easy climb; on reaching the nearest nest, the climber will four or five (I have found six) eggs of greenish shade, more or less mottled.

Kingfisher's Ways.

The beautiful Kingfisher is a bird of fixed habit. Wherever he has been seen upon one day, he can invariably be found the next, at about the same hour. When disturbed he flies off in the same direction, up or down stream, as he did the last time one saw him. To a casual observer he appears to wander aimlessly about, but it is possible by close observation to predict beforehand where he may be found at almost any time. They do not always build in the bank of the stream, but may choose a spot some distance away. I once knew of a nest in a sawpit, a quarter of a mile from their fishing ground.

Foreign Birds in an Aviary.

By T. JONES.

The keeping of foreign birds is to my mind one of the most interesting and instructive hobbies that any one can wish for. It is not necessarily a rich man's hobby, because after the first outlay in building an aviary, one can add to his collection bit by bit. To be successful, however, one must be prepared to make a study of the habits of foreign birds, and their food, and he must know the best conditions under which to keep them. One must be observant, but at the same time take in a paper like CAGE BIRDS, which is devoted to the bird fancy, and read the experiences of men who have given a large part of their life to the keeping, showing, and breeding of birds.

Some Personal Experiences.

My experience only dates back for a matter of three years; until that time I had never had a bird. The idea of keeping foreign birds came into my mind by my seeing a stall in our market place one day with different kinds of foreign birds exposed for sale. I was so struck with their tameness and their beauty of plumage that I at once made up my mind to go in for a few, and having a place where I used to keep a dog, but which was now unoccupied, I set to work to alter it into an aviary, about 7ft. long.

But so interested did I become, that, stimulated as I was with the fair amount of success which came my way, I added from time to time until now my aviary is 30 ft. long. The covered-in shed, which was the last extension to be made, has a window in, and is 8ft. long.

Now a word about the construction; it is a lean-to aviary, built against a wall, and is 30ft. long, 5ft. wide., and 6ft. 6ins. high. The weatherboards and the shed are built of fish-box lids, which are strong and cheap—one half-penny each I paid for mine. Of course, after my experience, if I had to build another, I could certainly improve on the looks of the present one, although for comfort, so far as the inmates are concerned, I do not think there is anything lacking. The aviary is divided across the middle by a wire netting partition, and there is a shed at each end with an entrance door. I have a creeper growing in the flight against the wall, and there is also a good supply of trees for perching on.

In each part I have made a bath in the floor, 2ft. by 1ft., and this is raised above the level of the floor upon bricks which have been cemented round. A waste pipe is connected from the bottom of the bath to the outside of the aviary, and by simply pulling a rock out of the bath the water runs ways, and some clean can be put in. I find nothing is so conducive to good health and fine plumage in birds as always having a plentiful supply of water.

A Few Hardy Aviary Inmates.

When I first started I kept Budgerigars and small Finches together, but I found that the Budgerigars, when settling down to breed, were rather savage, and actually killed a few small Finches. In the part to the right I now keep Budgerigars, Cockatiels, Grey and White Javas, Love Birds, and four different kinds of Weavers. I have bred any amount of Green and Yellow Budgerigars without the slightest trouble. I had eggs from one pair last Christmas, when the snow was on the ground, and every one came off, and I now have some fine healthy birds. They can stand any amount of cold, if they have plenty of room, and my experience proves that these birds do better and are much healthier than those which are kept in verandahs and bird-rooms.

In the lower part of the aviary I have Zebra Finches, Spice Birds, Ribbon Finches, Fire Finches, Mannikins, Grey and Green Singing Finches, Orange Cheeks, Zebra Waxbills, Cordon Bleus, Pekin Robins, English Robins, Saffron Finches, Nonpariels, and some Goldfinches. These have all wintered outside without any artificial heat whatever, and all are in the best of health. They have a nice snug retiring place, with plenty of cocoanut husks, boxes, and branches, together with plenty of hay. I have bred Zebra Finches, Ribbon Finches, and Spice Birds, and have had eggs from some of the others.

My staple food is Canary and white millet, but I believe in variety; I supply nearly all kinds of birds' seed, as well as some soft-food. I go round the garden every day with a nice soft brush and saucer, and brush all the green fly I can see into the saucer. These I give to my birds. I also give caterpillars and mealworms. I find it pays to breed Budgerigars; these help to keep the other birds that do not breed. All the birds I have mentioned will be found quite hardy. They make a nice, cheap selection, so that anyone who can afford a hobby at all can manage it.

In conclusion, just a word about buying your stock. Be careful! Some of the dealers are gentlemen, but some are not. The best way is to get a recommendation from someone who keeps Foreign birds, and who has therefore paid for his experience, and who as a rule will be only too pleased to put anyone who is just starting, on the right lines.

FANCIERS' FESTIVITIES.

Manningham C.B.A.

The annual tea and social was held at headquarters, "Mowbray Arms," Manningham, on April 11th, when upwards of 40 members and their wives sat down to an excellent tea. A splendid repast was provided by our worthy hostess, Mrs. J. Newton, and after full justice had been done to the spread, a most enjoyable evening was spent. The president, Mr. E. Kemp (in the chair) mentioned the objects of the society. He stated that competition had been very keen throughout the shows, and hoped it would be the same next season. He also put in a word for the members' wives, who, he knew, did a good amount of work during breeding time in helping their husbands in their hobby. He then made the presentation of cup and specials to the following gentlemen:—1st, A. Grange, 71 points; 2nd, Kemp, 70; 3rd (reserved for novices only), H. Grange, 64; 4th, Halliday and Armstrong, 64; 5th, Holroyd Bros., 62; 6th, Suggitt, 59; 7th, Varley, 46. After the distribution of prizes, the following contributed to the evening's enjoyment: Miss Gray, Messrs. Coulson, Metcalfe, Joyce, Western, Wellock, Price, Dennison, and Edmondson, and their services were much appreciated. A vote of thanks to the artistes, the host and hostess, and the chairman brought to a close one of the most enjoyable evenings ever spent in the history of the society.—F. WESTERN, secretary.

Too Forward in Condition.

The only practical remedy for this state of things lies in prevention. Cure is always a disappointing and unsatisfactory task. To prevent it the diet should be regulated to suit the conditions from the time incubation commences. The period of incubation is the most important point of all, and is doubtless the time when the real mischief is done. Instead of being allowed a full and generous diet, as they were from the time of being mated until nesting was completed, as is very often the case, they should be fed much more plainly. Both birds are usually quiet and inactive, and consequently do not require a rich diet. Egg-food should be cut off to not more than a teaspoonful for a pair of birds twice a week. Inga, hemp, and similar seeds should be totally dropped off, and the diet consist of a staple of Canary seed only, with a pinch of rape per bird daily, and a very small spray of chickweed, watercress, or groundsel tops daily. Dandelion I prefer to discard altogether for all birds in ordinary circumstances from the time when they first begin nesting, and lettuce I should always try to keep in reserve as a special inducement for the hens to feed if they show signs of slackening when the young are from three to five days old.

But whatever green-food is given, let it be in the very smallest quantities, so that the hens are not tempted to stay off the nest too long. If it is preferred, one may give as a staple a mixture of three parts Canary to one part summer rape, instead of giving the rape separately each day. The only objection to this plan is that it often occasions much waste, as some birds will deliberately throw out the Canary in order to get at the rape.

After Incubation.

To follow up the sequence, we may suppose the hen has reached the twelfth day of incubation. With the second and third broods the normal temperature is usually decidedly higher than when the first round of eggs was being hatched, and this may—it often will—be the eve of hatching, as the eggs will often hatch out on the afternoon of the thirteenth day. But the first broods will rarely hatch before the fourteenth day from the time incubation begins. There is also at this season more moisture in the air generally, so that the question of moisture to help the eggs to hatch properly is of practically no importance with the first round of eggs. Still, if the weather is nice and mild, a bath may be hung on for a few minutes on the twelfth day, and again on the following day. On the morning of the thirteenth day a teaspoonful of crushed biscuit or crumbs of stale sponge cake may be given and in the afternoon one may listen when near the cage for the faint "chip-chip" which soon betrays the advent of healthy young birds. Do not get impatient and drive the hen from the nest to gratify your curiosity. If you do don't blame the hen if she develops all manners of contrariness in a few days and make a terrible hash of the whole business. It may be simply the penalty you have to pay for your unwarrantable interference. As long as the hen appears to be going on all right and carefully attending to her duties, restrain your curiosity and leave her severely alone.

A Welcome Sound.

Should you catch the welcome "chip-chip" sound, you may take away the remains of the biscuit, and give a very small quantity of pure yolk of egg without any biscuit or bread crumb at all. Before retiring at night, throw out any of this egg that may be left, and give about as much more fresh as the birds will consume before breakfast-time next morning. After that you will begin to add bread crumbs or powdered biscuit to the egg by slow and easy degrees, until the young are four days old, by which time the egg-food should consist of two parts of bread or biscuit to one part of egg. A few days later, when hemp and rape are being provided more liberally, the proportion of egg may be still further reduced to about one-fourth part of the bulk. This food will be quite rich enough then to raise good robust, well-grown birds, and yet not too rich for the good of the hens.

But if the young should not be heard on the thirteenth day, then do not interfere with them at all that day. Next morning give a little pure yolk of egg as already stated in readiness for the birds as soon as they require it. Do not overdo it; the tiniest morsel is sufficient for the first few hours, and you do not want to give enough to last all day. A half-teaspoonful about breakfast-time, and another similar quantity in the afternoon will be sufficient. Last thing at night clean out the egg-drawer and give a half-teaspoonful of fresh egg-food with a small proportion of bread or biscuit mixed with it, and then go on as already described.

Treatment of Hens with Young.

Apart from all consideration of sweating which we have just been considering, it is necessary to treat hens with young with discretion. There is nothing so useful as a personal knowledge of the hens' peculiarities and individualities. It naturally follows, therefore, that one may, in a general way, expect to find the greatest measure of success with hens—or rather, I should say, with birds, for the same remarks apply to an appreciable extent to cocks as well as hens—of their own strain or breeding. When the birds are kept under proper and skilful management such knowledge is, of course, only essential for dealing with exceptional cases, but in the hands of the tyro, the exceptionally difficult cases of the expert are too apt to become quite common and ordinary ones.

One of the most apt to arise is in the relation of the hen towards her chicks. She may not be a sweater, nor a bad feeder, but in many cases she will begin to want to go to nest again long before the young are ready to leave the nest. If the cock is with her, and he happens to be of a vigorous nature, the nestlings may have a poor time of it. Even if they get fairly well fed by the parents the continual excitement of the operation of the old birds generally end in the young being neglected, or accidentally, or even maliciously, thrown out of the nest. In some cases this may be easily prevented by removing the cock when the hen begins to sit, and leave her to sit and rear the young by herself. But then there are many hens who will positively refuse to go on sitting when the cock is removed. Then, of course, there is nothing for it but to leave them together, and endeavour by other means to overcome the difficulty.

Second and later Broods.

As already remarked when these broods are about hatching, the weather is altogether warmer and dryer and it is with these broods that troubles may arise in the process of hatching from lack of moisture. It is, therefore, all the more necessary to supply the hens with a bath about the twelfth day, and allow them to bathe freely if they desire, as the moisture which they carry back to the nest in their feathers is of good service in helping the eggs to hatch out easily. In exceptionally warm, dry weather the bath may be hung on the twelfth day and allowed to remain in position during the greater portion of that and the following days. Beyond this provision of extra moisture in this form, and dipping the eggs for a few seconds in luke-warm water if they are late in hatching, I do not think it necessary to interfere at all. There may be exceptionally clever men with super-human fingers and delicacy of touch who may assist the hatching of birds' eggs, or the birth of the eggs by kneading and putting on pressure on the abdomen, but I believe it is safe to say that for every one such case that is successfully treated there are dozens of cases in which hens are mauled and cruelly treated for no good purpose at all. And so it is with assisting eggs to hatch. Now and again on rare occasions the average man may be "in luck" and surprise himself at the result of the seeming dexterity which may after all be accounted for by the fact that nature herself was just ready to perform the task he was essaying to assist, but in an overwhelming majority of cases the results are a signal failure and end disastrously for the eggs by placing them quite beyond the pale of all future hope.

Cure for Hens Plucking Young.

The usual remedies for this distressing trouble are usually so futile that any suggested remedy which is feasible in every case and harmless in other directions must be welcomed by the breeder who has had the misfortune to be troubled with it. All one's skill and efforts to forestall the evil designs of a determined feather plucker are so useless as a rule that it must come as a relief to many breeders to hear that this remedy which has been given to me by a breeder of former years was found by him to be an effectual one. It consists simply of providing the hen with a tiny scrap of raw lean meat, fresh daily, and at the commencement of the plucking, also very slightly smearing the young with vaseline. The latter, of course, must be done very slightly so as not to saturate the young birds' feathers—or what they have left of them—or make them into a sticky mess.

I have not yet had an opportunity to put the remedy to a test, but as it is said to have worked well in my informant's case, I give it for the consideration of all who have the trouble to contend with. In some respects the remedy commends itself to me, and its general success and utility would go far to prove the correctness of my suspicions that this feather plucking and eating is merely the outcome of the hen's natural craving for some kind of insect food, which at this season forms an integral part of the food of the Finch tribe in a state of nature. Having this suspicion, I should also feel inclined to take any opportunity of trying the effect of giving two or three mealworms a day, or more if they appeared to be the "one thing needful." At ordinary times Canaries who have had access to those larvæ are exceptionally fond of them

"Woodland Bird Milk."

This preparation is made up in Powder form and will keep at least six months if kept in a cool, dry place. It contains more nourishment in the same compass, than any other food on the market.

PRESTON ORNITHOLOGICAL SOCIETY. October 18th, 1907.

This is to certify that the members of the Preston Ornithological Society have this year during the breeding season, and time of moulting, used upwards of 100 lbs. of your Bird Milk (Woodland Brand) in the soft food of their cage birds, and feel more than satisfied that it is the most suitable ingredient to mix with their soft food. This year our birds are larger, stronger and possess more vigour than ever before.

Signed on behalf of members. W. Haworth, Chairman; W. Lewis, Vice-Chairman; J. P. Leeming, Treasurer; J. W. Cleminson, Hon. Sec.; J. T. Swarbrick, Assist. Hon. Sec.

Broughton, Preston. Dear Sirs, I have much pleasure in writing you that the birds I won with in the Yorkshire section at the Crystal Palace Show, 1908, were fed with bread colour feed, and your Woodland Bird Milk. I used no eggs in my bird room all last season.

I am of opinion that one box containing 1 lb. is equal to 60 eggs; and this is the opinion of my friends in the Fancy. C. Blackhurst, M.R.C.V.S.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

The Spring Migration.

Many birds use our land as a feeding place upon the journey, and afterwards continue to northern Europe. Even the swift-winged Swallows do not all stay; they are chiefly birds of passage, and only a small proportion of them stay with us, the remainder passing on to the north-western part of Europe. The lively Swift goes a long way south to pass the winter months, even as far as the Cape and Madagascar, so that its spring journey is a long one, and it passes many lands before settling down for the summer under the roof of some old country cottage. This journey is probably accomplished by stages, and is possibly a small feat for so strong-winged a bird. The journey is easy when compared with that performed by some of the most delicate Warblers which winter in India, crossing during the journey two deserts, each quite too hundred miles wide, and the lofty Himalaya mountains. Some of the passes by which they cross are as much as 18,000 feet above the level of the sea. The beautiful little Snow Buntings, which yearly winter in Yorkshire, fly off to the north for a brief breeding season, and may during the journey cross even the North Pole. The tiny Golden-crested Wren passes over the wild North Sea to the pine forest of Scandinavia. Probably the greatest traveller among the feathered creation is the Curlew-Sandpiper. It breeds at the mouth of Yenesei river, along the arctic coast of Asiatic Siberia. The bird is frequently found in Patagonia, to reach which it must travel something like 14,000 miles, which it either accomplishes via Australia and New Zealand, or Northern Europe, Great Britain, and the West Coast of Africa.

Goldfinches in the West.

It is said that the Goldfinch is fairly common in some parts of North Devon, although at one time somewhat rare in the country.

Precocious Thrushes.

A young, fully-fledged Thrush has been seen at Woodwaisterne, in Surrey. His parents must have commenced housekeeping some time in February.

The Commonest Finch.

After the Sparrow, the Greenfinch is looked upon as the commonest Finch, but considering how rapidly the Linnet has increased within the last few years, it is doubtful if the greenbird can still hold the premier position.

Scarcity of Magpies.

There is every reason to think that the Magpie, one of the largest and most beautiful birds of the woodlands, is gradually getting more rare. When on the wing he is such a conspicuous object that he is easily brought down by a shot-gun. His nest is generally placed in some exposed position and rarely escapes detection. It is to be regretted that some of our big landowners do not give instruction to their keepers to spare a few of these interesting birds.

March Nests.

In the Ramsey (Hants) district a lot of nests were, as usual, found at the beginning of the month of March; nearly made nests of the Thrushes, Blackbirds, and Hedge Sparrows, also Wrens, but no eggs were found until the 16th, when there were about 7 or 8 clutches of Thrushes. On the 21st a nest of young Thrushes was found. Several nests of the Little Owl were seen with from one to three eggs in; also a Long Eared Owl's nest with eggs in. The Cuckoo was supposed to have been heard on the 16th of March, by several, but it afterwards turned out to be a Cuckoo clock. The Wheatear has been more numerous this month than for years, and was seen earlier. In the fens plenty of Plover's eggs have been taken; near the Wash they are strictly preserved.—T.H.K.

Edible Birds' Nests.

In Malay and the Phillipine Islands there are several species of Swifts that build in the caves and overhanging cliffs by the sea. These birds' nests are collected and exported to China to be used as food. Fresh ones fetch a high price, but old ones, or those which have been used to rear young birds in, considerably less. It is said that as food they are almost tasteless, but are made palatable by rich flavouring; they are supposed to be nutritious and stimulating. These nests are somewhat transparent, resembling fibrous isinglass; at one time it was thought they were composed of some peculiar sea weed found only upon these coasts, but we now know they are constructed of a secretion from the glands of the mouth of the bird. The Chinaman generally acts in quite an opposite way to ourselves, so there is nothing strange in his eating a bird's nest for in some cases he eats the [illegible] tain birds, throwing away the body whereas we eat the body and throw away the nest not

Books every Bird Keeper and Breeder must have.

By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to-date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

House's Canary Manual — Post free, 1/2

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the [illegible].

Cage Birds 1908 Annual — post free, 7d.

The Standard Guide to the Cage Bird Hobby is a title bestowed upon the ANNUAL years ago. And the 1908 edition merits it more than any previous volume. Revised and brought up-to-date from cover to cover, with a lovely coloured plate and many full-page art illustrations, and crammed with valuable articles and unique and helpful features, it is the finest value for money ever offered lovers of birds. Canary, British, Hybrid and Foreign bird enthusiasts alike will find it a Complete Guide to the Fancy.

The Stock Book (Our Invaluable "Breeding Room Register.") — post free, 7d.

A well-known fancier has said of it:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." This book is one no breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred—keep account of their strong and weak points. It contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages, and many invaluable "Hints for Emergencies."

ALWAYS USE OUR

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

PREPAID ADVERTISEMENTS

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6 according to size.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

RINGS The Oldest Ring Maker in The World.

My 1908 improved rings are now ready, also my Pedigree Books. These rings are the finest ever put on a bird's leg. All the numbers are embossed, and not same as all other makes, stamped in; therefore cannot fill up with dirt; all edges are neatly rounded. They are not cheap flimsy rings that birds can nip to the leg and cause inflammation, as many a good bird has been lost through cheap rings. Prices as before, 6d. per dozen, 5/- per gross. Pedigree Books, 6d. each. Agents apply at once; enclose stamp for terms.

NO MORE EGG-BOUND HENS.

A good number of hens at this time of year are taken with inflammation just before laying. Tussiline is the very best remedy for this. I have this week saved three of my hens, which would certainly have died but for Tussiline. There is nothing like it for inflammation both in old birds and also young ones, just picking; alone a few drops in the drinking water, and treated as my instructions, will save them. Try it. Bottles, 7d., 1/-.—J. T. Palmer, Chemist, Gamlingay, Sandy.

LINNET FANCIERS LOOK.

Having got another 1,000 hooks printed, I should advise all Linnet fanciers to send for one. It tells you how to feed, how to train for contests, how to moult, what to do with birds in soft moult, the cause of soft moult, and last, but not least, how to make them sing at one another with their wings down. Many a thousand would like to make them put their wings down. It can only be done with my method, so send P.O. 1/6 for my book of secrets, and you will be delighted. I guarantee my birds to sing in your own hand. It is the key to success. I don't copy adverts.—Send to the orignal, Harry Allen, Bird Specialist, City Aviaries, Beckett-st., Leeds.

Have You been Losing Time

because some of the so much vaunted large stocks have not been able to supply the order when sent? If so, state your requirements, with stamped envelope. Undoubtedly I have what you require; if not I will say so plainly. But, there are still thousands to select from, and they are not Birds tried and found to be wanting. They are not a mystic collection any more than the name is mystic, for, whilst not claiming, personally, to be anything superior to my fellow men, the name of W. Rudd stands for - - -

These facts have never been contradicted, simply because they are incontrovertible. I am standing in front of the public, and have done so for over 35 years, and not hiding behind a curtain, with a ventriloquist's dummy dressed up and stuck in front, or trading under a name not my own. This cannot be too widely known.

Feeding Hens, 3/6, 4/6 each. NOT small foreigners or tried wastrels. Cages 3d. extra.

ASTHMARINE CURES all Lung Affections, but nothing else, 9d. & 2/6 bottle.

or non-talkers. If you have got a Parrot of this kind, and you write us giving full particulars, breed of Parrot, how long you have had it, and what kind you would like in exchange for it, we will make you a good offer of a Parrot that is guaranteed to talk in exchange. Northern Aviaries, Preston.

BOOKLET FREE.

Finest Talking Parrots. I only deal in Parrots that will make first-class talkers; no rubbish. I am willing at all times to send my Parrots on four weeks' trial and three months' talking guarantee. Why? Because all my Parrots are young, strong, and reliable. My lifetime has been spent among grey Parrots, both at home and abroad. I guarantee every customer every satisfaction. Grey Parrots are my special fancy. I have trained them, know their wants, and can give every purchaser a bird that will please him in every way. I can supply grey talkers, not thinkers, that will say almost anything, at reasonable prices. Before you purchase a grey or green Parrot, send for my Booklet, entitled "Talking Parrots." All my birds are sent on four weeks' trial, at my risk. Send postcard for catalogue.—Mrs. Forster, Princes Park Aviaries, Violet Street, Liverpool.

COKERNUT HUSK NESTS.

Remember, my "Improved Secure" husks are made up, bored, and wired together differently to any others advertised. For 15 years they have been acknowledged unequalled for successfully rearing Budgerigars. I have sold more than all other advertisers combined. All the principal zoos and parks use "Secure" husks. This is what the Press thinks of them. CAGE BIRDS says they are "far superior to the old husks." Feathered World says "undoubtedly the new husks are far superior to the old." Exchange and Mart says "they are very superior to the old style, which often fall to pieces." They have distinct advantages, and are absolutely unbreakable, so don't be gulled. Comparison and competition always increase their popularity. They are entirely different to all others, and are sold only by me. One quality only, the best; 4/6 dozen, smaller quantities 5d. each. Instructive pamphlet, entitled "Budgerigar Breeding," free on application. Superior Cockatiel box nests, 1/6 each.

HARPER, Adelaide Villa, Dudley Rd., WOLVERHAMPTON

solved. For full proofs send postcard at once for my large book, "Parrot Prattle," now containing 168 pages. This is the most wonderful book ever offered free of all charge to all Parrot fanciers. (This "Parrot Prattle" is registered copyright, and all infringers and imitators will be proceeded against). It contains hundreds of testimonials from all parts with full names and addresses, many interesting facts, and gives valuable advice and hints to all Parrot buyers. Full details of our original system of selling Parrots on four weeks' trial, at our risk, which we were the first to introduce. We sell Parrots of all descriptions on four weeks' trial, at our risk, before settlement. Cheapest and best in the Kingdom, and any Parrot sold by us, and not giving full satisfaction, will be exchanged any time within twelve months. Remember we lead and others try to follow. Write to other dealers as well as us, and judge for yourselves. Lists of Parrots for sale and above book post free on receipt of postcard.

CARNARVON.

The first annual show was held in the Institute Room on Easter Monday, April 20th, and proved a splendid success. The entries came up well, and the exhibits were a good lot for quality. The management was carried out by working men fanciers, and, under the leadership of the chairman, Mr. Ford, everything passed off without a hitch, an enjoyable day being spent by visitors. The secretary, Mr. I. W. Jones, a well-liked and able official, did everything possible for the comfort of the cage birds and exhibitors alike. There were 130 birds staged. Mr. Williams won the special for the best Canary in the show, and Mr. Longden the cup for the best British Goldfinch in the show; also Mr. Roberts won two specials for the best Blackleg Goldfinch, and the best local Goldfinch in show. VALE OF CONWAY F.A.

The members of this Association held their first show on April 18th. It was a very successful turnout. The exhibits were both numerous and of good quality, the Norwich and Yorkshire Canaries making quite a creditable exhibition in themselves. In the British bird classes that for Goldfinches was easily first, and all the birds in the cards reflected much credit on the exhibitors. Judging from the success of this first venture, the Association bids fair to become highly popular in the district, and is lucky in having such good Fanciers at its head. The show was under the management of Mr. Eastwood, who, together with the able and hard-working secretary, Mr. A. T. Johnson, is deserving of much praise. Mr. J. Davies had the placing of the cards, which he did to the satisfaction of all.

NOR. BUFF (9): 1, 3, he, G. Jones, good chubby one, rattling colour and quality, well over perch, neat all through; third also of grand size and shape, well cut away, good head and chest; 2, E. Jones, lightly marked, but one for substance and shape, best of styles, carries itself well; 2, H. Sheldon, real typical specimen; vhc, C. Sheldon, another nice one. YELL. (7): 1, two spls, 2, 3, 4, W. Sheldon, first a grand clear, very rich and even in colour, best of shape and style, 2nd also a bird of shape and quality, 3rd all there for quality, loses a little in substance; r, E. Jones, very good chubby specimen, but out of condition, or might have done better; vhc, Cartwright, a quality bird, too. YORKS. YELL. (9): 1, two spls, 2, Parry, leader a grand clear, feathers like silk, stands well up from perch, very neat, second a good marked bird, well drawn and shapely; 3, W. Jones, stylish and neat, extra size, and nice feathers with it; r, Walker and Alcock, long, raking bird, hardly so finished; vhc, G. Evans; c, Evans, two typical ones. BUFF (11): 1, spl, r, Parry, fine one winning, has length and position, full of quality, very smart exhibit; 2, Jones, very straight and good on legs, well drawn, excellent feather; 3, G. Evans, another beauty for shape and stand, has quality, too; vhc, Evans, very close up; he, Walker and Alcock. BORDERS: 1, 2, 3, H. Sheldon, good trio, neat and typical, nice boxy feather. A.O.V.: 1, spl, 2, r, E. Jones; 3, W. H. Jones; vhc, Jones; this was a nice class of Crests and crest-breds, the leaders being good specimens. NOVICE: 1, J. Jones, C.-B., nice head and body; 2, Eastwood, good airound Plainhead; 3, J. Walker, another smart Norwich. BRIT. GOLDFINCH (9): 1, Woolam, very smart one airound, big well-cut blaze, good colour, fine tanning and markings; 2, R. Jones, rare good colour and markings, neat Finch; 3, Forbes, another nice one, excellent feather; r, J. Jones, smart and stylish; vhc, Evans, Bebb; he, Walker. BULLFINCH: 1, spl, W. Roberts, big bold bird of good markings and colour; 2, W. H. Evans, only loses in size, good shape, feather, and colour; 3, Nolan, nice bird; 2, E. Jones. LINNET: 1, spl, Nolan, good nutty colour, fine sizes and shape, well pencilled; 2, J. Jones, equal in colour and shape, trifle smaller, neat bird. A.O.S. HARDBILL: 1, Forbes, Hawfinch, good one for size and shape, fine colour, good head and bib; 2, W. H. Evans, rattling good Greenie for colour and shape. MULES: 1, spl, E. Jones, good-coloured Goldie-Canary, excellent size and style; 2, Forbes, big buff, same cross, nice exhibit; 3, Walker and Alcock, neat feathered Greenie-Canary; r, Roherts; vhc, Jones. LEWISHAM AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

At a specially convened committee meeting held on April 22nd, at 202, High-street, Lewisham, it was proposed that we hold our country ramble in conjunction with Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. on May 10th, if suitable arrangements can be made. Mr. Lugg (chairman) has kindly consented to undertake these arrangements, and although the district is not yet finally decided on, Redhill will probably be the locality chosen.—H. Thos. Lucas, Hon. Sec.

MORRISON AND DIS. C.B.S.

At a general meeting held on April 25, Mr. J. Jenkins (Swansea), was made a member. It was also decided to hold our first feather show on July 25 next, when I hope to see good results of this breeding season shown thereat. It has been decided to change the day of meetings from the fourth Saturday to the first Thursday in each month for a period of three months to see if such arrangements will suit our members better. May 7 will be excepted.—David Jeremy, hon. secretary.

BROXBURN AND DIS. C.B.S.

Usual monthly meeting held on April 24, Mr. T. Sharp presiding. It was unanimously agreed to apply for the Norwich, the Border, and the British Mule Club medals. A motion was made that we hold a first feather radius show to be held in July; but it was agreed to leave the matter over till the June meeting. The following were appointed to judge the open show on December 19: Mr. H. Moreland, Falkirk (Norwich), Mr. P. McKenzie, Kelso (Borders), and Mr. P. McQuiston, Ayr (Mules and British Birds.—T. Sharp.

CLUB REPORTS.

KILMARNOCK O.C.B.S.

A committee meeting was held in the Ossington Halls, John Finnis Street, on April 23, the president, Mr. Jas. Johnson, presiding. There was a splendid turn out of members. The following gentlemen were appointed judges: Scotch Fancy, Messrs. Wm. Webster (Greenock), and D. Holden (Muirkirk); Norwich Plainheads, Mr. A. McFarlane (Glasgow); Crest and Crestbreds, Mr. J. M'Lay (Kirkintillock); Border Fancy, Mr. T. M'Credie (Dumfries); British and Foreign, Mr. P. Pettigrew (Glasgow). Prize money will be paid on the second day of show to all exhibitors attending same. This being all the business, the meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman. — JAS. B. Y. MURDOCH, secretary.

FALMOUTH AND DIS. C.B.A.

The annual meeting was held at "Ralph's Hotel," Falmouth, on Thursday last, when a satisfactory report on the year's working was read, showing an improvement on that of previous years. The election of office holders resulted as follows:—President, Mr. John Barker, M.P.,; vice-presidents, Messrs. Douglas B. Hall and Major Mead; treasurer, Mr. F. Gosling; and secretary, Mr. Thos. Burton, 2, Mount Edgcumbe Terrace, Falmouth. It was decided to hold a nest feather show in June. The annual show is to be held in the Polytechnic Hall on December 4, Mr. J. Payne having been appointed judge. The society already have several specials in hand, and also the challenge cup to be won by the member who breeds the best bird during this coming season. The number of members is forty. After the meeting was over the party adjourned to the concert room, when songs were sung by Dr. J. Johnson, a banjo solo was given by Mr. T. Burton, a stump speech and whistle solo by Mr. W. Medlin, and a recitation by Mr. E. Barnicoat. The National Anthem brought the concert to a close.—THOS. BURTON, hon. secretary.

HIGHGATE, HAMPSTEAD AND DIS. C.B.S.

Usual monthly meeting held at the Spencer Hall, Dartmouth Park Hill, N., on April 24, when there was a large gathering of members and friends, and long before meeting was over it was "standing room only." Mr. G. Gardner took the chair. Three new members were proposed. The chairman, in calling on Mr. J. Robson for his lecture, "Hints to Beginners," said how pleased he was to see such a good attendance, especially the number of ladies present, and he extended to them a hearty welcome. Mr. Robson in his lecture took great pains to mention all the ins and outs attached to the breeding and rearing of Canaries, also the breeding and show cages, of which the secretary had arranged to have at the meeting a variety, so that the different cages could be shown and explained. Questions were asked by Messrs. R. Pearce, B. Johnson, G. H. Neal, R. Jones, and many others, which were answered to the satisfaction of the querists. At the close a hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Robson by acclamation. We give a hearty invitation to all fanciers and friends to join us.—G. H. NEAL, hon. assistant secretary.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

Usual fortnightly meeting was held at headquarters on April 13th. The chair was taken by Mr. A. C. Burn. Mr. R. J. Watts was elected, and Mr. W. E. Cobb nominated for membership. Mr. Daintry was thanked for the presentation of a handsome silver medal for competition at the young bird show, and Mr. F. Wyse for working out statistics. The secretary announced that one of their assets (the old class cards and stands) had realised a sum exceeding the auditor's valuation. The quarterly statement of accounts, showing a balance of £24 15s. 1d., was confirmed as read. The result of the reconsideration of the case of Mr. Pile by the Council was announced, and was to the effect "that he become a member." The reviewing of the rules of the London Federation of Cage Birds Societies was adjourned to a subsequent meeting. The chairman then called upon Mr. J. S. Clarke for his lecture, entitled "British Birds of North Hants, their Nests, and Eggs," prefacing his remarks by saying that his long years of experience amongst almost every species of British birds fitted him for the lecture he was about to give. At the close questions were asked by Messrs. Wright, Lathlieff, Wheller, Pullinger, Shepherd, Curtis, Turnber, Buckman, and P. G. Cooper. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Clarke.—V. WYNN, Hon. Sec.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.

On April 2nd at Headquarters Mr. J. Hazell gave his promised paper, "Leaves from the diary of a breeder of Norwich Plainheads," to a well-attended meeting, who listened with appreciative interest to what Mr. Hazell had to say. Mr. H. E. Tringham was in the chair and said there was no need for him to introduce the lecturer, who was well known to all as a successful breeder of Norwich. Mr. Hazell upon rising said he was not altogether in love with the title of his paper, as to a large extent it necessitated him talking about himself. In commencing he went back to his schoolboy days, when with his chums he used to go Birds-nesting, and related how he climbed a Fir Tree, in his Sunday clothes, after a nest, and the punishment that awaited him when he arrived home brought broad smiles to the faces of many of his audience. He then went on to relate how he purchased his first pair of Canaries in Woolwich Market, how this pair led to the purchase of other pairs and so on, with the ups and downs of a Novice, at Canary Breeding. He next related his experiences with exhibition stock, which brought forward many points of interest. The Novices present asked Mr. Hazell many questions, which he answered in a very able manner. The Chairman said he felt sure everyone had enjoyed Mr. Hazell's remarks and the discussion they evoked, and a vote of thanks was carried unanimously. The Chairman also made a few remarks with regard to the society, and said that a list of fixtures second to none had been arranged. May, lecture by Mr. Robson; June, lecture on the Roller Canary by Mr. Norris; July, Young Bird Show; August lecture by Mr. Silver; September, lecture on Crests by Mr. Tyson; October, washing exhibition and competition by Mr. Cranfield; November, Annual Show, December, presentation, Bohemian Concert. —W. HODSON, Hon. Sec.

NATIONAL BRITISH B. AND M.C.

Committee meeting was held at headquarters, 25, High Holborn, April 13th. Present, Mr. Robson (chairman), Messrs. Fulljames, Silver, Dobson, Cooper, Trower, Wyse, Dewhurst, Hathaway, Vale, Maxwell, Plumbridge, and Carr. Letters were read from Messrs. Weston, Mays, Arrighi, and Wynn. Proposed by Mr. Dobson, seconded by Mr. Trower, that Mr. Plumbridge proceed with the arrangements for the lantern lecture kindly offered by Mr. Goodchild, and that it take place at next meeting. Mr. Trower stated that all medals had been sent out to the respective winners, but he was sorry to say that only in one or two cases had they been acknowledged. He hopes that if this meets the eye of the defaulting recipients they will do so without delay, and thus relieve him of anxiety. Proposed by Mr. Cooper, seconded by Mr. Silver, that arrangements be made for the club's annual outing to take place on May 30th, and that a cordial invitation be extended to all London societies and friends through the Fancy Press. Proposed by Mr. Cooper, seconded by Mr. Fulljames, that the club go again to Epping Forest. There was some opposition to this proposition. It was thought that many of the members and friends would appreciate a change in going to various parts of the country, and an amendment, proposed by Mr. Dewhurst, seconded by Mr. Maxwell, that the club go to Oxshott in Surrey this year. This amendment was carried. The arrangements, as far as possible, are: To train from Waterloo to Oxshott, work across the common to Claygate Common, Leatherhead Common ,and Ashtead Woods, where refreshments will be arranged for six o'clock. Those desirous of going early with a few of the committee can travel by the 9.35 train. The remainder by the 1.37 to Claygate, where the early party meet this train. In view of getting a reduction in the railway fare, will secretaries and others desirous of going communicate with Mr. Carr, 243, Wandsworth Bridge-road, Fulham, S.W. The sub-committee read their report on the club show cage, which was as follows:—Cages advised by the sub-committee at meeting March 30th for approval by general committee April 13th, 1908. Small size for bird up to size of Twite, 11 in. long, 9½ in. high, 5 in. deep; second size for birds up to size of Bullfinch, 12 in. long, 10 in. high, 5 in. deep; third size for Buntings and Bramblefinches, 13 in. long, 11 in. high, 5½ in. deep; large size for such birds as Hawfinch and Crossbills, 14 in. long, 12 in. high, 6 in. deep. The two smaller sizes with fronts of 16 gauge wire ⅝ mesh, bottom rail 1¼ in. high, and one crossbar 1½ in. above bottom rail. The two larger sizes with fronts of 14 gauge wire ⅝ mesh, bottom rail 2 in. high, and crossbar 2 in. above bottom rail. All cages to be fitted with two perches only, plain turned with boss on back end, and secured to back of cage so as to be level with crossbar. With trough and not drawer for seed in right-hand end. Water hole to be on third wire from right-hand end (between 2nd and 3rd). All fronts to be bowed at top for about one inch. No crossbar along top portion of front. A lengthy discussion followed, and it was proposed by Mr. Silver, and seconded by Mr. Trower, that the pattern of cages as drawn up by the sub-committee be adopted by this club for their uniform show cage. An amendment, proposed by Mr. Maxwell, seconded by Mr. Hathaway, that the word "drawer" be substituted for the word "trough," was lost, the proposition being carried. It was the general feeling of the committee that a pattern of the cage should be photographed and sent to the Fancy Press, with dimensions, etc., so that there should be no monopoly, and every cage maker and amateur would be able to make these cages. Mr. Fulljames kindly undertook to photograph a cage. The following new members were elected:—Messrs. A. Cochrane, 24, Cockburn-street, Edinburgh; F. A. Watt, solicitor, Banff, N.B.; and Geo. Thurling, 64, Long-lane, Smithfield, E.C. —PLUMBRIDGE and CARR.

BRADFORD & COUNTY B.B. & M.C.

The first annual meeting was held on April 25, but owing, no doubt, to the very severe weather the attendance was not such as we should have liked, there being only about 20 present. The president, W. A. Cowgell, Esq., occupied the chair. The secretary's report as to finances and exhibition statistics was given. The membership now stood, it stated, at 58 (paid up members), who in fees paid £3. Subscriptions towards special prize fund amounted to £2 1s. 6d. There was a balance on the wrong side of £1 14s. 11d., but this was reduced to 30s. by the generous gifts of three persons. We have had a small number of exhibitors considering the membership, but on the other hand, when we analise the entries made at shows under your club's patronage, we find members made about 48 per cent. in classes provided. On the discussion of the financial statement, it was decided to carry the deficit forward to the next account. The election of officers for the ensuing year was then proceeded with. Mr. L. Robinson proposed, and Mr. S. Dean seconded, the election of W. R. Myers as secretary. Messrs. W. A. Cowgill and W. H. Shackleton were nominated for the presidency, there being a close fight for this honour, which was decided on the casting vote of the chairman pro tem. The following were elected vice-presidents: Messrs. Shackleton and Midgley to represent inside the Bradford district, and Messrs. Duncan, junr., and Hellewell outside the district. Messrs. T. H. Inman, S. Dean, C. Ross, J. Edmondson, P. Jowett, T. Wood (all Bradford), J. S. Clarkson (Halifax), W. Thomas (Otley), T. Boyle (York), C. Mackwell (Keighley), Biskoby (Doncaster), J. Isherwood (Wakefield), Dale (York), C. Shirley (Keighley), were elected on committee. Mr. Duncan proposed and Mr. Chittenden seconded "That the club be known in future as 'The Yorkshire County British Bird and Mule Club." Mr. Inman proposed as an amendment that it should remain the same, which was seconded by Mr. Robinson. After much spirited discussion, Mr. Duncan's proposal was carried. The next item was the amount of annual subscription. It was the opinion throughout the past year that the sum of 1s. per annum was too small. Mr. Duncan proposed "That all exhibiting members be required to pay the subscription of 2s. 6d. before points gained by such person count for specials given by this club. Honorary members' subscription to remain as heretofore, viz., 1s., unless, of course, they care to become full members." This was seconded by Mr. Hellewell and carried, there being only two against who desired the subscription be 2s. for all. Mr. S. Dean proposed the alteration of Rule 9 for shows to obtain this club's patronage to make four classes for British Mules or Hybrids, instead of three as last season, which was passed. Will secretaries kindly note the above alterations, and those desirous of obtaining our patronage kindly make early application for same. Lest there should be a misapprehension as to where our headquarters are, seeing that the title of club has been altered, I take this opportunity of saying they are at the Market Tavern, Godwin Street, Bradford.—W. R. MYERS, hon. secretary.

WELSH C.B.C.

Annual meeting was held at the Locomotive Inn, Aberdare, on Easter Tuesday. The committee met in the morning to discuss various matters. As short time was spent in taking refreshment before the general meeting commenced, this meeting was full of go from beginning to end, the items being discussed in a very practical manner. Unfortunately, there was so much on the agenda which required the fullest consideration that the washing competition was unavoidably held over. The chairman (Mr. T. L. Castree) presided over both meetings. The Secretary was instructed to send a letter of sympathy to Mr. J. Pritchard, Mountain Ash, who has just sustained a severe loss in the death of his beloved wife. Mr. Pritchard has been a member ever since the formation of the Club, and is one of the oldest Norwich breeders in Wales. The balance-sheets of the general working of the Club and also of the Club show were read, and showed a balance on the right side. It was decided to hold a young bird show at Aberdare early in October, and that Mr. F. L. Eynon be the show secretary, assisted by Mr. F. J. Eynon. All shows requiring the Club's patronage must apply on or before the second week in July, as all applications will be considered on August Bank Holiday; no applications will be considered after that date.—It was decided to raise the subscriptions to 3s.; the extra 6d. to go to provide a fund by which a solicitor can be engaged as legal adviser to the Club; also to assist any member who has sustained a loss to such an extent that the committee shall think fit to assist him from such fund by making a grant. The correct wording will be drawn up by a solicitor. This is a new idea in birdy circles, and should have a tendency to draw members and induce them to remain when they have joined. If the Club is given loyal support, members in Wales will be protected and assisted. In future all committeemen and officers must be nominated either at the general meeting or by letter to the secretary prior to the general meeting.—The following new members were elected:—Messrs. C. Price (Kedwelly), F. Beard (Llandrindod Wells), A. Pratt (Treorchy), C. Adams (Merthyr), A. E. Brown (Merthyr), and C. J. Bevan (Tredegar). Members in future who have won a Club medal shall have the option of medal or cash. The cup winners were Messrs. D. Jenkins, E. J. Jefferies, G. Gregory, and G. F. Harber; medal winners, Messrs. D. Jenkins, E. J. Jefferies, D. S. A. Longden, Lewis and Dymond, J. H. Jones, G. Bradford, S. J. Nicholas, and D. H. Tedstone. Mr. J. H. Jones won the Toronto medal. Mr. G. F. Harber compiled a very interesting and instructive paper on "Preparing Birds for Show, etc."—D. H. TEDSTONE, Hon. Secretary.

SCOTTISH CREST CLUB.

A committee meetiag was held in Nelson's Temperance Hotel, Glasgow, on April 25th. The election of president and vice-president then took place. Mr. G. F. Adamson (Kilmarnock) was appointed president, and the following vice-presidents:—Messrs. Geo. Mackie (Aberdeen), C. Campbell (Glasgow), Hugh Moreland (Falkirk), Wm. Cairns (Edinburgh) J. Noble (Kilmarnock), and J. McLay (Kirkintilloch).—The Secretary intimated that he could no longer retain office, owing to personal and private reasons, which in no way affected the Club. This office will be filled in future by Mr. Robert Adamson, 56, Petershill-road, Glasgow. It was also found necessary to elect Mr. Geo. Smart, Carmyle, as auditor, in place of Mr. J. Munro, who has resigned. Two vacancies on the committee were filled by Messrs. J. C. Wallace (Aberdeen) and Wm. Griffiths (Springburn), they being the next highest on the voting list. The competition for the Roberts' Cup was gone into, and Mr. J. Young moved, and Mr. G. Adamson seconded, that we restrict the competition to nine shows. The following were selected, should they agree to give the necessary classification (four classes at least for Crests and crest-breds):—City of Glasgow, Broughty Ferry, Dundee, Perth, Aberdeen, Glasgow and West of Scotland, Kilmarnock, Kilsyth, Edinburgh Scottish National. It was also passed that the winner of cup be presented with a gold medal, and the runner-up with a silver medal. Mr. R. Adamson moved, and Mr. C. Campbell seconded, that we hold a Club show, as usual, on condition that we get the same classification as formerly, and this Club will guarantee the four young bird classes. Glasgow and West of Scotland Society, having most votes on the official list, was selected. In the event of the secretary not getting proper arrangements with this Society, the whole matter is to be brought back to committee. Letters were read from the following Societies soliciting Club's patronage:—Broughty Ferry, Kilmarnock, and Aberdeen. Mr Geo. McPhail moved, and Mr. Adamson seconded, that we grant two gold and two silver medals at Club show as formerly. It was also decided that all birds for cup or medal competition must be exhibited in club show cages with regulation drinkers outside. Two new members were accepted, viz., Messrs. A. Watson (Kilmarnock) and T. Thomson, junr. (Glasgow). The next meeting is to be called for June 27th.—A. CHALMERS, Secretary.

Books every Bird Keeper and Breeder must have.

By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to-date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

House's Canary Manual - - - - Post free, 1/2

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price.

Cage Birds 1908 Annual - - - - post free, 7d.

The Standard Guide to the Cage Bird Hobby is a title bestowed upon the ANNUAL years ago. And the 1908 edition merits it more than any previous volume. Revised and brought up-to-date from cover to cover, with a lovely coloured plate and many full-page art illustrations, and crammed with valuable articles and unique and helpful features, it is the finest value for money ever offered lovers of birds. Canary, British, Hybrid and Foreign bird enthusiasts alike will find it a Complete Guide to the Fancy.

The Stock Book (Our invaluable "Breeding Room Register.") - - - post free, 7d.

A well-known fancier has said of it:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." This book is one no breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred—keep account of their strong and weak points. It contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages, and many invaluable "Hints for Emergencies."

CAGE BIRDS CHARTS.

No. 5.—THE HAWFINCH: Its Exhibition Points & Failings.

Notes on the Drawing on Page 441.

This week's Chart depicts in interesting and instructive manner the points and failings of the Hawfinch from the exhibitor's point of view. This bird is one of the most singular of the British members of the great Finch family, its huge beak being quite as striking a feature as the curiously crossed mandibles of the Crossbill. Personally I have a soft corner in my heart for the Hawfinch, and am seldom without one in my collection of birds. But it is only in quite recent years that the species has come into favour as a cage-bird. Our old friend Bechstein speaks very disparagingly of the Hawfinch, seemingly hardly considering it worthy of mention as a cage pet, and his lead has been followed by most of the writers since his day. Still, this is not the place to discuss the bird's possibilities in this direction—I am asked to discuss the Chart.

The centre picture Mr. Norman modestly labels "a good specimen." I should think it worthy a more laudatory adjective. It is very difficult to get a specimen combining all the good points seen in this one. It is obviously a bird of splendid size, and as shapely as possible—two vital points in the exhibition Hawfinch. I can imagine some of my readers smiling at the application of the word "shapely" to this bird. And to those unfamiliar with the species, I can well believe at first glance the huge head and beak at the one end, and the stumpy little tail at the other, may strike them as distinctly grotesque rather than shapely. But with us, as fanciers, familiarity has blunted this aspect of the shape of the Hawfinch.

The bird must be shapely in the sense that the huge head must be set on a thick neck, and the thick neck in turn be set on a very stout and well-rounded body. The plumage, of course, must be carried tightly; it is, indeed, seldom one gets a slack-feathered Hawfinch, providing the bird's state of health is satisfactory; it is naturally close-plumaged.

To turn to the markings, the Hawfinch may be said to be in the same boat as the Goldfinch, inasmuch as if it be deficient in one particular feature—the bib, to wit—it is of little use as a show-bird. But of the bib more anon. The wing-bars should be as distinct as possible, and as white as possible. The tips of the tail should also be cleanly white. The lower part of the wings must be black, which, however, carries a beautiful purplish, or warm purplish-blue gloss (it is difficult to define these metallic tints in words). The more lustrous the flight feathers the better the bird. The peculiar form of the secondary flight feathers will be seen from the drawing; they may be said to be shaped like a bill-hook.

To turn to the colouring, one of the first things noticeable about the Hawfinch is its light-coloured eyes. In body-colour the species varies very considerably, but the ideal show-bird, of course, is a rich jonque. Such a bird will have the head and cheeks a palish chestnut brown; at the nape and upper part of the neck comes a collar of delicate bluish grey; the back is a deep rich reddish brown; the breast is a palish brown, an exceptionally good bird often carrying a purplish tinge hereabouts; the region of the vent white; the tail blackish brown, tipped, as mentioned before, with white. In the winter a greyish tinge is often found on the head, and the other colours are paler, but this disappears when the bird is in breeding condition, and it becomes then warmer in colour generally. The beak in the "off-season" is fleshy white, but when the bird is in high (or breeding condition), turns a deep leaden blue. The Hawfinch is not at its best from the point of view of richness of colour until after its third moult, though after its second moult a good bird is quite fit to show.

Leaving our good specimen for the moment, we find the top figure on the left labelled "Crouchy position, bad coloured bib." Well, a bib like this would damn any bird from the standpoint of the exhibitor. It would disgrace a hen (many hens, indeed, have excellent bibs) and reminds me of the bib of the young bird just moulting through. The fault in the position is easily seen on comparison with the centre bird. Some Hawfinches use their legs very badly, and are seriously handicapped thereby; at times, however, a bird is "crouchy" because he is not at home in his cage (not properly steady). In this connection too, exhibitors should take a straight tip and never put the perches high in the cage.

Working down the plate, we come to a "long, narrow head." This is a bad possession, for with a narrow head goes a narrow bib—most undesirable points. "Hammer-headed" birds are not looked upon with favour either by judges or knowing exhibitors.

"Thin in body, light in colour at edges of beak and bib." The enormity of the former fault I need not dwell upon. Just contrast this "weed" of a bird with the stoutly-built "good specimen." The second failing is one possessed by very many otherwise excellent exhibition Hawfinches, and is a bad point often overlooked by owners. The body-colour seems to stop short and fade away some half-inch from the base of the upper mandible and the bib, leaving a pale margin which detracts considerably from the appearance of the bird. Solidity of colour is a most desirable possessiou. I may say, too, that many Hawfinches run light on the crown of the head, more particularly at the front.

"Ragged bib, arched back, indistinct bars." The proper cut of the bib is seen in the picture immediately above the one we are now considering, and comparison clearly reveals the nature of the fault termed "ragged at edge." To get a bird perfectly clean-cut all round the bib is not an easy matter. An "arched back" is a congenital defect, usually, and it is surprising how often one meets with this failing. It lends the bird a "squatty" appearance, as though hugging the perch, as fanciers of the Norwich Plainhead say. Such a bird, too, generally has a nasty habit of throwing its head back as it takes the perches; and, of course, as perhaps I need hardly say, a Hawfinch guilty of throwing back the head always seems unshapely in the back. The need for distinct wing-bars I have already pointed out; without them a bird's beauty is considerably marred.

Our final point is the bib, as the black marking on the throat is termed. And it is a very vital point—the making or marring of a bird. After the sketch of the "perfect bib," I need say little about the "narrow," or the "spreading" bib, for the respective drawings are self-explanatory. The perfect bib should extend well to the outer edges of the lower mandible and well down the throat (in the latter point many grand birds fail slightly). It should not be sharply V-shaped, but of a shape between the letters V and U. It should be a dense black in colour, solid all over, and very clearly defined round the edge—no breaks or runs anywhere. Lastly, the black plumage which extends from the bib round tho base of the beak, and from the beak to the eye, should also be a dense black and free from raggedness at the edge. This is well shown in the drawing of the "good specimon." It is a point, too, in which many birds are weak.

SOUTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C.

The committee will be meeting in a few days to complete conditions of the Cup Competition, and I shall be pleased to hear from any member who wishes to subscribe to this fund. Also, will those members who promised donations on the voting agenda notify me. The cup will be competed for in addition to the trophies hitherto, and donations to the special prize fund will be gratefully received. A rule was passed at the annual meeting, "That preference be given to shows applying for the club's patronage which employ specialist cage bird judges." Will societies who intend applying for patronage please note.—J. W. RENNIE, hon. sec.

YORKSHIRE C.C. OF SCOTLAND.

A committee meeting was held on April 21st at 65, West Regent-street, Glasgow, eleven members being present. It was decided to let patronage remain as at last meeting, viz., six clubs, those already accepting being Glasgow and West Perth, and Paisley. Replies were also received from Aberdeen and Ayr O.A., stating they will probably accept. No reply being received from Bathgate it was decided, failing them, to offer patronage to St. Andrew's. The secretary was instructed to write all clubs giving Yorkshire classes not clashing with these dates offering the support of members. The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman, Mr. R. Eastman. New members made since last meeting:—Messrs. A. Neilson (Portobello), R. Skinner (Glasgow), H. Jamieson (Glasgow), A. Marr (Glasgow), J. McKerracher (Glasgow), and J. Cardwell (Tollcross), bringing total up to thirty.—T. BOWMAN Hon. Sec.

is an undoubted security. The Ten Years' Guarantee given with each Rudge-Whitworth is also a "gilt-edged security" to the purchaser of one of Britain's Best Bicycles; he knows that money could not buy a better machine, that it was tested piece by piece by mechanical engineers and by scientists during its manufacture.

He knows that the whole of the vast resources of the largest firm of cycle makers in the world substantiate the guarantee, and in the improbable event of ANY part of the machine being defective, the guarantee will be instantly adhered to.

An intensely interesting, illustrated booklet of 64 pages will be sent post free to all who want a bicycle, or who want a better one than they already possess. All Rudge-Whitworths sent packing and carriage free.

ILLUSTRATED IDEAS

Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some ideas useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird-room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

AN IMPROVED CAGE DOOR.

Sent by R. Thompson, 146, Alfred Street, South Shields.

I send a sketch of an improved door, which does away with the loops on the ends. Cut two pieces of punched bar the required length and bore the end holes a little bigger. Then bend the bar at the second hole. Bending the bars takes away from the length, but give it a few taps with a hammer on a piece of iron and it stretches, or draws, the bar to the required length. Then you will find that the door works with ease, and drops with its own weight. By soldering on a piece of wire (as shown in sketch) this does to lift the door by and when the bath is hung on the cage front it catches on top of bath and stops door from dropping. I claim that this door is neater and looks better than one made with the usual looped wires, which are dangerous to birds' claws.—ROBT. THOMPSON.

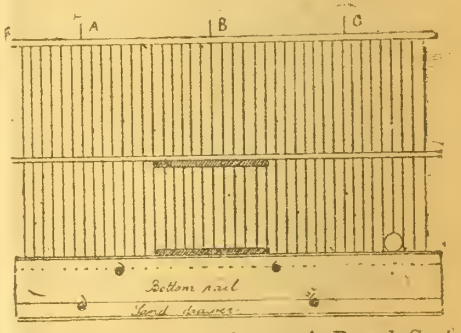
FROM FIXED TO LOOSE FRONTS.

Sent by H. C. Holmes, 4, Tower Road, Liphook, Hants.

This is a rough sketch of a method whereby fixed-fronted cages (such as the "London Fancy" breeder) can be made into serviceable loose-fronted ones, with very little trouble.



Carefully remove the front. A B and C at the top are three fine wire nails, driven in and cut off to leave a piece the thickness of the cage top protruding. Make three small holes in top of cage to take these nails. Saw along the dotted line shown at bottom of front, and in the top half-inch of bottom rail put two fasteners (wire) such as are used for doors, etc., and, of course, make bottom part fast to cage with a screw or nail at each end. The wired portion of front will then be easily removable.—H. C. HOLMES.

In your "Twitterings" column last week, writes Mr. H. T. Lucas, a paragraph appears concerning the arrangements for the Dulwich, Peckham, and Lewisham C.B. Societies' combined ramble, and is attributed to Mr. E. S. Lugg, as secretary of the latter society. This is an error, as I am not aware that I have been superseded in my office of hon. secretary of the Lewisham Society, and shall, therefore, feel obliged if you will contradict the part referring to Mr. E. S. Lugg as secretary, which must cause confusion amongst fanciers generally. I may add that I am removing from Hereford Gardens, Lee, in June, and may then find that I shall have to resign the secretaryship, but till that time I hold this office alone, as I have done since its formation by me in November last.—(We regret the error; Mr. Lugg should have been given as chairman, and not as secretary.—EDITOR).

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS.

BRITISH BIRDS.

Linnet Mule not Singing (W. Vowles).—Mix one ounce of maw, with two ounces of niger and hemp seeds and give the bird a small teaspoonful daily, in a separate vessel to the stock mixture. Also go out and gather him some young leaves of dandelion and some seeding heads, also seeding shepherd's purse and chickweed. You will soon have him in condition again, then.

A Tail without End or Beginning (T. S.).—Really, if the Goldfinch refuses to grow a tail, you cannot do anything to compel it. I strongly suspect, however, that if you caught up the bird out of the aviary, you would find the stump of the old feathers still in. In any case, the tail is practically certain to be reproduced at the next moult. The Goldfinch-Linnet cross is not by any means uncommon, and the resulting Hybrid I consider a lovely little bird.

A Bullie's Proceedings (Try Again).—The proceedings you detail are nothing out of the ordinary—quite the ordinary thing, in fact, and exactly what mislead the beginner into "counting his chickens before they are hatched." Still, there can be no fertile eggs without such proceedings, so you can still go on hoping, but don't let hopo become certainty until actual fertile eggs are to be seen.

Linnet's "Swelled" Chest (G. G.).—It is difficult, from a letter, to come to a definite conclusion as to trouble. It reads very much like a case of air accumulated under the skin, a complaint birds are apt to suffer from occasionally. Examination of the "swelling" should tell you if this be so, when a needle-prick would let out the air, and the swelling would disappear. If it is a growth of some kind, then I am afraid the prospect of cure is remote. Is it a hard place? Or can you see and feel any matter? You really give no particulars.

Mealy and Lesser (A. W. Anderton).—The difference 'twixt Mealy and Lesser Redpolls lies mainly in the size, a good specimen of the former being three times (to the eye) the size of the latter. The Mealy is also much lighter in ground colour than the Lesser, as a general rule. Feed as advised "Klondyke" this week for his Linnet.

Keeping Mealworms for Use (Worm).—The mealworms I myself keep for daily use are stored in a not too deep tin, but of good width, filled with bran, medium oatmeal, and a little crushed dog biscuit. When not being used, it is kept on a shelf close by the kitchen fire. Warmth is the great thing to keep mealworms in good condition.

The Crow Family, Etc. (J.C.).—Your question goes a little beyond my experience, I am afraid. The presence of the female often creates trouble, and causes the male to become savage during the breeding season. Why not address a letter to our correspondence columns, and see if some reader or other can enlighten you? Both Hawks and Owls must have flesh food. Any cage must be a very big box pattern one, and half the front should be boarded up in case of the Owl—the Hawk, too, likes a darkened corner to retire to. I don't advise you to try keeping these with the other birds; there, of a certainty, would be ructions. I should choose a Merlin and a Little Owl if I wanted them for pets, and could get them.

Song of the Chaffinch (Pink Pink).—Most certainly the Chaffinch sings in its natural state. At the present moment its song is one of the most noticeable birdie melodies of the whole countryside. I notice you live in London; take the "tune" to Hampstead Heath and you'll hear his merry "toll-oll-oll-oll-chickweedo" the whole day long.

Identity of Bird (Mystery).—The bird you have caught is a Wheatear, and from your description I should say it is a female.

Siskin's Damaged Leg (W.A.C.).—I really cannot give you any hope of a Siskin which has a leg so hopelessly injured that he cannot stand on it ever being any use as a Mule breeder. Strange things happen at times, of course, but I wouldn't waste a day on such a bird myself.

Hedge Sparrow Mules (E.C.M.).—If you will pardon me being blunt, I will say at once that it is absurd to think of pairing a Hedge Sparrow (an insectivorous bird) to any Finch, and if that is your son's intention, he is only wasting time. If the hen Canary is going to rear the young Hedge Sparrows, she will do so on the food with which she rears her own progeny; it is a very doubtful experiment, however. I should think it would be well, though, to almost entirely withhold seed until the young Hedge Sparrows were at least seven or eight days old, assuming they reach that age.

Live Ants (T. H. Shelton).—Live ants are eaten by certain insectivorous birds with relish—the Wrynecks, Woodpeckers, Wagtails, Larks, Pipits, etc. The small ants (I do not know their scientific name, and cannot at the moment of writing look it up) are the more generally liked, for the very big ants go untouched by some birds. The difficulty is to feed them to the birds when alive without many escaping and infesting the house. I have many a time "baked" whatever ants happened to come along with my live eggs; the birds like them.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

Tanagers and Sugar Birds.

Tanagers.—I should say your idea of keeping Tanagers together is certainly not foredoomed to failure, and yet your friend is right in a measure when he expresses the popular belief that they must be kept in cages. Some of the larger species are amiable, some of the smaller ones the reverse, and yet there are the opposites in each case, and by no means in isolated instances. I may say I have this season kept Blue Tanagers, Scarlet Tanagers, and Maroon Tanagers out of doors with Waxbills and the small Ornamental Finches, and they have behaved themselves admirably; yet if these proved amiable birds were to start nesting I should keep a very close watch on them. The aviary you propose would answer admirably for the purpose. Don't overcrowd nor crowd large and small species together. I should advise the Sugar Birds being kept apart from the Tanagers. I have seen several species of Sugar Birds kept together in quite a moderate enclosure. I should suggest the planting of fruit trees in the uncovered portion. You will see the announcement of a book on Foreign Birds some time during the next two months in CAGE BIRDS, which will meet your requirements as to these birds. There are others very costly, with fine plates, but they only deal with wild life, classification, etc. If you give me an idea of what kind you would prefer to keep I shall be pleased to suggest a selection most likely to live together in amity. It is impossible to lay down any rule as to what species may be kept together, on account of individualism. A close watch must be kept on them, and pugnacious individuals removed. I repeat, the dangerous time is if a pair set up housekeeping, then, though previously amiable, they often become murderous.

Keeping Grey Parrots.

"Llew."—(1) Providing they have been together before your purchase, they will probably be amiably disposed towards each other, but Parrots of all species are very jealous of attentions or caresses being bestowed upon another bird, and resent it by an attack if this be possible; again, individuals that have agreed together while young very often have to be separated as they become adult. In fact, care has to be exercised in attempting to mate these birds when such is desired. (2) Yes, providing they were two of a batch that had come over together—see above. (3) Yes, have seed and water trippers so arranged that they cannot be fouled by the bird's droppings. (4) No, in my opinion they would be better separate, and when adult not within sight of one another. (5) For healthy birds 20s. is not a high price. Keep them out of draught, yet not in a vitiated atmosphere. Do not give table scraps, tea, coffee or milk slops, or any kind of animal food. Diet as advised weekly.

Age of Amazon Parrot.

Abb.—You have a young Blue-fronted Amazon; when it becomes fully mature its plumage will change materially, the area of blue on the top of the head will become larger and of a brighter hue, and the face, chin, and throat will become yellow. You have an immature bird, and it should make a good talker; make it one of the family, keep it where it will hear and see what is going on, also teach it, by special repetition, such special words and sentences you would like it to learn, and it should make both a good talker and mimic. There is no means of telling whether any individual bird will make a good talker; nearly all Blue-fronts are more or less talented. Neither do I think sex makes much difference. I have seen or heard talented birds of both sexes. It is always best to get a young bird, unless you purchase one which already is a talker, and such you have to pay a heavy figure for.

Plans of Outdoor Aviary.

H.V.J.—You certainly have now a well-constructed aviary, and with the ivy-covered wall and privet hedges you should meet with good success. I should most certainly divide it as you suggest, and a shed at the other end, 8 by 6 or 10 by 6 ft., would be ample for this. Why not put the partition in at once and get your birds in this part as soon as possible, though if the present awful weather continues, the middle of May will be time enough. Supply hay and grass, and leave the birds to do their own building. I should say you have Grey Singing Finches. There is no reason why you should not have one or two odd birds of different species about, and take your chance of a few hybrids. The Australian Finches are late breeders as a rule, and you should get some results this year if you get your stock in about the middle of May. The various species of Greenfinches are all handsome birds, and should succeed well with you. Hope you will have good luck with the birds.

Purchasing a Grey Parrot.

Poll.—I am afraid the mortality does not decrease among newly-imported Greys; in fact, the conditions in these days are worse almost than formerly. True, with the present speedy navigation they do not have to endure insanitary conditions for so long a period; but, on the other hand, they are rushed from one extreme of temperature to another, so that many of them come to hand with latent lung or septic troubles, and soon "shuffle off." As regards acclimatised birds, some call a bird acclimatised when it has been over a few weeks; I should consider six months the minimum period which would entitle a bird to be so described. Most certainly an acclimatised bird, if you get such, is the cheaper purchase. An Amazon (the Blue-fronts are the best talkers as well as the most freely imported) is much the hardier bird, and there is comparatively a small mortality among this species. It is also a brighter coloured bird than the Grey, and has a very pleasing and handsome appearance. See other replies re diet and teaching to talk.

Parrot with Sore Mouth.

F.A.—Your diet is simply awful, and I'm not at all surprised at the bird's condition. Stop the buttered toast, boiled egg, milk sop and bacon at once. Do not give table scraps; tea, coffee or milk sops or any kind of animal food. Diet as under: Seed mixture, two parts canary oats, and one part each wheat, dari, small maize, hemp and sunflower seeds; well mix and keep a supply continually in the cage. Also supply ripe fruit, plain biscuit (dry), nuts (shelled walnuts are best), little boiled potato (dry), cuttlefish, stale crust of household bread (dry) water ad lib. For one day only put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in its drinking water and repeat dose after an interval of three days. Get the following mixture and wipe out its mouth with same, using a camel hair brush for the purpose; 20 grains of chlorate of potassium dissolved in 2 drachms of glycerine; well cleanse the brush, and use fresh portion of mixture on each occasion. If there is any exsion from the nostrils bathe same with diluted glyco-thymoline. Keep bird out of draught, and there should soon be an improvement.

Screeching Grey Parrot.

N. Tyrer.—First of all, your diet is all wrong. Diet as advised to F.A. in this issue; but, of course, your bird does not need any drugs. Am afraid screeching is vice in your bird's case, as having had it three years it cannot be fear. Do any of the younger members of your family irritate it at all in a spirit of fun? If so, see that this is stopped at once. Some individuals will screech, do what you will, and I advise you to persevere with the covering-up (you should always, when covering up, leave a small portion of the centre of top of cage open, say, a space about three inches diameter). Cover up when it begins to screech, and leave for half an hour at least. With many such noisy birds this method has considerably modified, and in several cases checked the nuisance, for a bird soon learns to recognise it as a punishment.

Grey Parrot Costive.

D.V.W. (Walsall).—Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia over its boiled maize every other day for a week, or till the straining disappears. Of course, if its evacuations should become watery loose, you must at once stop the aperient. For the next month make its drinking water the colour of port wine with Parrish's Chemical Food. Note: Boiled maize only keeps fresh one day; the food vessel should be thoroughly cleansed daily, and a careful watch kept that no stale bits are left in sand tray. The proper seed mixture and complete diet you will find in reply to "F. A." in this issue, but the other portion of the reply is not applicable. If the trouble does not yield in a fortnight you had better repeat query. Note: Keep up a supply of the seed mixture, etc., and when the bird is eating of this freely gradually wean it from the boiled maize.

Canary Seed, etc.

"Fair View."—(1) The sample of seed has by some means gone astray, but I prefer Spanish to Turkish; the price is about right. Am quoting from the lists of our regular advertisers: Spanish, fine Spanish, extra large Spanish, 9s. 6d., 11s. 6d., and 13s. 6d. respectively. I am a firm believer in having the best one can procure, but Fine Spanish is of a good and reliable quality if you get it from a firm with a reputation to sustain. It should be free from dust. Never accept any sample which has a musty smell about it. (2) A varied diet is not easy for seed eaters, and I use both white, brown (Indian or French) and spray millet. Red millet I never found any but Quails and Doves to touch, and for small birds it is usually wasted. Oats and paddy rice are very wholesome. (3) As soon as the cold winds have departed you can safely put out the Roller Canary. One which has been out in aviary now two winters woke me the other morning with its vociferous song, and the aviary is 60 feet or more from the home. Either two or three hens may be included. (4) As a rule two cock pheasants will not agree in the same enclosure, unless it is a very large one, and even then their bickerings will mean many unfertile eggs.

What Bird?

"Java."—The additional information you supply confirms my previous opinion; your bird is a Cowbird, or Tropial, and, I think, a female; but I cannot recognise its species. I will keep your query before me, and possibly may do so a little later. (2) Usually the feathering is fairly regular; the down or hair lingers longest on the head, but I should imagine they would be all right a little later. Both with Cockatiels and Budgerigars partially feathered young frequently appear, usually due to inbreeding or constitutional weakness in the parent birds. (3) To allow reasonable accommodation for the young till they were disposed of, I should not advise more than 4 pairs; three pairs only would be better. Note: you must have at least double the number of nesting husks that you have pairs of birds.

Cockatoo with Diarrhœa.

H. Parish.—Keep a piece of clean cuttlefish in the cage for the bird to cut up and make its drinking water the colour of Port wine with Parrish's Chemical Food for the next month. Do not leave the water in the cage continuously but let it have a drink three or four times a day. For one day only give the bird six drops of tasteless castor oil either direct to the beak, or if you can by means of a quill containing about that quantity; if you place the end of the quill against the slit of beak near the base, the bird will suck it in. Diet: Seed mixture, one part each of Canary, oats, wheat, maize, dari, hemp and sunflower seeds; well mix and keep up a continuous supply in the cage. Also give so as to vary the diet, ripe fruit as in season, plain biscuits (dry), nuts (shelled walnuts are best), and a leaf of fresh lettuce, few green peas, or other green food, according to season, consulting the birds' taste somewhat; but do not give anything unwholesome.

Brevities.

What Birds? (Verity).—(1) So far as it is possible to tell, I believe this to be an Alario Finch. (2) This bird I believe to be the Capo Canary, or, at any rate, some very near species. Both should mate very readily with Canaries; in fact, the first-named has done so on several occasions, and any kind of hen Canary of not too large a variety would answer the purpose. Possibly the Serin would mate most readily with a darkly variegated bird, but here again I do not think you will have much difficulty in inducing it to pair with any kind of Canary of somewhat similar size. Though the English Siskin is a smaller bird, I should imagine your Serin would readily mate with it. Of course, there is always a large element of luck about such cross-pairing, and often there are several attempts before fertile eggs are produced.

Breeding Budgerigars in Cage (Novice).—(1) Yes, they will breed successfully, but not as freely as in a cage of larger size. In such a cage as yours they may take a little longer to settle down to breeding. I remember many years ago selling in a cage 12in. square, all wire, a brood of seven young Budgies which were successfully reared. (2) Have the seed and water hoppers inside the cage, but in such a position that they cannot be fouled. (3) One husk will be sufficient, but it will be necessary to remove the young as soon as they are able to fend for themselves. (4) Any room or portion will do for them, providing it is light and airy, but not draughty. With attempting to breed any kind of Foreign Birds patience is a sine qua non, for they are not like Canaries, but will often let the whole summer slip by without doing anything, and then surprise you will a couple of broods in quite late autumn.

Identification (J. G.).—Even now I cannot be quite sure of its identity. There is a great variation in many species, but I incline to the opinion that you have a pair of Passerine Doves, value 10s. to 15s. a pair, or more, according to market. Providing your aviary has suitable shelter shed attached, they should thrive, and ultimately breed there. I will still keep your query in front of me, and if I see any reason to doubt above identification, will duly state same in this column.

Amazon Parrot with Cold (S.S.M.).—Glad to note the bird is so much better; continue mixture till the breathing is normal. When, and only when, this occurs, put the bird on a course of Parrish's Chemical Food for a month. I should let the bird go without its bath for a fortnight, when it should be safe to let it bathe as usual. The best method is (if the bird will permit you) to bathe the nostrils, using a camel hair brush; if not, you must use an ordinary sprayer, confining the spray as far as possible to the nostrils. But as soon as the running ceases there is no need to continue this. A few chillies among its seed would help to check the sneezing. Hope it will continue to do well.

Sexing Cardinals, etc. (H. A. Laurence).—The plumage of Red Crested Cardinals is very similar, but that of the female is not quite so rich or so pure in colour. Carefully observe the bills of your birds in profile. That of the hen is narrower at the base and more tapering than that of the male. Again, all the hens that I have had anatomically examined have had the grey feathers on the back of the neck more or less mottled with white, and though this has been the case in many instances, and I've never yet come across an undoubted male so marked, yet I cannot say if this distinction is constant. Cardinals are very bad breeders in captivity; they often nest and hatch out, but very few young are reared. If you succeed in getting young hatched, you must keep up a liberal and almost constant supply of live insects in addition to their ordinary diet (as the young leave the nest. You can keep them with the Budgerigars.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird, for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Canary (S.M.S.).—Acute pneumonia and inflammation of liver, commonly called "a chill." I do not consider it infectious.

Green Canary (Mr. Marsden).—"Severe chill" during period of egg-laying, owing, probably, to disease of liver, that organ being in a softened and inflamed condition.

Siskin (Grosvenor).—Chronic softening of liver, acute inflammation, and hæmorrhage. Apoplexy.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

A Cage Matter (J. Harvey).—We fear as you will see that we could not possibly publish a letter which reflects on every maker of cages advertising in our columns. It would obviously be very unfair to do so.

Report (J. R. Evans).—Thanks for report. Pleased to hear from you in future.

Report (D. Roberts).—Many thanks for your kindness and good wishes.

Wild Fowling (S. Duncan).—We have sent your letter and booklet along to our contributor, who will no doubt deal with it next week.

American Subscription (J. L. Martin).—If you are overcharged for CAGE BIRDS in the States, your best plan is to forward us an international money order value two dollars, which would cover a year's subscription. You could add to this the cost of any books, etc., you desire to order. Adoption of this plan would get you out of your difficulty.

Allow me to congratulate you upon the value of CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL, writes Mr. S. Plackett (Long Eaton). It is a book that no bird fancier can afford to be without; especially so in the case of a novice. Its contents cannot fail to instruct all who read the ANNUAL.

The April issue of "Bird Notes"—the journal of the Foreign Bird Club—affords attractive reading. Its contents include an interesting article from the pen of Mr. W. E. Teschemaker, B.A., on the Cirl Bunting, which is accompanied by a full-page photograph showing a natural haunt of this Bunting, with a picture of a clutch of eggs inset. The Golden-breasted Bunting is the subject taken by Mr. H. E. Bliss, and Mr. Wesley T. Page contributes useful notes on the Siskins, some of the family being ably depicted on the frontispiece. Other entertaining articles by Mrs. Warren Vernon, Capt. Reeve, and Mr. C. H. Row, and many notes, go to make up what is a very instructive issue.

TWITTERINGS.

Kindly state that I have removed from 45, Haywood Street, Shelton, to 102, Ashford Street, Shelton, writes Mr. William Roberts.

Mr. W. Mundell, the well-known judge, will officiate at the Crook Original annual show on Nov. 21st, writes Mr. A. Bowes, the secretary.

I have parted with all the Norwich hens I advertised in CAGE BIRDS, and I had many letters for them, writes Mr. J. Hibbit: (Oakham).

Mr. A. Wellings, of Prescot, has been elected to judge the Altrincham C.B.S. First Feather show, on July 11th, writes the secretary, Mr. Tom Harrison.

The Porth and Dis. C.B.F.S. is affiliated to the C.B.U., writes Mr. R. G. Challenger, secretary, and Mr. Robson will officiate at our open show on December 2nd and 3rd.

We hear that Mr C. E. Silk of Emsworth, is down to judge cage birds at the Harpenden show, to be held on Whit Monday. Twelve classes are provided for at the show.

I have taken your paper, CAGE BIRDS, for the last 10 months, and find it very interesting for bird fanciers, writes Mr. A. Escott (Neath). It is full of information. I wish CAGE BIRDS all success.

I have taken in CAGE BIRDS for some considerable time, writes Mr. John Britton (Bristol), and have found it very useful. It is, in my estimation, the finest of its kind in circulation.

The Otley and Dis. O.S. First Feather show will be held on June 27th, at the Queen's Head, Otley, writes Mr. W. Dawson, hon. secretary. The judge will be Mr. W. Bearpark, of Menston.

Kindly state that I have changed my address from 2, Mount Edgcumbe Terrace, to "Formosa," Mount Edgcumbe Villas, Falmouth, writes Mr. Thos. Burton, secretary of the Falmouth and Dis. C.B.A.

The Great Horton O.S. First Feather show is fixed for June 6th, writes Mr. J. Holroyd, secretary. I wish all members to know, too, that my address is 27, Kingswood Street, Great Horton, Bradford.

I have just received a note from Wanstead Park, which makes it necessary to postpone the ramble to Saturday, May 16th, writes Mr. W. G. Pawley, hon. secretary of the Plumstead and Woolwich C.B.S.

The Bramley and Dis. O.S. have engaged the following judges for their open show on November 7th, writes Mr. E. Craven (secretary): Messrs. W. A. Cowgill, of Bradford, and A. G. Davis, of Manchester.

Kindly note that Mr. W. Hodson has been elected assistant secretary of the London and Provincial O.S., and Messrs. R. Brownlie, J. Hodder, and C. T. Maxwell members of the committee, writes Mr. H. Lambert Brown, hon. secretary.

Mr. F. W. Gordon has resigned the secretaryship of the Sunderland C.B.A., write Messrs. Reid and Maddison, joint secretaries, and all communications in future should be addressed to them at 2, Plantation Road, Pallion, Sunderland.

We have engaged Mr. Roe to judge at our annual open show, to be held at the Town Hall, Longton, on October 3rd, writes Mr. T. Siers, the secretary. The hall is one of the finest in North Stafford. The show will be held under C.B.U. rules.

Upon the arrival of a truck of coals at Bourne, from one of the collieries near Nottingham, it is said that a Starling's nest, containing young ones, was found among the fuel. It is supposed that the birds were hatched on the journey, as the parent birds were in attendance.

At the Portmadoc local show, to be held on May 14th, ten cage bird classes are to be provided—one each for Norwich, Crest, A.O.V. Canary, and Mule or Hybrid; two for Yorkshire Canaries, three for British, and one for foreign birds. Entries close on May 6th, the secretary being Mr. R. G. Humphreys.

The Sacriston and Dis. C.B.S. held their first annual show on April 18th, when there were 15 entries in the Canary and Mule classes. The British bird class contained some excellent exhibits. Mr. T. Elliot (Old Pelton) judged, Mr. Geo. Henderson ably acting as secretary.

I am pleased to state that the Enfield F.A., writes Mr. Thos. Mills, hon. secretary, is making splendid progress with new members and vice-presidents. Fanciers are asked not to forget that we have a fifteen-mile radius for membership. They should join at once for the young stock show. If Mr. Stocker should see this will he communicate with me at Victoria House, 83, Gordon Hill, Enfield.

The following gentlemen have been added to the membership of the Scotch Fancy Canary National Derby O.A., writes Mr. Thos. Smith (secretary):—Messrs. J. Moyes (Thornton), R. Johnstone (Musselburgh), M. Douglas (Mossend), J. Sinclair (Edinburgh), R. Willison (Barrow-in-Furness), D. Black (Govan), F. Strathearn (Alloa), J. D. Maxwell (Falkirk), J. Jackson Kirkmuirhill)), and J. Burnside (Lesmahagow).

Kindly announce that the Altrincham C.B.S.'s ramble to Castle Mills will take place on Saturday afternoon, May 30th, writes Mr. Tom Harrison, hon. secretary. Societies in this district, including the Manchester and Sale Societies' members, are heartily invited. We meet at Hale Station at 3 o'clock. Tea will be provided at the price of 1s. each. Anyone wishing to join will please let me know by May 20th.

Cage Birds Charts:

How to Judge Exhibition Birds.

NO. 5: THE HAWFINCH.

[See Full-page Drawing and Explanatory Notes on pages 430 and 441 this week.]

In response to the remarkable outburst of appreciative welcome which greeted the chart published with our Birthday Number, we have decided to issue a series of such charts, so that of note may have its exhibition points and failings illustrated and explained in the same helpful and educative manner. In this issue No. 5 of the series appears. It deals with the bonnie Hawfinch, and the lover of this species, and especially the beginner, has only to keep the chart in his birdroom to have always before him the ideal to look for and to acquire, while the faults to be avoided can never escape his eye.

In due course many other favourite exhibition birds will be made the subject of one of CAGE BIRDS CHARTS.

The same great pains will be taken to ensure the completeness of every chart, and its accompanying letterpress, and the deft fingers of our artist will portray the excellencies and deficiencies of the birds with the same precision and clearness. The value of CAGE BIRDS latest feature to the novices and amateurs in our hobby will be obvious to all, and we ask our many kind friends to bring

CAGE BIRDS CHARTS to the notice of everyone interested in Bird-keeping and breeding.

Impress upon them that they must on no account miss any one of the series to be issued in the near future, or they will miss a TRULY HELPFUL AND EDUCATIONAL feature never previously put before bird-keepers.

CAGE BIRDS CHARTS may be had beautifully printed on stiff art card, with eyelet holes, for hanging in the bird-room, price 3d. each, post free. The explanatory notes and scales of exhibition points are printed round the margin. No. 1, the Goldfinch, No. 2, the Yorkshire Canary, No. 3, The Bullfinch, and No. 4, The Border Fancy, are now on sale, and No. 4 will be on sale early next week.
SEND YOUR ORDER AT ONCE.

The committee of the London and Provincial O.S. have decided to offer medals for competition amongst their members at 20 provincial shows, writes Mr. H. Lambert Brown, hon. secretary. Will secretaries of shows desiring our competition kindly make application before July 1st to me at 64, Manor Park, Lee, S.E.

I get a copy of CAGE BIRDS every week from our local newsagent, and consider it to be one of the best papers I have ever read, writes Mr. Chas. Davis (Wicklow). The articles are most interesting for any bird lover. I have mentioned CAGE BIRDS to my friends who are in the Fancy. I wish it every success.

Show secretaries will please note that the Border Fancy Club's Committee meet first or second Saturday in June to allocate specials, writes Mr. M. Jamieson, the secretary. All societies wishing for the club's patronage should forward note of classification they are giving, also name of judge by end of May, to me at Green Terrace, Hawick.

Kindly accept my best thanks, writes Mr. J. B. Waterman (East Dulwich), for the intimation published this week that my essay on the subject of Canaries had proved successful in the CAGE BIRDS competition. The news came as a most agreeable surprise to me, and will act as a splendid tonic in my present rather indifferent state of health.

The Secretary, Mr. B. F. Forse, 31, Thornhill Road, sends a copy of the Leyton and Dis. C.B.A.'s manual for 1908. It is neatly got up, contains a list of the fixtures for the year, the rules and regulations of the association, and the names and addresses of the members. The fixtures include a goodly array of lectures and exhibitions, which should prove an inducement to fanciers to join.

An excellent liquid furniture polish reaches us from Mr. W. J. Adams, of Exeter Road, Teignmouth, which he is offering to readers this week through our advertisement columns. We have had "Bright Shine," as it is called, used on the office furniture with admirable results, and evidently it does not belie its name.

I have made arrangements with Mr. J. Raynes, secretary of the Norwich Plainhead Club, to give us a lecture on 6th May on the Norwich Canary, writes Mr. S. M. Clayton, secretary of the Rochdale Good Intent C.B.S. This will be a rare good treat for fanciers in this district, as several are going in for Norwich Plainheads.

An excellent sample egg-pan reaches us from Mr. T. H. Dent, 16, Langton Street, Preston. Novel in design, it is yet eminently practical, as one would expect from so old and experienced a fancier. It is made of earthenware, to fix under doors of the "slide-up" type, and there are no corners to make thorough and easy cleansing an impossibility. It is, too, of excellent size, and we anticipate this egg-pan will find many users.

The Dulwich and Peckham and Lewisham C.B.S's country ramble arrangements are now complete, writes Mr. E. S. Lugg (chairman of the latter society). Tickets may be had from Mr. Hodson, secretary of D. and P., Mr. Lucas, secretary of Lewisham, and myself, at 5s. each, which includes the railway journey and a cold lunch. We travel by the L.B. and S.C. Railway from New Cross to Redhill, where we are to be met by the cage bird section of the Redhill and Reigate F.S., under the leadership of Mr. F. J. Green (of Lancashire fame), their chairman, who has very kindly consented to make the necessary arrangements for our welfare. The route taken will be via Wray Common, Queen's Park, Reigate Hill, The Beeches, along the hills to Boxhill, where the party will be met by breaks, and driven to the Three Tuns Hotel, Dorking, where lunch will be provided by Mr. Allen Spencer. The train will leave New Cross at 9.2 a.m., and Redhill at 8.24 p.m.

That newly-formed, but very much alive society, the Highgate, Hampstead, and Dis. C.B.S., has issued a neatly printed book of rules, which contains a programme of lectures, shows, competitions, and washing exhibitions, etc., for the 1908 season, that is particularly attractive, and reflects credit on the officials. The hon. secretary is Mr. W. Reynolds, 62, Langdon Road, Upper Holloway, N.

Messrs. H. W. Battye and J. B. Evans will judge at our show, to be held on November 19th next, writes Mr. D. Jeremy, secretary of the Morriston and Dis. C.B.S., when I predict a very successful event. I am glad to inform you that some of our members are doing well; others, however, quite the reverse, the continual cold weather preventing the realisation of their expectations.

The Standard Guide to the Fancy,

IS

The Hit of the Season.

LETTERS OF APPRECIATION REACH US BY EVERY POST.

A charming new cover, many beautiful illustrations of winning birds printed on art paper, a lovely coloured plate for frontispiece, a complete revision of all the popular features, and the addition of strikingly useful new features, mark this 1908 issue.

The articles, too, have never been excelled, and both Canary, Hybrid, British and Foreign bird keepers have been specially catered for. The needs of the beginner have likewise been given the fullest consideration.

"CAGE BIRDS" GREAT ESSAY COMPETITION.

Full Results in all Sections.

LAST week we were able to announce the winners of the Prizes in the Canary and British Bird sections of our Essay Competition. The judges having at last finished their arduous task, it gives us pleasure to publish the names of the senders of the essays selected for first places in the two sections undecided at time of going to press with our last issue. We had anticipated announcing the winners of this competition many weeks ago. Owing in part to its great popularity, however (the number of essays sent in being gratifyingly high), and in part to the wonderful standard of merit found in the efforts of the competitors, the task of the adjudicators became one of considerable moment, and necessarily one involving a lengthy period of time being devoted to its proper carrying out.

The keenness of the competition will be better appreciated, perhaps, when we state that in two of the sections the independent judges who kindly went through the essays therein, were unable to come to an agreement as to which best deserved premier place. This necessitated the calling in of a referee (also independent) to help the judges out of their trouble! And even now the award for best essay out of the whole of the four sections remains undecided. But of this more anon.

The Canary Section.

As announced last week, the winning essay in the Canary section was sent in by Mr. J. B. Waterman, of Dulwich. This was one of the awards which necessitated the intervention of a referee. The judges finally reduced the contestants for premier honour to the essays sent in by the above gentleman and Messrs. W. N. Midgley (Winslow), Levi Butterworth (Rochdale), T. Pope (Plymouth), A. Burtenshaw (Worthing), G. Gamble (Winchester), F. G. Snell (Plymouth), A. Thomas (Loftus), E. Wear (Huddersfield), and T. C. Crawhall (Newcastle). After further consideration the result was narrowed down to Messrs. Wear, Waterman, Crawhall, and Butterworth. More mature consideration still saw two essays, signed respectively "Fortiter defendit" and "Yorkshireman," defying the judges to decide between them, and the casting vote of the referee returned the latter as the winner, and Mr. Waterman proved to be the writer, the former effort being Mr. Crawhall's. All the essays, of course, were considered by their nom-de-plumes, the identity of the writers being unknown to the judges.

Other essays in the Canary section which were considered by the judges as of very high merit proved to have been sent in by Miss Burrows (Wardington), Miss F. Overton (Cheadle Hulme), Messrs. W. A. C. Adams (Dublin), F. Ayscough (West Hartlepool), R. J. Baker (Chichester), J. Bastock (Moseley), W. Downing (Manchester), D. Easton (Carluke), A. F. Fifield (Oxford), J. C. Gamson (Woolwich), J. Grimshaw (Hale), M. Hopper (Millbeck), Kempster (Borough, S.E.), W. H. Kitchingman (Barnsley), C. Mason (Peckham), A. Purves (Edinburgh), A. Short (Tweedmouth), A. Snelling (Sowerby), J. G. Turnbull (Glasgow), W. L. Watson (Ballycarry Station), and R. N. Williams (Chester).

The British Section.

The section devoted to British birds was another remarkably strong one, the essays remaining in for the "finishing round" making quite a long list. They were sent in by Messrs. W. Lowne (Yarmouth), J. B. Moore (Whitehaven), W. H. Commins (Exeter), A. Thomas (Gloucester), S. Kennedy (Tongham), P. Jackson (St. Helens), J. W. Cutmore (Liverpool), W. H. Thomas (Llanelly), T. Handley (Gorton), S. L. Cocks (Peterboro'), and J. Jeffery (Kidderminster). To weed them out still further necessitated lengthy and most careful consideration, but eventually Messrs. Lowne, Jackson, Cocks, and Jeffrey were left. Then the judges decided that an essay entitled, "Twelve years' experience with the Nightingale," by "Philomel," was worthy of premier place, and, as announced last week, the writer turned out to be Mr. J. Jeffrey, of Kidderminster.

Other essays marked by the judges as being of more than average merit were sent in by Miss C. D. Fitzmaurice (New Ross), Miss E. G. Willcock, D.Sc. (Cambridge), Messrs. L. J. Bettison (Lincoln), W. J. Bobbett (Bridgwater), J. H. Booth (Bermondsey, S.E.), R. Carter (East Dulwich, S.E.), J. W. Fisher (Hanley), S. Harvey (West Looe), F. G. Johnson (Blackburn), T. Johnson (Southport), R. Miller (Burnopfield), E. Milne (Aberdeen), T. Sime (Caldercruix), T. Tomkinson (Doncaster), and C. A. Widdas (Cambridge).

The Hybrid Section.

The Hybrid section produced another exceedingly keen struggle, which also necessitated the intervention of a referee. The finalists were Messrs. R. J. Cook (Stourbridge), J. S. Cooper (Matlock), J. W. Dickson (Newcastle-on-Tyne), J. W. Lawton (Crewe), J. T. Millot (Mansfield), W. Sharp (Bathgate), C. J. Ward (Uttoxeter), T. Johnson (Southport), and S. L. Cocks (Peterboro'). The essays sent in by these gentlemen were very close together in point of excellence, and only long cogitation eventually separated Messrs. Cooper, Cocks, Dickson, and Cook from the other competitors. In the end the judges disagreed as to the merits of articles by "Sunny Jim" and "Cheveral" respectively. On the referee being called upon, "Sunny Jim" was adjudged to have lost by a "short head," as race-goers say. The fancier hiding his light behind this nom-de-plume turns out to be Mr. R. J. Cook, of Stourbridge, while the fancier owning up to "Cheveral" is who therefore takes the cash prize of One Guinea.

MR. J. W. DICKSON, 76, Fern Avenue, Newcastle-on-Tyne,

Other competitors who had their efforts singled out for very favourable mention are the Rev. B. Wilton (Middlesbrough), Messrs. J. Barber (Chesterton), A. Burtenshaw (Worthing), F. Dodd (Newmarket), W. Lovatt (Longton), J. Ovenstone (Grangemouth), F. G. Savage (Stratford-on-Avon), W. Smalldridge (Cardiff), M. G. Stevens (Cheltenham), C. E. Truscott (Bedford Park), A. Whillis (Eyemouth), and J. Jeffrey (Battersea).

The Aviary Section.

In the Aviary section the number of essays competing was comparatively small—very small, indeed—but, again, the merit of the articles was exceptionally good. The first prize was awarded by the judges to for an essay entitled "My Birdroom." Curiously enough, Mr. Forse also adopted the nom-de-plume of "Sunny Jim," but this genial gent. got a step higher here than in the previous section. Mr. Forse's contribution was run very closely for premier honour by the essays of Miss McLeod (Teignmouth), Messrs. H. S. Davies (Llandilo), H. C. Brooks (Horsham), J. R. Clarke (Holloway, N.), and J. W. Lawton (Crewe).

The Four Guinea Prize.

There still remains to be awarded the Four Guinea Painting for the best essay out of the four first-prize winners. Here again the judges could not come to a decision satisfactory to them all, and instead of calling in someone to give a casting vote, we propose that Readers of Cage Birds shall be the Referees.

This we think the fairest and best way of dealing with the situation. Here is our plan:

In this issue appears instalments of the winning articles in the Canary and Hybrid sections. In our next issue instalments of the winning British Bird and the Aviary articles will appear. We shall endeavour to complete the publication of these four articles in the next three issues, and in the last issue a coupon will appear, which we ask all readers to fill up and return to us through the post. On this coupon readers may vote for the essay which they consider worthy of the painting as the best out of the four.

We anticipate, so keen has been the competition, that a very interesting difference of opinion as to which is the best article will be found to exist when the votes come to be cast up. Readers should get their friends, whether bird-lovers or not, to peruse the essays and give their opinion, as we feel that the endeavour to forecast the result cannot prove other than an agreeable pastime. So, readers, make sure you vote yourselves, and persuade your friends to join in also.

Fond of the Blacksmith.

In the forge of Mr. C. Boyles, blacksmith, of Bridge Street, Brackley, a Robin has built its nest in a nail-box on the wall within a foot of the handle of the bellows, and has laid four eggs. The forge is daily in use, according to a contemporary, and the window has been left open every night by Mr. Boyles so that the bird could get in, and in this way the little creature has built its nest, which has been undisturbed, and has laid its eggs.

Can give his Birds Lessons.

That well-known and respected Norwich and British fancier and exhibitor, Mr. J. B. Tasker, Skelmersdale, writes a local correspondent, has recently been posing in competition in another direction and procuring chief honours—that of winning a silver cup, value £3 3s., as a vocalist in local competition. It is not generally known in the Fancy that his powers as a vocalist are of a high order. The rendering of "Holy City" so very fine entitled Mr. Tasker to his deserved and handsome present.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc. of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his question for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

One Mopy, Another Coughs.

"Amateur."—1. I am afraid you have been giving the niger, egg, etc., too liberally. Discontinue these extras for the present and give a diet of plain Canary only as a staple. Give a spray of chickweed, or two leaves of dandelion daily, and every second day a small teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake with a few grains of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it. In the drinking water every second day for a week give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and a piece of dandelion extract as large as a small pea. After that give twelve drops of chemical food every second day, and five drops of tincture of steel on the alternate days for another fortnight. If bird then seems well enough drop sponge cake to twice a week, and give half teaspoonful of rape and hemp twice a week, on separate days. Do not give any more niger at all unless you want to breed with her, in which case you may give a few grains twice a week until she has laid. 2. To cure coughing and sneezing in the Norwich cock, see it is kept free from draught and chills; do not give cold baths until the weather is milder; and give twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and two of oil of eucalyptus. Keep water off cage for two hours before giving this, and shake vessel well before hanging on. Give this two days in every three for a week, or until the sneezing is stopped.

Unfertile Eggs.

"Puzzled."—The fact that your hen produces normal clutches of eggs so regularly is sufficient proof that she is not barren, so the cause of infertility is something else. I am inclined to think it is fatness, but as you say she was building another nest at time of writing, there is no time for you to treat her for this. Now matters have reached this stage you had better let her go on, and if she has not commenced laying when this reply appears, try the effect of adding twenty drops of sherry and three of tincture of steel to the water each day until she is about to begin laying. Also give a couple of dandelion leaves daily. Should the eggs again prove unfertile, separate her and treat as advised to "Novice" for a week. Then put her on the usual diet, but with a diminished quantity of egg food and fatty seeds; give the steel and sherry as mentioned above, and if it is not too late try her again with a vigorous, healthy cock that has not been overworked.

Mate for Crest.

Beginner, Sunderland.—You do not say whether your bird is a yellow or a buff. A clear Crest-bred hen of the opposite colour to the cock would be the best mate you could use in the absence of definite knowledge as to how the birds themselves were bred. Select a hen with a massive rounded skull, short, stout beak, wide at the base, and one heavily feathered, with good overhanging eyebrows. If you can further get such a hen which has been bred from a clear-body, dark-crested hen, and a clear cock, you may breed something good

How to Feed.

A. Ferry.—See reply to "H.C.O." this week. As your birds are now sitting you should not be giving egg food every day. This should have been gradually dropped off from the time the birds commenced to lay their eggs, and after they began to sit a teaspoonful once a week would be quite sufficient. The diet (whilst sitting) should be plain Canary, with a fourth part summer rape. A little egg food should be given when the young are expected to hatch, and then it should be continued, as mentioned in reply to "H.C.O." As you use sponge cake with your eggs you should, after the first two or three days, gradually bring the food to the proportion of three parts sponge cake to one part egg. Do not give more at one time than the birds clear up before you are ready to give a fresh supply. No sample of seed reached me. The above remarks, however, coupled with reply you are referred to, will tell you what are suitable seeds to feed on now. You would do well to read up notes on treatment of sitting hens, and hens with young, on our "Novices' Notebook" page the last week or two.

A Glutton Gone Wrong.

"Noviee."—Your bird is doubtless in a very much overfed condition. Give plain Canary seed only for a time, and for the first week limit to a teaspoonful a day. In addition give a free supply of chickweed, watercress, dandelion, or a little of the tops of young groundsel. Give coarse grit, and keep her in a large cage where she can get plenty of exercise. After the first week give, in addition to the Canary seed diet, a teaspoonful of sponge cake crumbs twice a week. In the drinking water give every second day for a week ten drops of glycerine and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence; next week give six drops of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day. Then repeat the salts for another week, and in the fourth week give the acid for the first two days, and for the rest of the week six drops tincture of steel every other day. Do not try to mate the bird until the end of the treatment and she is active and well.

Birds Dying, and Baldness.

F. Wilson.—1. The way in which your birds die is rather suggestive of septic fever; therefore, I would strongly advise you to send the next body to our post-mortem examiner as soon as possible after death. See rules for same. If you find this suspicion is verified you cannot do better than look up back numbers for the treatment of the complaint, or send 7d. to our manager for Dr. Clarke's handbook on the subject. Meantime, keep birds and cages very clean, drop egg food entirely, and if you want any substitute use crumbled sponge cake, Madeira cake, or even plain crushed biscuits, given dry, and add to the drinking water as much boric acid as will cover a sixpence. Do not introduce fresh birds until you are sure as to whether or not you have this infectious disease amongst your birds. 2. You cannot expect to cure loss of feathers without knowing the cause. Try following for a few weeks. Twenty drops of whiskey, ten of lemon juice, and in the water two days in every three as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence. Give tepid baths frequently in which a pinch of bicarbonate of soda has been dissolved, and slightly anoint bare places with boracic ointment, or a little Zam-buk. Do this very sparingly so as not to soil the plumage.

A Question of Food.

H.C.O.—No, it is not necessary to discontinue use of all seeds for the first few days after the young are hatched. It is, indeed, inadvisable. You must continue the seed diet just as usual, and give egg food in addition. For the first day after the young are hatched supply half a teaspoonful of egg yolk twice—one in the morning, and another in the afternoon. Next day add a little biscuit powder or bread crumb to egg yolk, and gradually increase latter each day until you reach from two to three parts in bulk of biscuit or bread to one part of egg. Give this fresh at least twice a day, and in such quantities that the birds just clear it up a short time before the next supply is due. After the third day add a little green food, and cracked hemp; after the first week soaked rape may be added, and cracked hemp given in unlimited quantities. All the time the ordinary seed diet is given just as usual. 2. Yes, your young Roller cocks will require special training to make good songsters. The song may be bred in the birds ever so strongly, but it is good training that brings it out and develops it. You must place the birds as soon as they are doing well for themselves in a position where they can hear nothing but the song you wish them to learn.

A Lingering Hen.

W.R.L., Leeds.—The hen that is still keeping ill will not, I fear, be of much use this year. Continue to feed her plainly as before advised, but add now a small piece of sponge cake with a few drops of sherry on it every second day, and on alternate days give twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and two of oil of eucalyptus in the drinking water, for a fortnight. When first giving this it is best to keep the water off the cage for a couple of hours, then shake the water well and hang on, so that the bird may drink freely before the oil has all returned to float on the surface. Do not give this bird cold baths until the weather gets warmer. Glad the other bird has quite recovered.

Not Moulted, but Loses Feathers.

J. W. Burton.—There cannot be much the matter with your bird, as it appears in perfect health and sings so well. It is quite possible that the shedding of odd feathers, as you say, is the normal moult going on very slowly, as it will sometimes do. In that case the bird will probably soon begin to throw off its feathers more rapidly as the weather gets warmer. On the other hand, as the bird hangs so near the window there may be quite sufficient variation in the day and night temperature to account for the loss of stray feathers, as the curtains will barely prevent this, even if they are a proper protection from draughts. You should try moving him a little further away. Feed on a mixture of Canary, three parts; and rape, one part, as a staple; give a small pinch of hemp twice a week, and a crumb of sponge cake with five or six drops of sherry on it three times a week, and add six drops of tincture of steel to its water twice a week. Discontinue the two last items after a fortnight. Give a spray of green food daily.

Wants a Change.

J.W.F.—An old adage has it that variety is the spice of life, so perhaps you act on this principle in wishing to try the food you name for the rearing and colouring season, seeing that you have always done well with the usual egg and bread food. Candidly, I have not found this food "quite as good all round" as egg food, because some birds do not take to it freely at all, and I do not consider it so good a vehicle for colour food as the ordinary egg food, or even as good as plain bread crumb would be. I have not gone so far as to attempt to rear young upon it solely, though I believe other fanciers, whose word is worthy of credit, have done so. But, as I remarked to a correspondent a fortnight ago, do not make a complete change all at once. If you wish to make the change from a food that has always served you well to one about which you know practically nothing, do it gradually, and feel your way along. Start using it with two or three pairs only, and if you find it quite a success then you can extend the use of it another season. I should be glad to learn result of trial in any case.

Hen not in Condition.

G. M. Davey.—The reason the bird does not come into condition is that she is probably run down by being infested with grey lice, and is perhaps also in an overfed condition. The little silver coloured things you found at the base of the feathers on handling the bird point clearly to the first supposition. If you can either manage it yourself or get a fancier friend to do it for you, give the bird a wash by hand and put a little Jeye's Fluid in the first two basins. Then place in a clean cage and give a bath with a few drops of quassia essence in it each day, and at the end of the week you may repeat the hand-washing as before, which will thoroughly rid the bird of the pest. During this interval you should thoroughly clean the cage in which the bird has been kept, brushing it out well two or three times with a solution of one ounce camphor in half-pint of methylated spirit. Whilst under treatment drop the egg food, and give instead a small piece of sponge cake moistened with sherry. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and on alternate days give twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil. See reply to "W.R.L." in this issue. After the first week discontinue this, and give instead six drops of tincture of steel three times during the week.

When Singleness is Bliss.

Q.E.D.—I expect the conclusion of this proverb applies to husbands as well as wives. Clearly it is not every young bird's fancy that in spring it "lightly turns to thoughts of love." I am rather inclined to think, however, that your supposed pair of birds are in reality two hens. If you are not quite sure on the point get someone who can inform you to look at them. If they are an undoubted pair, in addition to the usual diet of Canary seed give a spoonful of hemp and rape mixed in equal parts every second day, and on the intervening days a half teaspoonful of niger and just a sprinkling of gold of pleasure. Give also half a teaspoonful of egg food and two leaves of dandelion daily, and they should quickly come into condition now.

No Result.

E.A.C.—It is quite a usual thing for the hen to call to the cock when on the nest as yours did, and copulation frequently takes place on the side of the nest, so what you suspect is not the reason for the lack of result. I rather think the hens are at fault through not being in very good condition. Feed as advised to "Q.E.D." for a week or so, and you will probably find them get on better afterwards. If the green hen has got no further, you should take the nest away and let her start afresh after this extra feeding is showing its effect on her. Leave the cock with No. 2 hen whilst feeding up as they may begin to nest soon.

Breeding in Aviary.

"Trier."—It would be quite possible to breed in the aviary you name with two cocks and five hens flying loose. This is as much stock as you should allow in it to start with. Hang up eight or ten nest boxes or pans to prevent quarrels, and feed and treat as you would single pairs in cages, except that you should not disturb the birds by removing the eggs as laid. With ordinary luck you should do quite as well as by breeding in cages, and may even do better. You should look up our "Novices' Note Book" page, which will give you full details concerning this manner of breeding.

Breakers Ahead.

T.N., West Bromwich.—The trouble is all of your own making. When you wish to mate one cock with two hens, if you put all three birds together in a single breeding cage you are laying the foundation for heaps of trouble, as you have already found out. It is not practicable to breed with a group of birds flying together in a cage that is only meant for a single pair, and is small enough at that. What you ought to have done was to put each hen in a cage by herself, then place the cock in with the hen that was ready for him first, and after he had put her to nest and she had commenced sitting, you should have taken the cock away and put him with the second hen, leaving the first hen to hatch and rear the young by herself. When hen number two had commenced to sit, you should again have taken the cock away and kept him apart until the first hen was again ready for him for the second round. You will thus see that you required four breeding instead of two, beside a space cage for each of the cocks whilst they were waiting for the hens to get ready for the second brood. Had you done this you would probably have succeeded very well, as your birds seem to be in good condition. Adopt this plan at once, and you will find you will meet with better luck next time.

Eggs not Hatching.

"Beta."—You do not say at what time the last three eggs were laid. It is not uncommon for a hen to miss laying one day and then go on again and complete the clutch as though nothing had happened; but you do not appear to know whether this was the case with your hen. If it was so, then all the eggs are undoubtedly clear. You should test them by holding them up to a strong light in front of a piece of blackened cardboard, which has a small hole cut in the centre to allow the light to illuminate the egg whilst the eye is shaded. If the eggs appear transparent they are unfertile and may be thrown away at once. If you do not care to trust to this method you had better let the hen go on sitting until the fourteenth day from the time you noticed the additional three eggs. If they are not hatched by that time you may safely conclude that they are worthless. Then you should feed up the birds a week or so before they go to nest again, and give a couple of leaves of dandelion daily. The cold weather at the end of March was quite sufficient to account for the cock failing to fill the eggs this time.

An Ungallant Male.

"Retlaw."—Most cocks will carry a little food to the hen whilst she is sitting, but it is not so very rare to find one that refuses to wait upon his lady to this extent. Yours may, perhaps, be a little run down, but no harm will result from the hen having to leave the nest to obtain food for herself. Provided the bird is quite healthy, there is an advantage rather than otherwise in a cock acting as yours is doing, as they will often take up feeding the young when these are a few days old and are not so much addicted to harrying a hen about, and driving her to nest too soon, as one who is most attentive in feeding the hen on the nest.

Hens Panting on Nest.

A.J.K., L'boro.—There may be several causes for your hens appearing to pant sometimes whilst sitting. If they are in a warm room or place it may be simply that they occasionally feel a little overheated, whilst, on the other hand, if in a cold place a chill would bring about the same effect, with the difference that in the latter event the panting would be far more continuous. It would scarcely be brought on by the cocks feeding them unless they are in a greatly overfed condition generally, and are still being given egg food regularly, which should not be the case whilst the hens are sitting. You might add thirty drops of whiskey and ten of glycerine to the water for a day or two, and it will help the birds to throw off any slight cold they may have, and will do no harm in any case.

Norwich Hen Unwell.

"Hopeful."—Yes, as you remark, I am afraid you treated the hen a little too well early in the season. Put her on a diet of plain Canary seed only, with a spray or two of chickweed or watercress daily. Every second day give a small teaspoonful of crumbs of stale sponge cake with six drops of sherry well mixed amongst them. In the drinking water for the first three days give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and a piece of dandelion extract twice the size of a hemp seed. After that give six drops of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day, and on the intervening days twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence. Continue for a week, or a little longer if necessary. Finish up by giving six drops of tincture of steel for two or three days.

Peculiar Behaviour of Hen.

"Avis."—Had you supplied the hen with a nest-box and material? If you had not, I should say her peculiar behaviour, as it appeared to you, was nothing worse than the bird being very keenly on the look-out for these articles with which to commence nesting. It is quite possible she may be overfed, but as you say nothing whatever upon this point, I cannot tell whether this is likely to be the case or not. Give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week. Then, if she seems all right and ready to mate, try her again and put in a nest pan and a tuft of moss for her to play with when you put the birds together. If this attempt fails write again and say how you have been feeding the birds.

Four in Hand.

"New Subscriber."—1. What I have said before is that some prepared foods are very good and useful for occasional use, but I would not rely upon them solely for rearing valuable young, for the reason that when I tried this the young so reared were behind any reared under similar conditions with the usual egg food. Why do not the breeders of our really high-class show birds discard egg for ready-prepared foods, and thereby spare themselves infinite trouble in preparing food? See my replies to several other querists during the last fortnight. If you think you would like to make the experiment by all means do so. You say that the vendor of the food in question claims to have used nothing else for a long stretch of years, and that must surely be evidence in its favour. I must in fairness say that I have not made a definite attempt to rear young solely upon this particular food. 2. The shells are usually thrown out of the nest by the hen, or get crushed so that they are harmless. You need not try to remove them. As regards giving a new nest, you should get a new nest pan or box similar to the one in use, mould a new nest in it with a hot egg, dust lightly with insect powder, and then remove the old nest box or pan from the cage; place the young in the new nest and put back in cage. Burn the old nest at once. Make the change in the evening when the birds are about going to roost. 3. The young may leave the nest at any time from about twenty to twenty-eight days. It all depends upon how they have been fed. When they are getting fledged keep them very quiet so as not to frighten them and cause them to leave the nest too soon. You cannot get them back to the nest after they have left it unless they elect to go back of their own accord. 4. You have rather misjudged the exact position. Look again more carefully, and you will see that very often the tail of the cock is depressed much below that of the hen, and the latter's is held to one side, and is often raised above the normal. The sketch you made is rarely, if ever, seen in the real act. Cannot be more explicit here for obvious reasons.

Songster and Roller.

A. Rushen.—Considering the age of your common singing bird, and the violence of the fits you say it now has, it would be much the kindest thing you could do to get a chemist to chloroform it for you and put it out of its misery. It will not do any more good, and treatment will be quite useless, for all the permanent good it would do. If you really wish to try what you can do for it, feed it as you do the Roller, and give a half teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake every day for a time, well mixing with it one day five drops of sherry, and the next day four drops of cod liver oil emulsion, and four of chemical food. For the first week give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence in the water every second day, and for two or three weeks after twelve drops of chemical food every second day. 2. There does not appear to be anything at all wrong with the Roller except that it is a bit puffy. Give it a dose of salts as above for one day only, and the next three days add six drops of tincture of steel to its water. You do not say what you want to know about this bird. If it has not sung since you had it, it is probably a hen. Its actions are simply those of a bird who is anxious to mate.

Two Rounds of Clear Eggs.

C.H.B.—Your cock bird is clearly badly out of condition; you must have mated them much too early for them to have had two nests already. There does not seem to be very much the matter with your feeding if your seeds are good. Now you have separated the birds you should try to bring them into a better condition, and you may yet have time for one nest from them, which is all I would advise you to take from them this year. Do not mate them until they are a good vigorous health, and the cock in full song; if you do, you will be wasting the energy of the birds for nothing. Treat as follows: For staple diet give a mixture of three parts Canary to one part rape; every second day give the cock half a teaspoonful of hemp, and on alternate days a small piece of sponge cake crumbled, and slightly sprinkled over with gold of pleasure seed. Three times a week give the hen a small pinch of inga, and on each of the other days a little sponge cake. Each day give both a small spray of chickweed, or two leaves of dandelion. In the drinking water for the first two days give each as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and follow this up by twelve drops of chemical food in the water every second day, and six drops of aromatic sulphuric acid on the alternate days for a week or fortnight. If the birds seem well enough by that time drop the acid and give six drops of tincture of steel for two or three days. Should the cock appear to keep backward add five drops of cod liver oil emulsion to the crumbled sponge cake twice a week.

Sat Tight and Killed Young.

W. E. Cross.—The reason your hen sat tight last year, as you say, and killed the young, is that she was a "sweater," and perhaps a non-feeder, too. Look up our "Novices' Notebook" page for the last two or three weeks for information on the subject, and how to deal with it, which you will find there in much greater detail than can be given here. You will also find the question of food for the young largely dealt with. The usual food for rearing the young is composed of hard-boiled yolk of fresh eggs minced finely, and well mixed with at least twice its bulk of bread crumb or powdered biscuit. This must always be kept perfectly sweet and fresh, and should never be kept over from one day to the next. It should be given to the birds in small quantities two or three times a day. You can probably remove the cock from the hen that is sitting all right, and leave the hen to hatch and rear the young herself. Most hens will do this, but one occasionally meets with hens that will not; therefore, you must take notice of the hen for a day or so after removing the cock to see if she leaves the nest and stays off, in which case you must return the cock to her at once. If she sits contentedly without him, you may, of course, mate him with the other hen, and return him to hen No. 1 when her young are about three weeks old.

Brevities.

Laid Only One Egg (P.H.L.S.).—If hen is still sitting steadily, and you can get two or three fertile eggs from common Canaries, I should advise getting them, placing them under her at once; allow her to hatch and rear them. After this she might go to nest in due course, and lay a full complement of eggs. If you cannot do this let her go on sitting for another week, and then take away the nest, and let them begin over again. Feed up a little, and do not give nest box again until hen appears ready to begin nesting. The egg the hen laid might have been "pin-holed" by overgrown claws. You should see if the claws need trimming before she begins nesting again.

Coughs and Sneezes (J.T.S.).—See the bird is kept quite free from draught and chills, and do not give cold baths until weather is warmer. In drinking water give twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and two of oil of eucalyptus every day for a week, and if not quite recovered by that time give the same medicine every second day for a week longer, and on the intervening days ten drops of chemical food. Give a small piece of sponge cake every second day, but no egg food, and a little green food daily.

Make no Progress (No Name).—You probably put the birds together before they were ready, which is the reason they are dallying about so long. They will doubtless set to work as soon as the weather gets settled again, so you must try to exercise that grand virtue of patience—in big letters—a little longer. Instead of egg food, as now, give a teaspoonful of crumbled sponge cake, with ten drops of sherry and a small pinch of gold of pleasure seed well mixed with it each day, and give two dandelion leaves per bird daily instead of watercress. This will bring them on faster.

Cock "Goes for" Hen (C. Lees).—Did not it occur to you that you contradicted yourself in the same breath, so to speak, when you say the "cock goes at the hen with open mouth, and again that he "does not seem to take any notice of her"? As a matter of fact the birds are going on all right, but the recent snap of cold has perhaps caused them to "slow down" a little. Leave them alone and you will find things come right. It is quite a common thing for a cock to leave off singing when mated.

Swelling Beside Beak (M. Rae).—The swelling you describe is probably a tumour, which a veterinary, or a medical man interested in the matter, might easily remove when ready, but I cannot advise you to interfere with it yourself as you might only make matters worse. Should it appear to cause the bird much suffering it would be kindest to have it chloroformed.

Crest-bred Cock (Another Novice).—Although you say the bird looks and acts in every way like a cock, the fact that you cannot get it to sing at all proves otherwise. Am rather inclined to think it a hen. You cannot do much more than you have done already, except to be patient and see what warmer weather will do. Try following: In addition to staple food of Canary give a teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake, with a small pinch of gold of pleasure seed every second day, and on intervening days a teaspoonful of an equal mixture of hemp and rape, and two leaves of dandelion daily; twice a week five drops of tincture of steel in drinking water. Of course, you will drop egg food altogether whilst thus feeding.

Hen Wheezing (A.G.).—Your surmise about the open window causing the bird's trouble is undoubtedly correct. Keep her fairly warm, quite free from draughts and chills, and give twenty drops of whiskey, ten of syrup of squills, and ten of glycerine in each two tablespoonfuls of its drinking water for a few days. Feed as is so often advised in this column, and give as extras half a teaspoonful of hemp seed one day, and half a teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake with five drops of sherry mixed with it the next.

Has Relapses (J.E.H.).—You evidently stop treatment too early, or fail to tone up the bird at end. First, closely examine cage to see if insects are the cause of any irritation. Keep bird fairly warm and quite free from draughts. Give a tepid bath on mild days, in which a few quassia chips have been soaked, but guard against chills following. Feed on plain Canary, with green-food ad. lib., and give half a teaspoonful of scalded rape twice a week, and a small piece of sponge cake with four drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it, and sprinkled over with gold of pleasure seed three times a week. Discontinue other foods. In the drinking water give ten drops each whiskey and glycerine, and as much chlorate of potash for a week as will cover a sixpence, and on intervening days ten drops chemical food. For a fortnight give the whiskey and glycerine as above, and one drop of eucalyptus oil, on one day; next, give twelve drops of chemical food; and the third, plain water. Repeat again and again during fortnight. After that give six drops aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a week, which should tone up the system and prevent relapse.

About Nests (H.C.B.).—Sorry, am not quite conversant with the "Scotch style" of nests you mention; I should say you should certainly soften the felt in hot water before placing on mould, and allow it to remain on mould until dry. The glue would be put on, I should say, when felt was nearly, but not quite, dry, so that the glue would dry and become hard whilst the felt finished drying. To make nests from "leather or cardboard"—I presume you mean leather-board—you would require to mould the pulp from which these boards are made into the desired shape, if you wished to do it properly. You could, at a pinch, mould the flat pieces of cardboard the same as you would felt by thoroughly saturating the board with water first. Leather nests would have to be cut in sections and sewn together like a football, and would, of course, require some skill, or knowledge of the work. Ordinary starch paste may be used for fixing swansdown linings.

A Record Layer (Perplexed).—The continuous laying such as you describe is due to an abnormally active condition of the ovaries. Such hens are often most lusty and healthful, but unfortunately are of little practical use, unless they should happen to be of more than ordinary typical excellence, when one might turn them to advantage by sitting their eggs under foster parents and "keeping them for laying." Such abnormal production would be valued in a poultry yard, but in the ordinary type of Canary it has its disadvantages. I cannot tell how to prevent it, neither do I think it would be wise to drug such a bird. If you have an outdoor aviary, or a room in which the birds can fly loose, you might put the hen there, and try the effect of more exercise.

Two Eggs in One Day (A.D.).—Assuming you made no mistake and overlooked the first egg laid, it is certainly a very uncommon thing for a Canary to lay two eggs in one day. The occurrence, however, is not wholly unprecedented. The fact that both eggs appeared to be laid before 5.30 a.m., which is earlier than the majority of single eggs are laid, would seem to point to an overnight of the first egg. When you looked in the nest the previous night it is possible there were two eggs, one of which would be hidden by a tuft of moss or hair. You can generally judge the order in which a clutch of eggs is laid by the marking—the first being the most profusely speckled, and each subsequent one lighter.

Cannot Stand (Reader).—It is possible sore feet may be the cause of this bird's trouble. Examine, and if you find them sore, bathe in a warm strong solution of boric acid for a few minutes; dry them carefully, and slightly anoint with zinc ointment. Repeat operation two or three times at intervals of three days. If feet are not sore, and bird appears very fat, treat for a week as advised to "Novice" for a glutton, and continue as below. If not fat, give every second day a small piece of sponge cake with five drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it, and half a teaspoonful of scalded rape twice a week. In drinking water give twelve drops of chemical food every second day, and on alternate days six drops of tincture of steel.

Loss of Feathers (T.F.N.).—You give not the slightest clue to the cause of the loss. See latter half of reply to "F. Wilson" in this issue, and try that treatment for a few weeks. Feed on a staple of Canary seed three parts and summer rape one part, and give a spray of green food daily—chickweed preferably. Three times a week give a small piece of sponge cake with five drops of chemical food on it. It is doubtful whether the plumage will be reproduced in any case before next moulting time.

To Baffle Red-Mite (R.T., Willenhall).—The most invaluable aid to keeping this pest at bay is to make a good beginning by thoroughly overhauling the cages and room generally, as was described in "Novices' Notebook" at the proper time. Then to continue through the season you should dust nests and spaces between cages, and the staging, if any, occasionally with fresh pyrethrum powder. As soon as the weather begins to get warm, add a few drops of essence of quassia to bath twice a week. For touching joints and corners about once a week, keep a solution of camphor in methylated spirit—an ounce of the former to half a pint of the latter. Dip a small brush in this and paint on any place likely to harbour mites. The smell will pass off very quickly, and will not harm birds. This is far and away the best thing I know. Its only weak point is that it quickly removes any kind of spirit enamels and varnish, but will not hurt oil paints and enamels. If you object to this, you can use fir tree oil in same way.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. Weston.

Bullfinches and Cochineal.

Colonel.—The cause of melanism (like albinism) is not definitely known. I should find it very difficult to believe that exposure to sunshine, "is, or may be, the cause of the loss of the rose plumage," as you put it. I believe that the tendency to either albinism or melanism is usually hereditary (constitutional). But the assumption of freakish feathering is known to follow illnesses, especially a bad moult, and also wrong feeding. That Bullfinches are liable to moult out black if fed continuously (or over freely) on hemp seed, is well known to fanciers. There is very, very little fear of the generality of healthy birds ever turning into "freaks." You seem very alarmed at the prospect, though; most people who write me seem rather pleased that they should own something out of the ordinary. Cochineal is a red colouring derived from the cochineal insect, and is not injurious. To give it in the drinking water is a well-known wheeze of the old-time Canary breeder; but it is not comparable with pepper in its colouring effects on the plumage; it usually, indeed, being given in addition thereto. It would not injure Goldfinches, I should think, or any other Finches, for that matter—if given in reasonable quantity.

Slack in Feather.

A. H.—From the additional particulars you supply, I have little hesitation in saying that it is the heated living room which keeps the Goldfinches in loose feather. You should get a syringe (any of our large dealers will supply you with a suitable one), such as barbers use, and spray the birds very lightly every morning with cold water turned just slightly milky in colour by the addition of two or three drops of Scrubb's Cloudy Ammonia. Don't half-drown the birds every time. I think you will find a course of this treatment effect a decided improvement in the birds, assuming, of course, that you are correct in stating nothing ails them, and that red mite are not troubling.

Thrushes and Rooks.

X. Y. Z.—1: In an aviary 7 by 7 by 9 ft., facing south, and devoted to one pair of birds, I do not think you would experience much difficulty in getting the two tame (hand reared) Thrushes to nest. Whether they would successfully rear the young on the ordinary soft food I am not prepared to say. You should stand a good sporting chance of their doing so, and I think you would stand an excellent chance if you could supplement it with mealworms, garden worms, and gentles or small "black-beetles," none of them difficult to obtain. 2: See reply to an enquirer on Magpies this week. You ought to hand-rear young Rooks easily on game meal (without grit), moistened with boiling water and allowed to cool, especially if you beat a hard-boiled egg into each teacupful. If you cannot get the game meal, use a good brand of terrier cakes, or ordinary dog biscuits. Occasionally stir in half-a-teaspoonful of sharp, gritty sand. Mealworms, garden worms, tiny cubes of meat, rabbit flesh, etc., and "black-beetles," will all be acceptable to growing Rooks.

To Part or Not to Part.

Penyenick.—Until one "knows" one's Finches it is imperative that they should be shut off from the hen Canary, while she is laying the eggs. This applies to Linnets, Siskins, Twites, Greenfinches, or any other mating Finches, equally as strongly as to Goldfinches. It is often necessary to separate them from the hen during greater part of the time she is building, for some will throw the nesting material out of the nest box as fast as the hen puts it in, or "rag" the nest as soon as she has it approaching completion. Such meddlesome customers I run with the hens for about an hour early morning, and in the evening only, the wired slide separating them between times (making sure, of course, that the couple are "mating" as they ought to). In cases of this kind, after the evening "session," the almost completed nest will most likely be found to have been severely mauled by the Finch, and it will be necessary for the fancier to take the nest-box out of the cage and reshape the nest with his hands (or with a hot hard-boiled egg). When the hen has laid her third egg it is unnecessary to run the Finch in with her any more. It is this oft-times necessary parting of a mating couple which leads me to always recommend beginners to start with either two or three compartment breeding cages, as to merely have to push a slide down the centre to separate the birds, and draw it out again to run them together, is much the easiest and simplest way, and a great saving of time, too. The Fancier with the one-compartment cage has to catch out his Finch every time, and unless the Finch is an "old campaigner," he does not relish this, while the hen Canary is also likely to be upset, especially if at all nervous, and the fancier happens to be a bit clumsy at the job.

Best Muling Couple for Novice.

Novice.—All things considered, I should say a healthy, steady house-moulted cock Linnet is about the best bird a novice can select to commence Mule-breeding with. Generally they are inoffensive as regards meddling with eggs and nest, and make good husbands. I have an old bird now which will both sit on the eggs and help feed the young. It sometimes happens, however, that one will pull the nest about (especially when the hen is building and sitting), and occasionally they will either break or throw out the eggs. Even these birds, however, will often make good fathers once the young hatch out. You must, as with all other Fiuches, get to know your birds' dispositions, and act accordingly. It is often dangerous, it should be noted, to try and run a Linnet with two hens in one season, for generally they do not appreciate a second wife providing the first one is to their liking. Some Goldfinches are models of good behaviour in the breeding cage; and so are odd Greenfinches. With such birds, of course, the beginner's part would be equally easy. As regards the correct time for mating, I cannot add anything to the very lengthy answer I gave "Beginner" on this point in our issue of April 18th. The "correct time" is when both the birds are ready. See also reply to "Penyenick" this week.

Young and Old Thrushes.

Novem.—1: You will find particulars of the hand-rearing process in the reply to "A. Horan" this week. I always found it very simple, if a trifle wearisome. 2: It is not safe to entirely stop the hand-feeding, so long as any of the youngsters "gape" to be fed. 3: The following is a suitable menu to wean them on to when ready to feed themselves. This stock mixture any good seller of bird foods will mix for you (store it in tins): Game (or Pheasant or Partridge) meal, six parts; ground silkworm pupae, meat meal, good ants' eggs and dried flies, one part each, by measure. Get the game (or other) meal without grit. If you have any difficulty in doing so, finely crushed puppy cakes make an excellent substitute; or the "broken" biscuit obtainable from the grocer. If the latter be used, add an extra part of meat meal, and silkworm pupae. Damp quantity required for daily use with a little water, or grated raw carrot, or cold boiled potato, or finely chopped lettuce, chickweed, watercress, or other green food in season. Vary them frequently, and add a teaspoonful of preserved egg flake, or half a hardboiled egg, twice or so a week. Give three or four mealworms daily, and any other insects you can lay hands on, also ripe fruit and berries frequently, and according to season. Black-beetles and snails (especially snails dropped into boiling water for a few minutes, then chopped up), are much relished.

Hand-rearing Thrushes and Blackbirds.

A. Horan.—This is a question I get asked an enormous number of times yearly, and I hope other readers likely to want the information will cut the reply out and keep it by them. Glad to know you have found my Lark food so successful. Blackbirds and Thrushes are very easy to rear from the nest, and many people do so on nothing but bread and milk. Equal parts of stale bread and best ants' eggs (freed from rubbish), made very moist with new milk, would be a very fair food. To rear strong, lusty youngsters, however, the method I prefer is as follows:—Boil a fresh egg ten minutes, and, when cold, well mix with a fork the yolk and a little (say a third) of the white into two crushed Osborne biscuits; add to this a tablespoonful of best ants' eggs (removing bits of stick and rubbish, if present), stirring all well together. Just before you feed, take the necessary portion of food and make it into a sloppy consistency with new milk. In hot weather (and at all times) be careful the food is always fresh and sweet. Feed a little at a time only, but very often, from dawn to dusk; and a feed after dark is not at all a bad thing. Cut a few mealworms into pieces, also, dip them into milk, and drop them into the nestlings' mouths. As the youngsters grow, too, add now and then a pinch of small but sharp and gritty sand to the food. It seems to act as a preventative of looseness of the bowels (or diarrhœa). Give also at all times flies and like small insects; and live ants' eggs if you can get them. Young birds want feeding once an hour (do not "dull" them at any time) at first; every two hours or so at later stages. Cease hand-feeding when they cease to "cry" to be fed, and are picking up food for themselves. Keep warm, cosy, and scrupulously clean. No special appliance is necessary for the feeding. I have used a large, blunted (with a pen-knife) match-stick with every success; likewise a quill tooth-pick with all sharp corners removed. The handiest implement I ever possessed, however, was a little bone mustard spoon, which I cut to a suitable shape and different sizes at each end (handle and bowl), and smoothed off with very fine glass-paper. Different fanciers have different ideas though, and once used to a certain thing cannot feed with any other. I expect many too, will be trying the glass syringe idea. Put the food well down at the back of the tongue, and always be careful not to bruise or lacerate the tender mouths of the nestlings.

To Hand Rear a Magpie.

G. G. Hay.—You should have no trouble in hand-rearing a Magpie. I well remember hearing a friend of mine say that although he could never hand-rear small birds, Jays, Jackdaws, Magpies, and the like, he found as easy to bring up as young elephants. If you mix finely-minced hard-boiled egg with an equal quantity of very stale bread crumb, and moisten it with new milk when feeding, you should get along all right. If you get several young Jackdaws, however, you will find it cheaper to use scalded and mashed up puppy biscuits (of best quality), with which you can mix the egg in the proportion of three parts biscuit to one of egg. You can give the youngsters mealworms, by all means, and smallish garden worms, cut into suitable pieces, should also certainly be supplied. Occasionally you can scrape a small piece of lean mutton or beef (or mince it up very finely) and give amongst the food; or a little tender cooked meat can be given. Personally, however, I fight shy of meat as much as possible, for I am certain it upsets the stomach of most birds (sets up diarrhœa), especially when much used raw. I prefer boiled or stewed rabbit flesh to all other, when obtainable. Mix a good big pinch of fine grit amongst the food now and again, or about half a teaspoonful of powdered cuttlefish bone. You can give the birds a drink of plain water after each meal, if you like, and you can please yourself about adding ants' eggs to the stock food. If any nestling should get a touch of diarrhœa (which is unlikely if you give the cuttlefish or grit), well mix a saltspoonful of prepared chalk powder (from any good chemist) amongst a portion of the food fed to it. Repeat after an interval, if it seems necessary. Both sexes talk, and the way to teach them is to repeat short, catchy phrases over frequently to the birds. A very big box cage is needed, or the tail feathers suffer badly. It is not easy to sex young Magpies, but the smallest invariably turn out hens. For food, when adult, see reply to "H. S. Welsh" in issue of April 11.

Linnet Canary Muling Couple.

Klondyke.—The stock seed mixture of your Linnet and Canary couple should be Canary and teazle, one and a half pints each; summer rape and charlock, half a pint each. Then make up three mixtures as follows: (a) Hemp, two parts; niger, one part; linseed, half a part by measure; (b) maw, thistle, dandelion, gold of pleasure, and lettuce equal parts of each, likewise by measure; (c) a good wild seed mixture. A heaping tablespoonful of one of these three mixtures should be given the birds every day (in a separate vessel; not with the stock mixture), taking them in turn. This treatment will bring them into the best possible condition, providing the birds are in good health, and are being kept under proper conditions. Egg bread should only be given if your Linnet is very near breeding condition, which you can tell by his song and the colour of his beak, as it will only bring your hen to nest before the Linnet is fit. If she is backward, a good teaspoonful should be given every day. All the early, young, tender dandelion leaves you can find should be gathered, likewise shepherd's purse and chickweed, and a good feed be given the birds daily. If they don't breed under this treatment, they will never breed at all.

More about Thrushes.

F. T. S.—1: To make a really good singer, a hand-reared bird always wants bringing up under the tuition of a good-noted, free singing old bird. This fact may influence your choice. 2: For hand-rearing details see other replies this week. 3: The young should be taken at the age of ten to twelve days; that is, when the pen feathers are just nicely showing through. If left too late it is troublesome at times to get them to gape for food. Still, I have had nests and been successful when some of the young have popped out over the side. 4: When the young are well on food, they soon, if in good health, begin to "record" (that is, try over their song), and the young males can be picked out by the vigorous way in which they go at it, their throats working away like the bellows of a concertina.

Brevities.

Linnet and Hen Canary (J. R. M.).—In reply to "Klondyke" in this week's issue, I give full details of the method of feeding a Linnet for mule breeding, and if you adopt that method your bird should soon come into full song. As a mate for him you will find it difficult to better a good-sized yellow hen of Norwich type, heavily variegated preferred.

Brown and Gray (Mary).—Yes: the "brown" and "gray" Linnet are one and the same bird. Linnets when young are very grey in colour; the older they get, broadly speaking, the browner they get.

Siskin Ailing (Maldon).—You did quite right to restrict the diet of the Siskin. Give teazle in addition to the canary seed. As medicine, dissolve as much sulphate of soda as will lie on a sixpence in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water. Give three or four doses on alternate days, plain water in between. A lengthy fly round a room daily might assist matters, if you can manage it for the bird.

Canary Seed (G. T. Robson).—I should not continue to use canary seed which my birds treated in the way yours have the sample sent. Try another lot of seed from a fresh place, and see how the birds get along with it. You ought to have sent some with the shell on.

Linnets Ailing (My Girl).—I only wish I could afford a girl! Reduce the proportion of rape seed, and for the English rape substitute charlock seed; also add teazle seed to the stock mixture. Give half-a-teaspoonful of maw seed daily to each bird. For 10 or 12 days add daily 10 drops of tincture of gentian to every two tablespoonfuls of their drinking water.

SNOW AND THE CUCKOO.

SIR,—It may interest you and readers of CAGE BIRDS to know, that despite the snow that covered hill and vale recently, I heard the Cuckoo several times on the 2nd of April. Is not this a rare occurrence?

CAUSE OF BIRDS GAPING.

SIR,—I should feel greatly obliged if any of your readers would tell me the reason of old and young birds gaping. I keep some upstairs in a cold room, and some in the kitchen, and they are all alike. My feed is three parts plain Canary seed and one part hemp and a little maw, rape and niga seeds.

AN EXPERIMENT ON AN EGG-BOUND HEN.

SIR,—I had a hen egg-bound on April 25th. I first applied castor oil to beak and vent, and then put a gill bottle of boiling water corked up and wrapped in flannel in cage. I then covered cage front with a woollen shawl and put the hen gently in nest. To my surprise next morning, she had laid two eggs. This is the second time I have tried this experiment with success. I always hang nest bags outside cage, as the birds are liable to get their feet entangled and hang themselves when inside.

A CANARY SEED PROBLEM.

SIR,—In reply to "Airship," permit me to say that if he gets a bucket containing some of that which is mixed with whisky (water) and throws his seed in it, the real seed will sink and the chaff will swim. Pour the liquid and the chaff off and the seed will lie at the bottom. If he wishes to dry the seed he can do so. But if he performs the experiment as quickly as possible, the seed will only become damp on the outsides and will very soon be dry again if left. If there is any dust in the mixture, he should put the seed through a seive first (before trying the trick), and if he empties it into a tin or box till he gets a quantity he will then have some worth drying when he gets the chaff out.

PROPOSED NEW SOCIETY FOR MORLEY (YORKS.)

SIR,—A meeting of the Morley fanciers was held at the Sycamore Hotel, Morley. There were about 20 present. Mr. W. Stead was voted to the chair. On Mr. Kinder's proposition, seconded by Mr. Smith, it was decided to form a society. The name was agreed on as Morley and Dis. Cage Bird Society. Mr. Stead was appointed chairman, myself secretary, and Mr. Pyrah, treasurer, all pro tem. The subscription is to be 6d. entrance fee, and 1d. a week. Our next meeting will be held at Sycamore Hotel on May 9th, at 8 o'clock prompt. It is hoped that all Morley fanciers will attend to help to make our society one of the best.

BORDER FANCY CANARY CLUB AND ITS JUDGES.

SIR,—Once again I crave space to answer the many questions asked by your correspondent, Mr. Lambie. First, he states that I can neither write well, nor think justly. I put that down to his own bad manners, though I am sorry to use such an expression. I have told him that his remarks re outside judges, etc., did not bear on the point at issue; also that the Border Fancy Club did not confer the qualifications necessary in a judge. Again, I pointed out to him that had the heading to this discussion (which is mine) been "The Border Fancy Canary and its Judges," his tirade might have been in order. I see he has now the cheek to ask you to change it! Let me tell him once for all that I have no grievance against any of the many breeders outside the ranks of the B.F.C.C., whether they are judges or not. I may also tell Mr. Lambie that I have many staunch fancier friends amongst them; indeed, more I believe than I have among the members of the club. Further, I have no interest in the B.F.C.C., so far as holding any office in it—I am only one member trying to do my duty to it. Although Mr. Lambie seems so cock sure that it might have more than the 300 members (a misstatement, this, which I will leave to some of the club officials to enlighten him upon), I admire its splendid record. I have no hesitation in saying that it has placed the Border on the lofty pedestal it now so proudly occupies. Furthermore, its handsome model (so ably portrayed in CAGE BIRDS recently by your artist, and so well commented upon) is the admiration of the bird-loving world. I held no difference of opinion with the Club previous to this rule being passed. Its great record has been gained by the unlimited freedom it gave to its members, and I am indeed sorry to see this rule recorded in its minutes, which might cause its future members and the rising generation to pause and wonder. There is one point in my first letter whereon I was at fault. I thought the rule restricted judges to only two shows during the season; but from letters I have received from Mr. Jamieson and others, this is not so. A member can take on as judge as many variety shows as he chooses, also club shows, and is only restricted to two open shows in the season, whereat the club patronage is granted. This gives a judge more scope, and if he is popular he may be out as often as he feels inclined. I apologise for making this mistake. By my reference to "novices," I intended to indicate a member who had not been out as a judge before, and not a novice breeder of this variety. In conclusion, I may say I hold the same views now that I did two years ago, when a somewhat similar proposal was brought forward at the general meeting, that the club select from amongst its members its own club judges. This was then defeated. When I spoke against it, I stated that each member paid the same entrance fee, viz., 2s. 6d., therefore let all have an equal chance of sharing the honour, if there were any derived from being asked to judge, and that I thought the societies who asked our patronage might well be allowed their own discretion to choose whom they thought would suit them best. Now, if Mr. Lambie wishes to continue this correspondence, as far as your humble servant is concerned, he must confine himself to my previous letters, wherein I state that I wish to know how this rule was going to advance the club's interests. I will answer arguments on this point, but will not be bullied to answer any question touching on any subject, and whether I have a grievance against it or not.

ROLLER CANARIES AT THE PALACE SHOW.

SIR,—I may say I quite agree for Mr. Robson to act as joint arbitrator, and will abide by whatever decision you arrive at, without any appeal at law.

WALTER WHITTAKER.

[We have received a further letter from Mr. Whittaker, and one from Mr. T. W. Walton, bearing on matters connected with this case, but as the same is now in the arbitrators' hands, and sub judice as it were, we are unable to publish them.—EDITOR.]

[Just as we go to press, we hear that Mr. Robson has consented to act with ourselves as joint arbitrators in this matter, and we may be able to publish the result in our next issue.—EDITOR.]

A LINNET AND GOLDFINCH PROBLEM.

SIR,—I see several of your readers are wanting to know how to keep Linnets in song and the best way of feeding. I have been a Linnet fancier for eight years, and have had good birds as well as bad ones, so I will give them my idea on feeding and they may take it for what it is worth. I might say that nearly all the members of the society, to which I belong, use the same kind of seed. We always keep the birds and cages clean and then there is not much fear of red mite. We spray them once or twice a week and feed on three parts English rape seed and one part Canary with a little dandelion seed and lettuce seed two or three times a week. I am sure that if your readers try this, they will agree that the birds will sing better than on anything else.

ELSE CAR.

SIR,—Seeing the correspondence re Linnet feeding in CAGE BIRDS, I thought my experience (a novice) might be interesting to some of your readers. I bought a fresh-caught Linnet for 6d. in Newcastle Bird Market, in November, and fed him on Canary and rape chiefly, giving linseed, inga, teazle and a little maw and hemp occasionally (very little hemp to avoid getting too fat). He is kept in a very cold room which unfortunately is a little damp. During March I gave him, as a treat, a little dandelion seed every three or four days, and this brought him into good breeding condition, so I paired him to a buff Yorkshire hen about the third week of March and they started house-keeping at once. She laid four eggs on the 11th, 12th, 13th, and 14th, and hatched three Mules on the 22nd. One looks clear and the other two are dark. The hen had just finished sitting on four eggs from a Yorkshire cock, which were unfertile owing to being paired too early I think. The Linnet sat on the edge of the nest all the 14 days and is now helping to feed the young ones, which I hope to rear in spite of the snow and frost we have had during the last week. I think this is very early for Linnet Mules in the North, and should like to know if any of your readers have got any yet. I thank you for all the information I have had from your useful paper, which has often saved me a bird, and has been my only guide to bird-keeping.

J. E. ATKINSON.

THE REMOVAL OF BIRDS.

SIR,—I should be glad if any of your readers could tell me the best mode of removing my birds with their young. A Norwich hen's clutch is due to hatch on May 4th, and that of a Yorkshire hen on May 11th. I have to remove my home, within the course of two or three weeks, which necessitates a railway journey of 90 miles. I trust some fancier can help me.

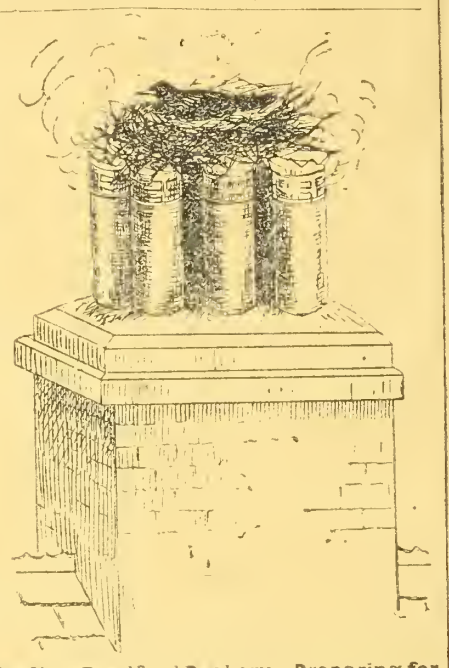
ROOKS NEST ON A CHIMNEY TOP.

SIR,—The note I sent you a few weeks ago with reference to the pair of Rooks building their nest on a chimney pot, at the top of Washington Street, Bradford, was received with evident misgiving by many fanciers, the general opinion seeming to be that the pair would be Jackdaws, such a thing as Rooks building in a place of this description being considered absurd. Jokingly, I suggested that the pair anticipated cold and unseasonable weather, and had evidently hit upon this, therefore, as an ideal place, seeing that probably a little artificial heat would be welcome for the successful rearing of the brood.



The New Bradford Rookery. Preparing for the time when the trees are a relic of the past; or is it an incubator?

This has once again proved the correctness of the well-known adage: "Many true words are spoken in jest," as the weather during the past week would have done credit to Christmas times, as much as eight degrees of frost being recorded on a thermometer placed outside on Friday morning, April 24th. The pair of Rooks are now busily engaged feeding their family, and the result is being eagerly watched by fanciers residing in the immediate vicinity. The enclosed sketch of the situation may not be without interest.

SAMUEL DEAN.

A WORD FOR VARIEGATED BIRDS.

SIR,—I was delighted to see such an excellent drawing of my variegated Norwich on the front page of CAGE BIRDS. I am rather fond of a variegated bird, and never hesitate to exhibit a typical specimen. There are, I know, a number of fanciers who run away with the idea that a variegated bird stands no chance of getting first in a class wherein clears are eligible to compete. So far this has not been my experience; as a matter of fact I have been fortunate enough to win many firsts in A.V. classes with variegated birds, under such judges as Messrs. Gardner, Heath, House, Mackley and Robson, and I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion, not one of the judges named would think of letting a clear bird close their eyes to a more typical and better qualitied variegated specimen. Judging from the number of would-be purchasers of variegated birds this season, I cannot help thinking that fanciers are awakening to the fact that they cannot make very rapid progress without some green blood in their stock. I would strongly advise novice breeders of the Plainhead Norwich, who are trying to build up a stud, not to be led to believe that the variegated birds are not wanted to breed exhibition specimens. In order to confirm that I practise what I preach, I can truthfully state that out of sixteen pairs of birds I am putting up this season, there are only two pairs where both birds are clears, and in those two pairs there is a very large percentage of green blood. My first nest of youngsters hatched yesterday, April 25th. I examined four more nests of eggs this morning, and found one with five fertile eggs and other three with four fertile in each nest, the thermometer in my bird-room standing at 59 degrees.

PRIZE-MONEY AT GREENWICH SHOW.

SIR,—I notice in last week's issue of CAGE BIRDS, that the Greenwich and Deptford club is under new management. I should like to know if the present hon. secretary is going to pay the prize-monies from their November show? Myself and wife obtained two first and two thirds, and I have not received anything at present.

HENRY LOWE.

TWINS.

SIR,—I am sending to you for inspection a freak of nature—it consists of twin Norwich Plainheads. I thought very little about it at the time, but having opened the egg, just threw it away in the refuse pail. On letting some of my brother fanciers know about it, however, they advised me to send it on to you, Mr. Editor, as they had never seen the like of it. I had a nest of three eggs due to hatch on the 23rd April. As two hatched out, I was wondering why the third was never hatching, and on breaking the shell, this is what I got: twins. Unfortunately, they were both dead.

Kirriemuir. E. R. DUNDASS.

[The egg Mr. Dundass sends contains two perfectly formed chicks. "Twins," of course, are rare, but several instances have from time to time been recorded in our columns of an egg containing two youngsters being found, and in one or two cases both chicks have hatched out and been reared.—EDITOR.]

A NEW SOCIETY FOR FROME AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—A cage bird fanciers' meeting was held at the Mechanics' Hall, on April 7th, to consider the formation of a society. There was a good attendance of local fanciers, and Mr. J. Tottle was voted to the chair. After a discussion, it was unanimously agreed to form a society, and to call it the Frome and District Cage Bird Society, with a 15-mile radius for membership, the annual subscription to be 2s. 6d. The officials were then selected as follows: Chair, Mr. J. Tottle; secretary, Mr. W. Minty; assist. secretary, Mr. M. J. Stock; treasurer, Mr. M. S. Stock; committee: Miss Walker, Messrs. W. H. King, W. Wheeler, A. Edgell, G. Moore. It was then decided to hold a First Feather Show early in July, the date to be fixed at the next meeting. Twenty-two gave in their names for membership, most of whom paid their subscriptions. A very interesting meeting was brought to a close by a vote of thanks to Mr. J. Tottle for presiding, and bringing the object forward. The Secretary would be glad to hear of any fancier in the district wishing to become a member. Next meeting, May 5th, 8 p.m., at the headquarters, White Hart Hotel, Frome.

W. MINTY, Hon. Secretary.

MULES AND HYBRIDS: WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE?

SIR,—In reply to my request, Mr. Verrall states "I think the Canary is a Hybrid on account of the sports that have been produced from it. Fertile Hybrids, amongst other feathered stock, sport in many ways as can be seen in Pigeons, etc." Mr. V. is nothing if not original. In the first case he would have a hard line drawn between the Mule and Hybrid on account of one section's possibilities of reproduction. In his reply, however, he modifies this view and states "it would be preferable to name all crosses in which one parent is a Canary as Mules." I think this is generally understood in the Fancy, and with it I agree, recognising its usefulness. But why call the progeny from Canary-Bullfinch a Hybrid? This appears to be overlooked by many of your correspondents. Personally, I place no more importance on the word Mule, apart from the show bench, than I should the word brancher, viz., a young bird, seeing that the Natural History section of the British Museum discard it, calling the various crosses "Hybrids," whether they have asses for one of their parents or Canaries. Mr. H. Morrison, please note. Harking back to the opening of this letter, the same learned body describes the various fancy breeds of Canaries and Pigeons, as having been produced from a single wild stock respectively. Mr. V., kindly note—this subject appears to be quite a thorn in the side of the old fanciers, and I should feel very grateful if Mr. Weston would give his version. To me, all Mules are Hybrids, but all Hybrids are not Mules.

THE CAGE BIRD UNION AND CLASHING OF SHOWS.

SIR,—Your correspondent "Disgusted" may take some small consolation from the fact that he is not the only one disgusted with the C.B.U.; the feeling seems to be the same with a number of the cage bird fanciers. I am very much surprised that the C.B.U. has existed so long, for it is decidedly useless as far as any benefit to the cage bird Fancy is concerned. It seems a mystery to a great many how and why it originated. And when it comes to commanding societies as to when they may and may not hold their shows, I think it is quite time to advise the C.B.U. to mind its own affairs (if it has any) unless it can prove good reason for its governorship. Societies seem to meekly submit to being tied down by the C.B.U. and pay a fee for the privilege of forfeiting half their freedom as exhibitors. Take for instance a town where there are two societies—one affiliated, and one not—some of the fanciers are members of both societies, and although the shows are in the same town, these members must only show at one. It is to be hoped that fanciers will see the uselessness of this cage bird Parliament, and ignore it.

REDPOLL AS ITS OWN SURGEON.

SIR,—I came across this letter, signed "C.C." in a Scottish contemporary the other day, and thought it might interest you. "C.C." says:—I have had a Redpoll for some two years. Occasionally it was allowed out of its cage, and permitted to fly through the room, but it developed a pertinacious habit of keeping out as long as possible, and had many times to be caught by hand. On one memorable occasion it took refuge at night on the top of a mahogany curtain-pole, where it eyed all approaches anxiously. There it fell asleep. Becoming troubled with a bad dream apparently, it lost its foothold, and tumbled to the floor, where it was picked up and transferred to its cage, a very astonished bird. The Redpoll then began some acrobatic tricks, but in the process of performing an intricate feat one of its claws was caught in a flaw in the wood, and ere it could be released was twisted. A simple remedy was applied, which relieved it slightly but the Redpoll, deeming its foot an encumbrance, applied its bill to the afflicted part, the result being that in the course of 10 days or so it divided the tendons which held the claws, and was then left with a mere stump. It now moves about the cage brightly and sprightly, happy on one foot. But it has developed a very strange habit—is it a traditionary one, a relic of its predecessors' wild state? After partaking of its morning titbit of egg and bread crumb, it drops what it cannot eat into its water glass. It never does this when any one is in the apartment. Does it fancy it is burying the food out of sight to obtain it when hungry, or is this a habit of more than the Redpoll? I am wondering now if I put a tiny piece of wood, some lint and thread in its cage, whether it will be able to manufacture a stilt for itself. But, seriously, I shall be glad to know from other readers whether any of their feathered friends have also proved themselves surgeons in similar circumstances.

BIRD LIFE IN SURREY: WHY ARE HERONS SHOT?

SIR,—I observed two Swallows flying on April 26th. We know that "one Swallow does not make a summer," and now I am convinced that neither do two: for when I saw them there were several inches of snow on the ground. I also heard the Cuckoo on the following day, just as it was getting dark. Bird life is very plentiful in this district, and no one interested in birds can fail to enjoy a ramble through the heather, and along the stream that runs close by. Blackbirds, Thrushes, Linnets, Wagtails (the pied variety), Chaffinches, Greenfinches and Wrens seem to be the most numerous; but a few Goldfinches, and Bullfinches can generally be seen. Hawfinches, I have never seen here, nor yet many Bramblefinches. There are plenty of Green Woodpeckers, which are known as the "Yaffle," but very few of the other two varieties. Along the stream, may generally be seen Wild Duck, Dabchick, and Moorhens; and frequently a Kingfisher may be seen swiftly flying a few inches above the surface of the water. Herons may be seen at times on the banks of the stream, but I am afraid they are killed without mercy by the keeper if seen, trout being more important to him. I was walking by some watercress beds here the other day, and I observed two Herons, which had been shot and hung upon poles for the purpose of frightening others away. Could any of the readers of CAGE BIRDS inform me whether they do any harm to watercress beds or not? It seems a great pity for such comparatively rare birds to be killed without reason. The Nightingale will soon be here, and we shall have plenty of evening entertainments then; I have been in many parts of the country, but have never heard so many singing at the same time as can be heard here on any fine night in season. In conclusion, may I thank you for the many treats you give us in CAGE BIRDS. Although I have lived amongst birds all my life, I have been educated since taking your paper. With best wishes for its future, I remain,

A DULWICH AND PECKHAM MATTER.

SIR,—Since my communication of last week in reply to the impudent suggestion contained in a letter signed "Tit Lark," that the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. should drop the word "Dulwich" in its title because, forsooth, the Fancy might possibly confuse the club with a rival society recently formed in the district under the style of the Dulwich O.S., certain things have come to my knowledge which, if true, throw considerable light upon the motive of the writer. Rumour has it that the new society is seeking affiliation with the C.B.U., in view of their proposed open show, which has been announced with such a loud flourish of trumpets, and in order to facilitate matters an endeavour has, it is alleged, been made to create an impression that the old Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. is no longer in the district, and that the Dulwich O.S. is the only club in the locality catering for the cage bird Fancy. This, of course, is not so. The Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., although having removed from the old headquarters to more centrally situated premises, is still in the electoral division of Dulwich, and many of its most influential members are old and respected residents of Dulwich, and it would, I think, be a gross injustice were the C.B.U. to lend its powerful influence either by licence or affiliation to any new club in Dulwich, seeing that the district is already well catered for by the old Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., which has belonged to the Union ever since that body came into existence.

ANONYMOUS.

SIR,—My innocent suggestion seems to have created consternation in the ranks of the D. and P.C.B.S. Strange to say, like myself, they prefer a nom-de-plume. It is very lucky for me that I did so, as my body is not at the disposal of anyone at present, thanks. I find it still remains a fact, that there is really only one Dulwich Society, viz., the D.O.S., which, if carefully analysed, would prove to be in reality the old society and not a new one. When I wrote my last letter, I little dreamt that I had dropped a bomb amongst a certain section, who it seems have some imaginary grievance. Why so much bitterness of feeling? In answer to "Anonymous" that we should substitute Herne Tavern (Dulwich O.S.) for D.O.S. I will endeavour to use my influence towards that end if he will promise me that his society shall henceforth be known as the Montpelier Arms (Peckham) C.B.S. This would be a capital advertisement for both houses, eh! Secondly, Mr. J. W. Cranfield's statement contains several inaccuracies, and I should like to inform him that the D.O.S. are still on their own doorsteps. Does he know that the worthy secretaries live in Dulwich, also the President, Treasurer, several vice-Presidents (including the President of the late D. and P.C.B.S.), the chairman of the committee, and six committeemen, and that amongst the officials are the "founders" of the D. and P.C.B.S., and five who were elected by ballot to serve the D. and P.C.B.S. during 1908? This proved the confidence of the members of that society.

TIT LARK.

EGG AND EGG SUBSTITUTES.

SIR,—Pigeon's milk is a thing I was sent for on April 1st, in the middle of the last century; I did not get any. But now bird fanciers are offered bird milk to feed young Canaries with. I have some, and find it is a powder, which tastes just like cream. Canaries eat it freely mixed with powdered biscuit. The directions state that the bread it is used with should not be moistened; but when using dry powdered biscuit some moisture must be added, in my opinion, or the birds will waste it. For years I have known that hard-boiled egg alone is not good as a daily food for breeding birds. When I first bred Canaries, bread soaked in cold water and then squeezed dry was mixed with the egg. At a later date dry crumb bread was advised, and after that time powdered biscuit. If plenty of biscuit is used there is not much danger of the egg doing any harm, as one ordinary sized egg is enough for six pairs of Canaries. An egg substitute for the fancier is needed. "Woodland Bird Milk" should be just the thing, especially for those who do not approve of using egg.

MULE AND CANARY BREEDING IN AN OUTDOOR AVIARY.

SIR,—Some of your readers may be interested to hear that I have two fine young Mules about 10 days old in my outdoor aviary, and three other hen Canaries about due to batch. The aviary is a compact little building 7 ft. by 7 ft. by 3 ft., and in it I have four hen Canaries, one hen Linnet, two cock Goldfinches, and two cock Greenfinches. Each cock bird had selected different hens, and there is no fighting to speak of. I may as well say that the aviary is in a chilly aspect during the winter, as it does not get a gleam of sunshine till February. Yet the birds were in the pink of condition when the spring arrived, which proves how hardy Canaries are. I suppose it is an early season as I had not hoped for fertile eggs in an outdoor aviary so soon as this.

"CHICK."

MORE TROUBLE IN IRELAND.

SIR,—Mr. Devitt's letter is a treat, and all the members now await the secretary's explanation. What are the president and vice-Presidents doing to allow the chairman to remain under suspension? And for what?—telling the truth and exposing the doings of the 'family party." Anybody with half an eye can see through the working of the non-colour fed classes during the last season. Outside the open classes, there was no real competition. Would it not be better to confine the competition for the challenge cup to unrestricted classes? As it is, anyone can show either colour or non-colour fed birds in the open classes, whereas the colour fed birds are, of course, debarred from the non-colour-fed classes, and members who have colour-fed their birds get victimised by dodges like these complained of. Isn't it time the constitution of the committee was revised? The rules say there shall be sixteen members of committee, eight resident in Dublin, and eight drawn from the country "with power to add to their number." The Dublin members of the committee control all the club business, with the result that the four comprising the family party, by using their influence, get another couple of pals "adopted" on the committee and proceed to boss the chairman and everyone else. Members should see that it would be in the interests of the club to elect a committee that would be independent of these people, and the power to add to their number should be taken away, otherwise a bare majority of one can entirely change its constitution, and flout the rest of its members for the whole of the year. I wonder if the members of the Y.C.C. in England would tolerate such a state of things?

FEATHERS.

[We have received a set of verses bearing on the above matter, but as same reaches us unsigned, and, moreover, is distinctly libellous in character, we cannot print it.—EDITOR.]

SIR,—In last week's CAGE BIRDS, I notice a letter from Mr. Devitt, late Chairman of the Y.C.C. of I., and must only say that same is quite in keeping with his conduct as "Chairman." Ever since he was elected, there has been nothing but bickering going on, and the feeling of the club at large now is one of relief since his suspension. Regarding the accusations Mr. Devitt makes against the secretary, same are frivolous, and there is not much danger of Mr. D. losing his fiver. What I want to know is:—"What does Mr. Devitt want"? Are we to understand that no person but he is capable of summing up the points gained for the Y.C.C. cup? Perhaps this is so! But seeing each person interested is fully aware of the conditions under which the points may be gained, it does seem a little extraordinary that Mr. D. should worry so, and rush into print upon, what after all, is a mere triviality. If his action is not to draw public attention to himself, then we must conclude that it is a matter of childish jealousy; he (Mr. D.) having last season tried unsuccessfully to lift the cup, and having failed, sold off all his birds and going completely out of the fancy. What a different state of affairs between this and the winners of the cup this season; they, like sportsmen, though beaten last year, come up smiling the next season, and because they exhibited in non-fed classes, they are now subjected to these innuendoes of Mr. Devitt's. There is no rule forbidding members showing in non-fed classes, and some of the points gained by 1906-7 winner were so obtained. The whole thing is nonsensical, but no doubt Mr. Devitt's wounded "dignity" is no small matter, and cannot be fully appreciated by anyone except himself.

A NON-OFFICIAL.

[Concerning the above subject, a long letter has reached us which has two endings—one sheet signed with the writer's name, the other with a nom-de-plume. Naturally we are at a loss to know which ending it is intended should be published, but in any case we feel we must point out to the writer that as he is confessedly not a member of the Y.C.C. of Ireland, it is difficult to see what ground he has for intervening in matters concerning the management of the club.—EDITOR.

ARTIFICIAL HEAT AND CANARY BREEDING.

SIR,—Having taken in CAGE BIRDS and other fancy papers for the past twelve years and having bred Canaries during the whole of that time, I would like to thank you and your very many correspondents for hints that have been very helpful to me and the numerous other fanciers. To me, it appears like brother helping brother. Now, in exchange, I will try to give a little of my experience re artificial heat, if you think it will be of any use to my brother fanciers. I would like the reader just to picture my bird-room; it is built, unfortunately, on very heavy soil with window plump east and door in the north, the place round about us being, too, very open—not a very desirable place you will say. I will admit that, but it has this advantage: it is a grand place to breed in in the heat of summer. But, you will say, how about the winter? I say at once I have never used any artificial heat, and I have only lost two birds out of forty this winter, and they were rather weakly. I did move a few into a spare room in my house owing to the birds being overstocked, but no artificial heat was used there. Some will say I know that is very well for Common Canaries, but high-class Canaries would never stand it. Let me say they will, and will be all the better. That is my experience any way. Herewith I send (not necessarily for publication) the name of the exhibitor of a bird I bought in April, 1907, which took 1st and special, Crystal Palace, 1st and special Cheltenham, 1st and special Manchester, 3rd Scottish National, and got a good place at Nottingham, besides several other prizes in 1906 and 1907. He had that treatment this winter, and I looked at the eggs from his mate quite recently, and I found four good out of a possible four; so it does not look as if cold hurts good, strong healthy birds, does it?

Canaries : Their Management & Exhibition.

By J. B. WATERMAN (Dulwich).

This is the Essay awarded FIRST PRIZE in "Cage Birds" Competition in Section One. Readers should note the announcement concerning this Competition which appears on page 433 this week.

I purpose in this essay to treat of Canaries from the point of view of the novice, and whilst their is no royal road to success, I trust the information I shall endeavour to impart will materially assist the young beginner to make such satisfactory headway in the Fancy as to induce him or her to seriously take up this one of the most instructive, entertaining and ennobling hobbies known to mankind.

Ignorance not a Virtue.

So much has been written from time to time on the subject of the breeding and management of birds, that one would have thought there was very little else to be said on the matter; but it is surprising what a lot of ignorance still exists on the subject, even amongst people who have kept a few birds of the ordinary domestic type for a number of years. Only recently a man who I know for a fact has kept Canaries for a couple of decades, came into my bird-room, and, pointing to a heavily variegated Yorkshire, remarked with all seriousness, "That's a fine Mule!" I was naturally astonished, but not more so than my friend, when I informed him the "Mule" was as pure a Canary as ever was bred I believe the extraordinary idea is fairly prevalent amongst a certain class that unless the plumage of a Canary be quite clear, the bird must necessarily be a Mule.

The Canary's Primitive State.

For the purposes of the essay, I think it will be best to start with the consideration of the wild Canary, and trace its history to the present time. As is pretty generally known, this bird is of great antiquity, and is mentioned in records dating as far back as 1600. It has been a moot point whether the bird gave its name to the Canary Islands, whence large numbers came, or the Islands gave their name to the birds.

Its introduction into Europe, according to historians, was brought about in this manner: — Some three centuries and a half ago a ship loaded with fruit and wild Canaries was wrecked on the Isle of Elba, and the birds escaped. They found the climate of Elba agreeable to them, settled down in the shady groves and orchards, and quickly multiplied by thousands. The natives, attracted by their sweet song, soon commenced to trap the little feathered musicians, and the sale of the birds to European customers was the source of much revenue.

The wild Canary was not the slender graceful bird that we know it now, and in colour some were ashen grey, whilst others were olive-green. The change to yellow, of course, has been brought about by domestication, artificial feeding, and scientific breeding, and the present-day Canary is to its humble progenitor much like what the cultivated rose is to its common wild namesake of the hedgerows.

As showing how highly a Canary was esteemed in the sixteenth century, it may be stated that in a recent volume of Historical Manuscripts, preserved by the Earl of Ancaster, the following entry occurs with reference to household expenses:—"1560—2; to a shipman which brought her ladyship a Canary byrde, 20s." Money, of course, was worth more in those days than now, as will be realised when it is stated that 6s. would buy a cow.

The Advance of the Canary.

The evolution of the Canary has been wonderful, and it seems strange that amongst the leading varieties about twenty-five years back were the Turncrest, the Quaker, and the Glasgow Don—a trio which has been reformed out of all knowledge. The leading present-day varieties are the Norwich Plainhead, Yorkshire, Crests, Scotch Fancy, Belgian, Border Fancy, Cinnamon, Lizard, Green, Lancashire, and last, but by no means least, the London Fancy. A praiseworthy effort has recently been made to encourage the breeding of the last-named, and there are many veterans in the Fancy who would like to see this handsome bird, so much in vogue amongst the weavers of Spitalfields, in a by-gone time, again provided for on the show benches.

There's Money in it.

The financial possibilities of the Canary-breeding industry was amply exemplified at the recent Paisley Show, when a pair of Scotch Fancies were claimed at the catalogue price of £50 each, and the owner, Mr. W. McClure, a respected fancier "Across the Border," is stated to have said he was very sorry to part with the birds. The clever sketch in CAGE BIRDS representing Mr. Mc Clure holding aloft the bag containing the "filthy lucre" really "made my mouth water," and it should act as an incentive to all beginners to strive after the success that has attended the efforts of this worthy Scotsman. I believe Messrs. Mackley Bros. some years ago sold a noted Crest Canary for £50, and Mr. J .S. Shearman recently disposed of a Canary at the Yarmouth show for £25.

Homes for the Birds.

The first consideration when taking up bird-keeping is the housing accommodation and cages. If a room can be set apart for the birds all the better. Failing this, a nice snug corner in the kitchen or living room will answer the purpose very well, as I have known good birds to be bred and reared under these latter conditions. Should, however, a separate room be available, let it, if possible, face the south or south-west, as then it gets most sun and light—two very essential things in the production of good, healthy stock. I am no believer in artificial heat, and if the thermometer can be kept from falling below 38 degrees Fah., the birds will take no harm.

Stout shelves should be placed round the room for the accommodation of the cages. These latter should be double-breeders, not less than 36ins. long, 18ins. high, and 10ins. from back to front. They should be fitted with movable wire fronts, so that they may be easily cleaned out; and they have this additional advantage, that they can be used all the year round both for breeding and flight purposes.

If one cannot make one's own cages, there are plenty of reputable manufacturers advertising in CAGE BIRDS, who would be glad to supply them. But a good outfit should be procured at the start, as this will prove the cheapest in the long run.

The Selection of Birds.

Assuming the room and cages are ready, the next thing is the birds. Now, most fanciers have a particular liking for a certain variety. I myself love the Yorkshire bird, but Canaries are all very beautiful, and the beginner can choose from the list enumerated above the type he wishes to adopt. If he have plenty of spare time to devote to training operations, I should strongly recommend the beginner to take up with the Yorkshire. Otherwise it would be better to take up with any of the other varieties.

The mind having been made up on this important point, communicate with one of the leading breeders of the particular variety (many of them advertise in CAGE BIRDS), explain what you want and the amount you are prepared to pay; but above all things give the best price you can afford, and have the birds on approval.

An Important Matter.

With the birds comfortably housed, we next come to the question of feeding. This, as will be readily understood, is a very important matter, for upon it depends failure or success in the hobby. As no two fanciers seem able to agree as to what constitutes a proper "feed" for Canaries. I will give my own method, which I have successfully pursued for a great number of years.

Each bird should have a good supply every morning of the best Spanish Canary seed, giving every other morning a small pinch of German rape seed. On the days the latter is not given, let each bird have a small teaspoonful of the following mixture:—Equal parts German rape, niger, linseed, maw, red and white millet, and gold of pleasure. The last-mentioned is a fine conditioner, and, given liberally, puts that fine gloss on the plumage that judges so much like to see.

I am not a great believer in much green food, and for this I prefer home-grown rape seedlings and dandelion leaves, during spring (making sure the food is free of frost), young lettuce or chickweed during the summer, and ripe apple during winter.

Breeding Preparations.

Early in March the birds must be got ready for breeding duties, and in addition to the above food, must have a little egg and biscuit made thus:—The yoke of one hard-boiled egg and four Osborne biscuits ground up finely with a fork. The cock birds should have a teaspoonful twice a week and the hens the same quantity once a week. This treatment will get them nicely forward by about March 25th, when, if the weather be open, the birds may be safely paired.

This is the modus operandi. Place the slide through the centre of the flight or breeder, and put the cock bird on one side and the hen on the other. If they are ready for matrimonial duties, his lordship will at once make advances, endeavouring to attract her ladyship's attention by carolling forth his song and pacing the perches with much gusto, and saying as plainly as possible, "Barkis is willin'."

Should the hen approve of her proposed partner's conduct, she will intimate her willingness to take him "for better or for worse," by chirping merrily in reply, meanwhile flapping her wings energetically. When the birds act thus, there is no doubt it is a match. The slide may then be withdrawn, and the contract will be complete.

Should the course of true love run smooth, they will in a week or a fortnight commence building a nest. I find the earthenware nest-pans lined with swansdown the best, and for nesting material I give the birds charpie, as I find this does not encourage the loathsome red mite so much as the old-fashined cow-hair. Hence it is used very extensively by big German breeders.

A Remarkable Book on British Birds.

The issue of an entirely new and really magnificent work on the Birds of Great Britain (order Passeres), of which the text has been especially written by Dr. Butler, and the full-page plates of Birds and figures of eggs have been lithographed in natural colours from coloured drawings by H. Gronwald and F. W. Frohawk, M.B.O.U., F.E.S., is an event that will awaken interest not only among ornithologists, but amongst all earnest students of Natural History in the Kingdom.

The author, Dr. A. G. Butler, Ph.D., F.L.S., F.Z.S., M.B.O.U., late of the British Museum (Natural History), is well known to ornithologists as the author of "Foreign Finches in Captivity," "A Handbook of British Oology," &c., &c. The plates are drawn expressly for this work by two of the first ornithological artists of the day, who have intimate and life-long experience of British birds in their native haunts, and have access to the vast resources of the British Museum, as well as having the finest collections of living birds in the country at their command. There are considerably over a hundred full-page plates of birds, and two hundred and fifty-five figures of eggs. Perhaps it is, after all, the supreme

that will serve to distinguish this beautiful edition from all other ornithological works. Every species of British bird must be figured in colours if a work is to be complete. Reproduced in Nature's colours by chromo-lithography, these plates are so exquisitely and accurately printed that it is almost impossible, even for an expert to detect any difference between them and the original water colours. The work contains an exact drawing of each Passerine bird included as British: the greater number are life-size, but the scale is given when the birds are drawn smaller than life. The egg-plates are beautifully printed in Nature's colours, and form one of the most complete series of Passerine egg-plates ever issued, giving variations in the form, markings, and colouration of the same species; a figure of the egg of every Passerine bird breeding in the British Isles is included.

For all Earnest Ornithologists.

Enough has been said to show that this fine edition is a necessity in the library of every serious ornithologist. Its outward presentment is admirable in every way. The type is new, and cast especially for this edition. The figures of birds are printed on the finest prepared plate paper: the paper on which the eggs are printed has been manufactured expressly for this work.

This is an opportunity to possess the most recent and up-to-date work on Ornithology (and the only one treating of and illustrating the entire range of Passerine bird life with their nests and eggs in Nature's colours) which should not be missed by ornithologists, the trustees of Public and Private Libraries, scholars in the great Public Schools, and by the reading public throughout the British Isles.

Viscount Llandaff writes:

"It is far and away the best popular work on the subject, and I shall certainly make it my business to induce all my friends to subscribe."

The "Field":

"... Mr. Butler has produced a very beautiful work which will appeal to all lovers of bird life, and especially to those who want accurate portraits of the feathered visitors to their gardens and homesteads."

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

AFFAIRS of the Y.C.C. must now claim the attention of fanciers for the time being. The voting papers for the election of officers must be returned on Saturday, May 2nd, and any suggested alterations of rules, etc., should be sent in to the secretary, Mr. John Greaves, in time for inclusion on the agenda for the annual general meeting, to be held at headquarters, on May 9th. As rules can only be altered at the annual meeting, it behoves all fanciers with ideas that may benefit the club to forward same for open discussion by the members. And any fancier who intends joining will be heartily welcomed.

THE Bradford and County B.B. and Mule Club held their first annual general meeting on Saturday last. There was not a big attendance, considering the amount of interest that has been taken in the birds during the past season. The secretary read his report, which was considered very satisfactory, the members having shown exceptionally well at the shows held under the patronage of the club. The title of the club came up for consideration, and was eventually altered to "The Yorkshire County B.B. and M.C." Next the subscription was discussed, and it was ultimately decided that it be 2s. 6d. per annum for exhibiting members, and 1s. per annum for honorary members. The election of officers for season 1908-1909 completed the business.

IN reference to my note of April 11th, anent the Barnsley Society, it pleased me immensely to see the letter of the treasurer, stating that they are now on a sounder footing than they have been for four years past. It was far from my intention to write anything that might prove detrimental to the society, but simply to try and "stir up" the fanciers in the district to take a little more interest in its working. I hope and trust that now they will prosper exceedingly.

THE Great Horton Good Intent O.S. had a lecture on Saturday evening last, the subject being "The Yorkshire," and the lecturer, Mr. W. Cruise, of West Bowling. A great many questions were asked, and were ably answered by Mr. Cruise, and altogether a most enjoyable evening was spent.

"STRAIGHT 'UN."

THE YOUNG NATURALIST.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given each week for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age, and must state from where stories are taken.

Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

Polly Asks for Mamma.

Pretty Polly was the pet of a little girl named Jessie. She was a peevish child, and whenever she was in trouble would cry "I want my mamma." One day Pretty Polly had a nut which she could not crack, and after several useless tricks, shouted out, "I want my mamma."—Sent by J. Coley (no age given), 45, Reddal Hill Road, Old Hill.

*Not Santa Claus.

On the 21st of April, at about 4 a.m., we were much surprised to hear squeaking noises in our bedroom chimney. My brother put his arm up the chimney, and brought down a beautiful Starling. Its feathers shone like silk. We put it into a cage for a few days; then my father gave the bird its liberty.—Sent by Sidney J. Lucas (age 11), 20, Moit Street, Coventry.

The Butterfly's Lecture.

A Humming Bird met a butterfly, and being pleased with its beauty, made an offer of perpetual friendship. "I cannot think of it," replied the butterfly, "as you once spurned me, and called me a crawling dolt." "Impossible!" exclaimed the Humming Bird, "for I have always admired your beauty." "Perhaps you do so now," said the other; "but when you slighted me I was a caterpillar. So let me give you a bit of advice: Never insult the humble, as they may some day become your superiors."—Sent by Edwin Parrington (age 4 years), 102, Eaton Mews, near Eaton Square, London, S.W.

*"One at a time, please."

An old lady, who lived opposite a large music hall, kept an Amazon Parrot. Polly was very familiar with the words, "One at a time, please." One day, whilst Polly was having her usual walk around the house, the door was opened and she flew out. When the lady found out that her pet was gone, she went out in seach of it, but imaginc her surprise when she discovered Polly surrounded by about a dozen Crows, all of them trying to obtain some of Polly's pretty feathers. Polly seemed to be alarmed at their behaviour, but in spite of this she was calling out at the top of her voice, "One at a time, please."—Leonard Whitaker (age 14), 234, St. Margaret's Road, Great Horton, Bradford.

The Art of Cage-making.

By A. W. CURTIS.

To readers having to make use of the kitchen table as the only available substitute for a bench, I have already advised the placing of a board on top table to prevent same getting damaged. The board referred to can, with the addition of other parts, be made to form a very handy portable bench, if one does not mind spending a little time and cash to make it such.

Making a Bench of a Table.

By first glancing at Fig. 31 readers will be more able to follow my explanation as to the different sized pieces of wood, etc., required. To make the board as illustrated, it will be necessary to have (in addition to the 6ft. length of 11in. by 1in. already referred to) one 6ft. length and one 4ft. length of 5½in. by ¾in. prepared floor board. The 6ft. length is to be screwed to under-side of 11in. by 1in. board, allowing the narrow board to project 2½ins. beyond the wider one. This will form a rabbit for your plane to work in when shooting edges or ends of boards, see Fig. 27.

Next, from your 4ft. length of board cut off one piece 13½ inches long; this should be screwed on end of board as shown in Fig 31. Then rip down centre of remaining length, and you will find you have sufficient to make pieces to screw across board here and there, so as to allow it to lay on table without rocking about. The stop piece shown screwed to top of board would be better and stronger if sunk into board about a quarter of an inch. To make a good job of this, first plane up a piece of stuff eleven inches long by one inch wide by half-an-inch thick; lay it on top of board about fifteen inches from the end, perfectly square from the edge of board against which your plane travels. Then make a mark along each edge of your stop piece; that will give you the width of groove required. Next set the fence of your marking gauge one quarter of an inch from the marking tooth, and put fence of guage to face-side of board and mark along edge where you have to cut out; this will give you the depth of sinkage required.

Now take your back saw and proceed to put two cuts right across your board, making sure to keep just inside your lines, so that your stop piece may fit nice and tight. You will now be able with your ¾in. firmer chisel to cut out the piece between the two saw cuts. Mind not to go below your gauge mark on edges of board. You can, by using the edge of your stop piece for a straight edge, see if you have your groove level across. Having accomplished this, place your stop piece in position, and to keep it there screw it down with two or three one-inch No 8 screws, making sure to countersink for heads of same.

A Portable Bench.

As some kitchen tables are very light and likely to slide about the room with every push of the plane, I would advise readers, where possible, to allow the end of the bench board to butt again a wall; the piece of board screwed on end as described, will prevent any damage being done to wall paper. If kitchen table is much shorter than your board, clip piece could be made to go under end of table, so as to prevent your board tipping downwards at end not resting on table. When adding these parts to your board, you will have to be guided by the thickness of your table-top; that is, you will have to get out one piece of wood 13½ inches long by 1½ inches wide, and the same thickness as your table top. You will then have to screw this to underside of bench board. Screw to this another piece of wood of the same length, but one inch wider; this will form a groove to clip table-top. See end of board, Fig. 31, which shows the two extra pieces added to form the groove.

Fig. 33 will give readers an idea of how to put their boards together. If above instructions are faithfully carried out, you will have a very useful board, as it can be used for planing up upon, and also answers the purpose of a shooting board; in fact, it is practically a portable bench top and shooting board combined. When not in use, this can be removed from the table and made to stand up in any corner without taking up a great amount of room. The board should not be placed too near a fire, for fear of warping. Fig.

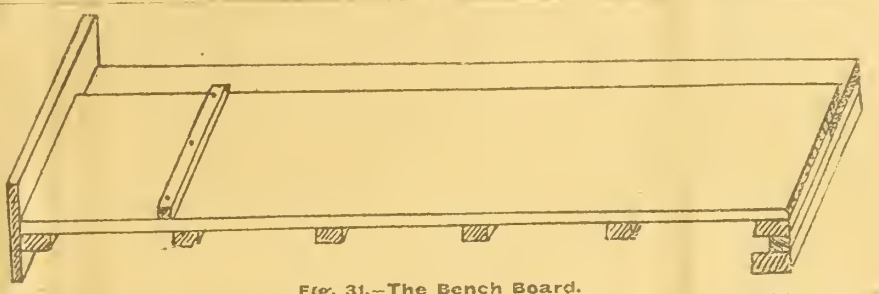

Fig. 31.—The Bench Board.

32 illustrates a very handy shooting board to lay across a bench or table. This should be made about 24 inches long and 11 inches wide at top.

Further Uses for the Bench Board.

British bird fanciers requiring small box cages only, will find a board this size large enough to prepare material upon for any cage up to 21 inches in length. The board can be made in the same way as that advised above, see Fig. 31, with the exception of the end that butts against side of bench or table; in this instance it will require to have one piece only screwed on to prevent the board being pushed forward, when the plane is in use.

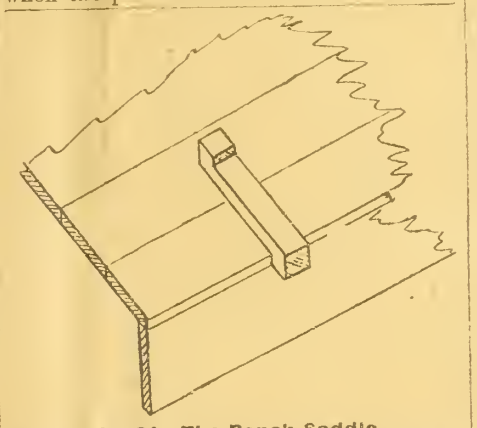

Fig. 34.—The Bench Saddle.

Fig 33 shows the board turned upside down, giving a view of under-side, this will give readers an idea of how to make the shooting board easily.

A Useful Bench.

Another handy article for the cage-maker is a bench saddle, see Fig. 34. This can be cut out of a solid piece of wood (see Fig. 35), or can be made out of three separate pieces, as shown in Fig. 36. I prefer to cut them out of the solid, as they are then much stronger. It is best, when cutting off boards for cage-making, to have a saddle at each end of board, so I would advise readers to make two of them. To cut a saddle out of the solid you will require a piece of wood 13 inches long by 2 inches wide, and 1½ inches thick. Measure 2 inches from end, and put a mark square across the 2-inch side. Continue the mark ½in. down each edge. Now turn your piece of wood over and proceed to mark 2 inches from reverse end; square down edges as before, and then set fence of your marking gauge ½ inch back from tooth. Now run your gauge tooth along the edges and end of the portion required to be cut out. Take your panel saw, and rip down as far as the mark you have put on 2 inches from the end. Next turn your piece of wood, end for end, and rip down as before. With your back saw you may now cut across the lines 2 inches from ends. Do not cut more than the ½ inch down, or you will weaken your saddle.

When you have finished your cross cuts, the pieces shaded in Fig. 35 should drop away, leaving your saddle complete.

Fig. 36, showing the saddle made in 3 pieces will, I think, explain itself. It is made from one straight piece of wood 13 inches long, 2 inches wide, by ½ inch thick, and two pieces of the same stuff, each two inches long. These can be nailed or screwed to the longer piece.

In the sketch illustrating how to use a back saw, readers will observe the bench saddle in use. They will also note that the saddle is pretty close to where the board is being cut off. The nearer the saddle is to your cut the firmer your board will be. There is no need to fasten saddle to top of bench, as it will be necessary to move it from one place to another very frequently.

FANCIERS' FESTIVITIES.

Leicester and Leicestershire Hand-in-Hand C.B.S.

Annual smoking concert was held at headquarters, White Swan Hotel, attended by a large number of fanciers and friends. Mr. Gibbons, the worthy president, occupied the chair. The programme was large and the artists exceptionally good, including Joe Audley and the Grimmett Bros. There was also a band, with piccolo soloes, including the Linnet and the Wren. Mr. J. Smith rendered two fine songs, "The Holy Friar," and "Anchored." Mr. Payne rendered "Japanese Girl" and others; Mr. Letts rendered "The Singer was Irish." The banjo quartette conducted by C. Grimmett gave us several selections. Mr. Neale that noted elocutionist, recited "The Wreck of the Berlin," "Home, Sweet Home," and others. Mr. H. Smith sang "Queen of the Earth" and "Saved by a child." The band gave selections during intervals, conducted by G. Grimmett, and a more successful entertainment has never been rendered to the Leicester and Leicestershire Hand-in-Hand C.B.S.—CHAS. DRAPER, secretary.

My ANNUAL to hand, for which I thank you. I am pleased to see them back to their old style, as I like it better that way. It is a splendid sixpenny-worth. I might also say that from an advertisement I had in CAGE BIRDS I got my birds all disposed of on the following day, which I think is a very quick sale.—HUGH MORELAND (Falkirk).

Plucking Hens.

When engaged in feeding young, I think Canaries would be very keen after mealworms. But under the usual stereotyped management of the Canary fancier all such things are absolutely excluded from the diet of the birds and scarcely ever find a place there even as an occasional luxury. What more likely then that at a time when the influence of natural instincts is most prominent the hen should find a craving for something that is not accessible; the sprouting quills of the feathers appear continually before her eyes, so like an army of tiny caterpillars; either by accident or design the hen bites or breaks a quill, finds it gratifies her longing desires, and—there you are!

You have now the "making" of a plucker of the first order who will give you endless trouble and worry. True, there may be a flaw in this process of reasoning, but should this provision of insect food, to which category this giving a scrap of raw meat distinctly belongs, the meat being simply a tolerable and convenient substitute for insects or larvæ, be made, it goes far to confirm the theory The smearing with vaseline will, if properly done, serve a useful purpose in soothing and healing the injured backs of the young brood. A very light touch with castor oil, which is distasteful to most birds and also possesses healing qualities, would have a similar effect. There is the remedy for those who care to try it. Here again, I would say if it is all you could wish share the benefit with your fellow-fanciers by sending a note to that effect to our correspondence columns. Similarly if it should prove a failure in your hands it may be useful to others to know of it.

The Hustler's Nemesis.

Whew! Here's a fine look out! At the beginning of the last week in April, when there would be some excuse for even a born and bred Englishman to begin to reckon upon fair weather, we are suddenly thrown back, as it were, into the depths of winter, and are having a wintry spell, which would be more typical of December than the eve of May.

This will prove truly a Nemesis to the impatient and hasty fancier whose birds are now probably occupied with new nesting arrangements, after one more or less complete failure with the first nest on account of too early mating. These birds being already taxed with the production of the first round of eggs, are less able to withstand the strain of such a change as this at a critical time, than those whose energies have been conserved, though it is bad enough for the latter. Of course, all this may seem very much like harping upon one string, but to point a moral and adorn a tale at a time when many an apt object lesson will be fresh in one's mind, is to drive the conviction home more closely, so that it will be remembered and acted upon more frequently in future seasons; what may prove a costly experience now, may prove of incalculable benefit in time to come.

As regards the cold snap, it is not to be expected that it will or can be of very long duration at this advanced time of the year, and even by the time this note appears, we may be once again enjoying the balmy breezes of spring; but its effects may still be felt more or less by the stock. Hens that are sitting should be noticed for a day or two, and if an occasional husky cough is heard, the hen should not be neglected, or the probability is that further trouble will arise when the matching time arrives, through the hens not being in a proper condition for attending to the young

Some Precautions.

Any kind of dosage at this time must be carried out carefully, and strong doses of powerful medicines should be strictly avoided. For slight cases, a dose of twenty drops of sherry wine and ten of glycerine in an ounce of water for drinking for two or three days may be all that is required; but where the coughing is very pronounced—it will be heard most frequently just about nightfall and for a few hours after—add to this one drop of eucalyptus oil, and shake the vessel vigorously before putting on the cage. Be careful not to give more than one drop of the eucalyptus, and even with this quantity it is best to watch the hens for an hour or two, when they come off the nest, to see if they drink, as many birds object to it on account of its powerful and penetrating smell and taste. Two or three days of this treatment should be quite sufficient.

But if the coughing is heard after the treatment is stopped, it should at once be given again for a day or two longer. In cold rooms a little extra hemp and rape may be given in the general diet, but this must be done with caution when the hens are sitting, or the effect will be to stimulate the birds too much, causing the cocks to wish to begin nesting again, and dragging the hens off the nests, and, in some cases, causing the hens to leave the nests of their own accord, and to start afresh.

Of course, in rooms that are provided with heating apparatus, the proper plan at a crisis like this is to leave the feeding arrangements unaltered, and warm the room just enough to prevent any serious drop in the temperature from that which prevailed before the change came.

Hens about to Lay.

The hens that are just getting forward with a nest are also apt to be affected in the same way as those that are sitting on eggs. In this case they should be given the sherry and glycerine, with one drop of eucalyptus from the first, and given this until the coughing is no longer heard at night. Then the eucalyptus should be dropped and the sherry and glycerine continued for a few days or a week longer. If the hens appear near laying, it will be an advantage to continue giving this right up to the time of laying.

The reason for this is that when such an extreme change as this occurs whilst the hens are getting near egg-laying, it is frequently followed by severe cases of egg-binding at the critical time, and the stimulation afforded by a few drops of whiskey, brandy, or sherry (it is not really important which is used) during the last week before laying commences is invaluable as a preventative. A few grains of niger seed and a small teaspoonful of egg-food to each pair of birds daily will also be of great service, and should now be given up to the time the eggs are laid, unless, as is quite within the bounds of probabilities, the cold snap should prove quite temporary, and be followed by a comparatively high temperature. In such an event the special treatment that is adopted to meet the unusual conditions will be best gradually dropped off from the time the warm weather begins.

A Note on Baths.

Although regular bathing is a good invigorator and a refreshing exercise for healthy birds, it is apt to be encouraged somewhat indiscriminately when it is, quite unsuspectedly, the frequent cause of trouble. Doubtless such an assertion will make many a novice call to mind in contradiction, the case of birds kept in cold outdoor aviaries who bathe all the year round even when the ice has to be broken on the water, and which are in the most vigorous health notwithstanding. All this is true enough, but only a moment's serious thought is required to show that one might just as reasonably expect the treatment of an English crocus to be equally applicable to a tropical orchid, as to compare these birds with fancy Canaries kept indoors.

Should this snap of cold have set up the sneezing and coughing symptoms we have just been discussing, then one will be well advised to withhold cold baths until the cold wave has passed. If a bath is given at all, let it be a tepid one and that on fine bright days once or twice a week. But the birds will catch no harm if it is withheld altogether for the time being.

When Young Leave Nest.

A question which frequently puzzles the new beginner is the age at which young birds leave the nest, and we have been asked questions ere now which go to show that the novice is by no means clear how this very obvious task is performed.

Perhaps the queriests who are in honest doubt as to how or when a brood—this, of course, applies to Canaries in particular though the same remarks apply in a general way to other species—should quit their natal bed have had the misfortune to see a promising brood of birds go over the side of the nest like little feathered meteors and crouch, closely as a young partridge, in a corner on the cage floor days before they were sufficiently fledged to allow them to reach the nest or perches by any effort of their own. Perhaps also in his innocence of young bird nature he essayed to replace them in their cosy nest only to find after capturing them and placing them comfortably together in the nest that they can give points to the proverbial mule for self-willed obstinacy and sheer contrariness, for no sooner does he make the slightest move than they repeat the acrobatic feat and go flop on the floor again, and stolidly refuse to remain in the nest.

The probability is that such a brood has been interfered with a little too much, and when they first go over the side of the nest pell mell, hurry scurry, they have doubtless been startled in some way. It may be only a sudden, sharp, sound; or a sudden movement in front of the cage which they were able to see; or a slight jarring of the cage such as might occur from forcibly withdrawing the sand-tray which had become slightly jammed with sand or husks, or scraping out the bottom of a cage which has a turn-rail; or it may be only a scare occasioned by thrusting the hand in to reach the nest, or peering into the nest with the face close to the cage front. Any of these things just at the critical time will suffice to scare the birds out of the nest in a trice.

The Time for Special Care.

The time when the young are about a fortnight old and when sitting in the nest they appear to be covered with a good thick plumage, with wing and tail feather about a quarter of an inch through the quills, is the beginning of the most critical period in this respect. Just at this time there is a good deal of the original wild nature working innately and strongly in the young, so that at this stage they are really not so very far removed in their instincts from their wild ancestors, and are wilder and more easily scared by the presence of man than at any other period in their lives.

A full recognition of this fact is most useful for the novice in breeding cage birds. It will enable him to understand more fully what may now seem to him to be anomalies, and curiosities of young bird life, and will also restrain his impatient hand when he would like to interfere and alter this or that point about the nest or young. When the young have reached the stage described and things are going smoothly, nothing but absolute necessity should tempt one to interfere with them at all.

The Final Exit.

With due care to avoid anything that would startle the birds at this critical time, they may be kept in the nest quite a week longer than when they are startled and as soon as they are able to make a stampede, and for some days the nest will appear much too small to hold them. But never mind; let them crush each other out, or sit around the rim for a day or two; then you may account yourself lucky, and the birds will thrive all the better when they hop on to the nearest perch and finally take leave of the cradle. But do not take out the nest at once, as birds that have acted so well will most likely return to the side of the nest to roost for a few nights, and this will be a further advantage, as it will be warmer and cosier for them.

"THE HYGIENE OF BIRD-KEEPING." - 1/1.
By W. Geo. Creswell, M.D.
A most useful manual, thoroughly treating of modern hygiene in bird-keeping, by the most eminent living authority on the subject.

By R. H. Clarke, M.D.,
A very useful booklet concerning this dread disease. It is the only one published, and should be found in every bird-lover's library. Dr. Clarke has given the subject very special study.

"THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD CANARY." 1½d.
By J. H. Payne.
A Lecture reprinted from Cage Birds, delivered by this leading judge and expert before the London and Provincial Ornithological Society, and pronounced by all experts to be a most valuable pamphlet concerning the breeding of the variety.

BREEDING CAGE LABELS, 1d. doz., 7 doz. 6d
A boon to all breeders. Neatly printed in sets of twelve, on perforated gummed paper. They can be torn off, and affixed to the breeding cage in a moment, and prevent all confusion. Useful alike to both small and large breeders of birds.

CARD BREEDING REGISTERS, 1d. each, 4 for 3d., 9 for 6d.
For hanging up in the birdroom. Printed on suitable stiff card, they are ruled to hold a complete record of the breeding results of six pairs of birds; invaluable for future reference, to ensure that knowledge of one's stock essential to accurate breeding.

LIVE BIRD LABELS, 24, 3d.; 50, 6d.; 100, 1/-
For use when despatching live birds on journeys by rail, or to the shows, etc. Printed in red ink and gummed on back. The simplest, neatest, and best on the market.

NOTE PAPER & POSTCARDS, 250 for 2/-; 500 for 2/6.
Until further notice we have decided to supply below cost price artistic Memorandum Forms and stout postcards, with name, address, twelve words of particulars, and blocks of any special variety of bird at half cost for cash. Carriage paid to any address in the U.K. Our latest style of note-head and postcard has been universally admired, and we will gladly send specimens to anyone enclosing stamped addressed envelope.

BLOCKS OF BIRDS, 1/6 each, 5 for 6/-, or 9 for 10/-
For inserting in advertisements and for printing memorandums blocks of all kinds of birds at above low prices can be supplied. Larger blocks to order at cheapest possible rates. These dainty little blocks immensely enhance the appearance of note paper, postcards, and advertisements.

PICTURE POSTCARDS, 1d. each; set of six, 6d.
The most delightful and appropriate postcards of Canaries, British Birds, and Hybrids on the market, executed in colours by Mr. H. Norman. Ideal for Fanciers' correspondence. All represent exact and correct show types and have accompanying descriptions. State which bird or birds are required, or whether a mixed selection is preferred.
The latest set is entitled, "Pairs Matched for Breeding"; very educational art postcards. Price 3d. set of 8.

ORNAMENTAL PLATES, 1/- & 1/6 each.
The following coloured plates of cage Birds can be obtained mounted on stiff card and gelatined. By the Rev. C. D. FARRAR, Chapter XI; My Barrabands.

If anyone had told me some years ago that I should ever be successful in breeding Barraband Parrakeets, I should probably have answered in the words of a certain old Syrian king, "Who is thy servant, dog that he is, that he should do this thing?" And yet I have actually done so, and there are at present three healthy young Barrabands at Micklefield Vicarage.

Barrabands, I may begin by saying, are not at all like the hideous brutes depicted in a certain book on Parrots in Captivity. Such an atrocious and ill-assorted mixture of colours I never hope to see on any living bird, and apparently this specimen had a dislocated wing among his other beauties. The real Barraband is one of the most beautiful birds I ever saw, and the arrangement of the colours is exquisite. Whoever comes to see my birds (and they are not a few) invariably goes into raptures over the Barrabands.

Beauty Described.

In shape the Barraband very much resembles the Ringneck Parrakeet, but it is even more graceful. In Australia they are sometimes known by the ill-sounding name of "Green Leeks," but I can't think how anyone could give such a lovely bird such a vulgar name. In size the Barraband is about equal to a Pennant, but has not the girth of the latter, being exceedingly graceful, slim-waisted, and with a long and pointed tail. The colour of the cock is a beautiful iridescent green. His forehead is a lovely crocus yellow, which colour extends under the chin, where it merges into a narrowish band of red. The wings are iridescent green, merging into bluish green on the flights.

The hen is rather a different shade of green in the body, merging into greenish blue on the wings and upper side of the tail. Her eye is dark. The tail has the inner edge of each feather on the under side of an exceedingly beautiful salmon pink. She has also a dash of pink on the thighs. There is, therefore, no possibility of mistaking a cock for a hen.

Mr. Gedney says of them, "As cage pets they are very much attached to each other and to their owners." In the next sentence he flatly contradicts himself: "Green Leeks do not show any strong affection one for the other." Maybe, he thought Barraband and Green Leeks two distinct species! Mr. Weiner says: "I have gathered costly experience by seeing Barrabands fall in fits from their perches for very little causes." When I remember the strange and wonderful things on which he fed his birds, I am not surprised to hear that he sometimes lost them somewhat suddenly. Dr. Green on the Barraband is distinctly pessimistic. "On the whole," he says, "one can scarcely recommend the tyro in Parrot keeping to invest his money in Barrabands, which are by no means common, and when imported fetch from £3 to £4 each in the market." "Enough has been said to show that they are even more difficult to keep than the Purple-cap or the Blue Mountain Lory."

Rather Vague.

But one ray of light seemed to shine through the surrounding darkness. Here are the magic words that fired my ambition: "So far, none of these birds have been bred in captivity, either here or on the Continent; nor are we aware, even, of any cases of egg production among them." This was encouragement, indeed, for there are generally so many "vague" stories floating around that so and so has been bred at the Zoo at some time. There is something delightfully vague about that sentence, and it has done me out of many a medal. The breeding records of the Zoo, by the way, were singularly vague and unsatisfactory in bygone years. If eggs were laid, there is no record if they hatched, and if they hatched, whether the young were reared. "Bred at the Zoological Society" would not to-day gain a medal; but this in passing.

That sentence of Dr. Green's determined me. There was no vagueness there. The Barraband had never been bred and had not even laid eggs; so how could they breed? I would demonstrate that they could be kept if fed on rational principles, and maybe, with luck, I would get so far as eggs, if not further.

Some years ago I had a pair of Barrabands, but not having very much spare room I sold them to a friend. We can't breed everything at once, and I was then full up with other kinds. But I said to myself, "The day shall come when I will make room for you, my beauties." This spring, or rather last back end, I turned a pair of splendid Barrabands into one of my outdoor aviaries. I did so with fear and trembling after reading my many "Job's Comforters," and I thought to myself, "My dears, yours will be a short life and a merry, and on some near morning you will drop from your perch in a fit and give mo costly burial."

However, I determined not to do anything to hasten their end, and as I do not believe any healthy-minded Barraband eats sponge cake, pulped figs, boiled rice, Jamaica sugar, soaked currants, cabbage blooms, mignenette, pea, and bean blooms, and so on, I never gave them the opportunity of committing suicide.

Scorners of Climate.

When first put out, my Barrabands were rather wild but soon got to know me, and took little notice of their harmless, necessary feeder. They passed the whole of last winter out of doors, and it was a winter and a half, as we say up here. I remember the day of the awful blizzard; the snow was up to my waist (and I stand six feet), and the cold was of Arctic intensity, while the wind was like a sharp razor. The Barrabands, however, did not seem to mind it one bit.

About May I began to notice signs of nesting unmistakable to an old Parrot keeper, and after a while Mrs. Barraband disappeared. Now in their house there are two logs, and so sly was the lady in her ways, and of such lightning-like rapidity in her movements, that for long enough I located the nest in the wrong hole; and well I might, for she entered the log like a streak of greased lightning. It reminded me of Maskelyne and Cook in London: "Now, ladies and gentlemen, there is positively no deception. Now, look carefully—whist! That is how it is done."

I cannot tell the size of the eggs, because I was not fool enough to look at them. I cannot tell (as Mr. Gedney so often does), what colour the fluff of the young was. My Parrakeets won't stand such liberties—and I don't believe his did either.

The hen sat very steady, I cannot say exactly how long; about eighteen days, I fancy, but will not be positive. The cock sat on the outside of the log, where the hen was not, and so further misled me, as I made sure she was inside when he kept watch and ward. I thought this a bit of unnecessary meanness. After a time I could hear the well-known sounds which told my joyful and experienced ears that youngsters had arrived. Strange to say, I did not put my hand in to see. I knew the only thing was to wait and possess my soul in patience. Difficult, I grant you, but absolutely essential in such cases.

No one but a Parrot keeper will ever know the agonies of hope and fear through which I passed during the next few weeks. After about ten days, Papa Barraband began to visit the nest at intervals, spending all other available time in swallowing seed as fast as his bill could shell it. At night, also, he did what I have never known any other cock Parrakeet do—he slept in the nest and assisted in brooding the young. This I consider greatly to his credit, as it shows him to be a thoroughly family bird. How many human fathers nurse their babies at night, I wonder, among the readers of CAGE BIRDS. Mind, I don't say all Papa Barrabands do. "I will not generalize," as a certain learned German doctor was fond of iterating, "from a single specimen."

The Handrearing and Management of the Hawfinch.

By S. HAKES.

A paper read before the Burton-on-Trent C.B.S. on April 7th.

If you will give me your kind attention for a few minutes, I will endeavour to put before you my practical experience of the Hawfinch. We will first take a ramble in the country; time: the end of April. You must go for a walk early in the morning, if you mean business, in the woody districts, where there are plenty of kitchen gardens and fruit orchards. Such districts are most suitable for the nesting of Hawfinches, which birds are more plentiful than most fanciers think. I have seen large numbers not many miles from Burton in the kind of country named.

Locating the Nest.

Listen for the sound of "Click, click," the call of the Hawfinch—similar to the call-note of the Robin. Instead of looking in the hedge bottom, turn your eyes towards the tops of the trees close by, and you will discover the Hawfinches flying about, and paired up at this time of the year. Sit down and keep your eyes open, and you will no doubt find that they are building. They build at all heights up to about nine yards high, and mostly in the lime trees, red may and pear trees, on the ends of boughs. I have found the nest in large black fir trees, perhaps 29 feet high. The nest of the Hawfinch is exactly the same as that of the Bullfinch. The eggs are four to five in number, and spotted the same as the Greenfinches', only they are lighter in ground colour. The young are hatched out after 13 days' incubation.

Taking and Handrearing the Young.

Take the young Hawfinches when 11 days old. If you find them older, and they scuttle out of the nest, go to where they are seen to drop, and you will discover them in a sitting position with their mouths open. They will not move for hours from the spot where they drop. Now you have got them, get them home the best way you can perhaps in a camera box, which makes a splendid disguise when nesting.

I will give now my method of handrearing, which has never failed me for 20 years. To make the food, take 1lb. of hemp seed and 1lb. of Canary seed, and crush separately in a mortar. Next sieve the husks out, and you have about a pound and a half of meal; mix together and put in a tin. Now boil ½-pint of new milk and ¼ pint stale breadcrumbs and beat up well. Add two ounces of the above seed, ½ ounce oatmeal, 1 ounce of hard-boiled egg, ½ ounce peaflower, and mix well together. If a little too stiff, thin it with water. Mix quantity of food, according to number of birds you have. Keep it in a cool place, and mix fresh every day. Give three bits each about every hour. Start early in the morning, and slacken off in the middle of the day, then giving the same quantity every two hours.

When the young birds are starting to fly, give crushed hemp seed, mixed Parrot food crushed, and don't forget green peas, but don't overdo them at first, or inflammation will follow. If so, give crushed hemp, and Indian wheat steeped in milk. Keep on this diet for about three days, and give milk to drink until the droppings are firm again. Then take care, and look at the cage bottom every night to see they are not scoured.

To Sex and to Pick a Show Bird.

When they are reared and flying about, fanciers will call round to have a look at them. In selecting cocks from hens, the cocks have plenty of yellow on the breast and are black on the short flight feathers; the hens are striped yellow on breasts, and pale blue on short flights.

To pick a show bird, choose one with a large head and short, thick-set beak (the thicker the beak the larger the bib). A tip-top show bird should have a thumb-nail shaped bib, not V-shaped, as most fanciers think.

Moulting and Feeding.

With regard to moulting, hand-reared Hawfinches can be induced to eat anything. Don't overfeed young cocks the first season. The second moult they drop their flights, and you can then feed to perfection. There are plenty of tasteless peppers advertised in CAGE BIRDS—enough to colour the sea. Perhaps, too, there are other colours that are not advertised. I will try to explain. Grow your own sunflowers and sweet peas if possible. Don't over-do the birds with colour given in egg-food, as I consider too much egg-food is injurious to any kind of Finch. I think the best way is to crush your seed and add tasteless pepper and ground oochineal (which is insect-food). Do not add too much to start with. Put in the drinking water every night 1½ dozen black sunflower seeds. Give the seeds to eat the next morning and leave the water for them to drink. It will have been turned purple by the black sunflower seeds. Give plenty of hawthorn berries, and pay particular attention to the Haws of the red may tree. The latter I have always had great faith in, and I consider them the best food to put a "polish" on the Hawfinch. They are fond of apple pips.

A great many fanciers say: "Give plenty of mealworms." I think they are not necessary, as I have never given any to my birds all the years I have kept them. Has any fancier ever examined the contents of the craw of the young Hawfinch 10 days old? No insects will be found there, as some fanciers say, but all kinds of seeds and peas you can mention. I have seen five Hawfinches killed off peas in one shot. And they are about the easiest of all Finches to catch in a trap-cage when young. I have caught as many as nine in one week.

Caging and Bathing.

When moulting, keep your bird in a large, box-shape cage. Run him into a show cage every week for a few hours. The Hawfinch is a good bather, but if very dirty and you want him for a special show, wash him the same as you would a Canary, using plenty of soap and water. But mind he does not bite a piece out of your finger. The best way when starting to wash the bird, and he starts biting, is to put a piece of flat cork in his mouth. He will hold on tight until the washing is finished. Let him bathe next day, and you will be delighted with the result.

In conclusion, I may add that should any fanciers like to ask any questions through the columns of CAGE BIRDS, I shall be glad to answer them to the best of my ability. I thank you for your kind attention, and trust this paper will prove interesting to our fanciers.

"AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS AND CAGES"

Is the title of

CAGE BIRDS' LATEST HANDBOOK.

It is written by that well-known fancier, Mr. H. Norman ("Cage Birds" Artist-in-Chief) who has illustrated it with a wealth of helpful drawings. It also contains 10 lovely full-page photographic plates.

It must be on every bird-lover's book-shelf

who desires to thoroughly understand the proper Building, Fitting and Management of Aviaries, Bird-rooms and Cages.

Mule and Hybrid Breeding.

By J. W. DICKSON (Newcastle-on-Tyne.)

This is the Essay awarded FIRST PRIZE in "Cage Birds" Competition in Section Three. Readers should note the announcement concerning this Competition which appears on page 433 this week.

Can anything in Aviculture be more interesting than the art of Mule or Hybrid breeding? For my own part I think that this branch is the most fascinating, and once the desire to master this hobby is born, it develops amazingly in spite of the multitude of disappointments which dance attendance on the efforts of the novice just entering the lists. As the field is so large and the varieties (or combinations) so numerous, when tackling this subject I think that the branch in which the domestic Canary hen plays the prominent part should be treated first.

Common and Uncommon Dark Mules.

Most fanciers at some time or other have bred common Dark Mules—comparatively few manage to breed first-class dark show specimens. The Goldfinch, Linnet, Greenfinch, Siskin, and Redpoll may be used to attain this end, but remember that the hen must be a large cobby yellow—green Norwich, with good quality of feather and as near the correct type as possible, as you require all of these points in your exhibition Dark Mule. By using a green, you are more likely to get a good dark specimen, free from ticks or light feathers. See that your hen has not got a light bib, for if she has it is almost certain to be frequently reproduced in the young Mules, and will, of course, disqualify, no matter how perfect their other points may be.

By using a hen such as advised above you may be fortunate, and breed a good dark yellow Mule, which will take some beating on the show bench. You will, of course, find that the majority of the young will be buffs, although you are using a yellow hen, and you will often find that your best birds are of this kind, although you have all along the line had your mind bent on breeding yellows.

A point for the beginner to remember is that it is believed by the majority of fanciers to be impossible to breed a yellow Mule, either Light or Dark, from a buff hen. You can only expect to obtain buff Mules from a buff hen, whereas (as I have stated before) you can and will breed the greater number of your Mules buff from a yellow hen.

The Mysterious "Sib-Bred" Hens.

We next come to the variety that is shrouded in mystery to most of us, presenting a problem which often takes us years to solve, and is oftener unsolved and given up in despair—namely, the art of breeding clear or even-marked specimens. Before you can accomplish this, you must have the right strain of Canaries to work with—that is hens which have a tendency, and may be relied on to occasionally throw clear or lightly-marked specimens. You will often see these strains of "sib-bred" light muling hens advertised for a few shillings. My advice is: Don't be on, unless you know something about the man who is advertising. You cannot reasonably expect to get the "real thing" from a light muling strain, which takes many years to work up to perfection, for a few shillings—you may be able to buy if you add the word pounds after the word few.

The men who own these sib-bred strains are, as a rule, very loth to part with the surplus birds they may have (especially the hens), and I have heard it said—although I doubt the statement—that sooner than do this they will destroy the surplus, or else make sure that they get a home where they will not be used for breeding. If you should know a fancier who possessses the "blue blood," and he is willing to let you have a bird or two—don't grumble at the price; pay up and look pleasant!

In-breeding and keeping up Size.

If you can get a buff cock, and, say, a couple of yellow hens (you may have to take buffs, as the yellow hens are scarce) you will have the foundation on which to build up and improve a strain for yourself, by introducing new blood from time to time, and so keeping the size and colour right. When handling fresh blood, don't over do it; be cautious, and see that the bird (or birds) you are crossing into your strain—say a large yellow Norwich cock, as near perfection as you can get it—is bred from birds whose ancestors for a few generations back were clear.

When in-breeding (and you must do it to keep a light muling strain right) don't pair brother and sister, if you can avoid it. This is generally acknowledged to be breeding too close, and will result naturally in small and weakly progeny—the very thing above everything else that you want to avoid. Don't lose sight of the fact that size is the thing that you have to aim at in your Mules, along with the other points. Father to daughter, or mother to son, is as near as it is advisable to go, without running the risk of deterioration in the young, and you cannot get large Mules from small, puny hens.

If you do not want to bring in fresh blood, and at the same time desire to improve the size and colour of your muling hens, pair up your two largest buffs, cock and hen, and also select the two largest yellows, cock and hen, you may have. By crossing the best youngsters which result from this double yellowing and double buffing into your strain the following season, you will be able to retain both size and colour in the strain without having to introduce alien blood so frequently.

For Shallow Pockets.

If your pocket will not allow you to purchase the "ready made" article, try all of the hens you may possess, yellow or buff, with a Finch, and if you manage to get a few Mules showing light feathers, pair the hens they are bred from with a related cock if possible, and try the young hens from these the following season, and so on. You will always, of course, have to test your hens with the Finch, as by doing this you will see if the light feather property in your strain is improving and becoming more dominant.

Both the Finch and the hens should be in vigorous breeding condition, or unfertile eggs will be the result. The beginning of March is usually soon enough to introduce the Goldie, if house moulted. Give your muling Goldfinches, Linnets, etc., plenty of seeding dandelion heads. There is nothing finer for bringing them into correct breeding condition—also don't forget to give each Finch a mealworm every morning.

Some breeders take a nest of Canaries off each hen before putting her up for muling, although this is not necessary if the hen is young and healthy.

A Useful Dodge.

Some Canary hens seem to take a dislike to the Finches, and will have nothing to do with them. If you have a hen of this description, put her up with a cock Goldfinch or Linnet mule. He will soon put her to nest—even quicker than a Canary cock will. When she starts to build, he may be taken away and hung in a song cage before the breeding cage. Put the Goldfinch or Linnet back with her, and wait results. The parted husband will soon begin to serenade his wife, and she will soon start to "call." If the Goldies (or whatever Finch you are using) is in condition, as he ought to be, you will see that he is not very far off when this happens. This tip is second-hand, I admit, but I have tried it and will do so again.

The Cage and Egg-smashing.

The three-compartment cage is the best to use for muling. It should be made with a slide on each side of the middle compartment, which will draw out easily. You can then run the Finch with one hen in the morning and the other in the afternoon, and shut him off by himself at night. If you do not do this you may find when you get up in the morning that he has stuck his bill through the egg. The same precaution has to be taken when breeding with the Siskin—the Linnet, Greenfinch, and Redpoll are not so much addicted to this curious but annoying habit.

All communications for this column should be written on one side of the paper only, duly authenticated with the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication, and sent to H. Norman, Editor, "Wild Bird Life," "The Eyrie," Salisbury-road, Carshalton, Surrey, by Monday in each week. Original observations and records invited.

The Coming Migrants.

We are now in the middle of April, which is, under normal conditions perhaps, one of the most beautiful months in the year. So cold has been the north-east winds, varied by equally cold frosty nights, however, that vegetation is much more backward than usual. Even the bright periods of sunshine are not sustained long enough to sufficiently warm the earth to counteract these winter-like conditions. In the sheltered woods and hedgerows the mud-plastered homes of the Blackbirds and Thrushes are fairly common. This year they are more than usually exposed, consequently, many will be rifled of their contents. Did the race of these musicians depend solely upon a single nest (as some species do), we fear the song of the Mavis and Merle would be rare, and seldom heard. We have watched the Robin, Hedge-Sparrow, Blackbird, and Song Thrush, the whole of the winter, and although their doings are at all times full of interest to us, we are just now particularly anxious to note the coming of the migrants. Like the townsman, who after months of confinement, longs for a sight of the green fields and hedgerows, dwellers in the country are as equally anxious to get a first sight of some graceful Warbler or Swift-winged Swallow, to hear the double note call of the Cuckoo, or listen to the enchanting melody of the tuneful 'gale. This coming of the migrants makes a break in the round of bird life. We start as it were from a fresh point, life is taking a new lease, and the bird units left over from the dangers of northern winters and long voyages from southern lands, are about to increase, to perpetuate their kind in sufficient numbers to make doubly certain that no species shall fail. Nature is so lavish that there will be more than are actually required, and the mortality, which always prevails in young creatures, will make no appreciable difference in the numbers of wild birds along the hedgerows, when the country side is rich with the colour of the golden harvest. There are two birds that the majority of bird lovers are specially interested in; they are both noted for their song—both songs of different order—one is the sweet-voiced bird of night, the other the bird of mystery, who stays with us just long enough to make sure that some luckless Robin or Pipit will safely rear its greedy young ones. But interesting as these birds are, they are both comparatively common, consequently, the keener naturalist is more eager to note the doings of the Lesser Warblers. Some of these are equally common, but being smaller and somewhat shy, are not so easy to find and watch. Take the Willow Wren as an example, he is such a dainty little bird, with the most enchanting ways imaginable, peering under the leaves for tiny insects, flitting from branch to branch, warbling the sweetest of songs. Occasionally one may catch a glimpse of the elusive Grasshopper Warbler, scrambling up the stalk of some tall weed, or creeping among the undergrowth, too shy and apparently too weak upon the wing to stray for from such cover. One sometimes wonders how these short-winged delicate looking creatures ever manage to perform a long journey across the open sea, and yet we know that they do, and look with certainty to their coming, waiting anxiously for a change from these cold easterly winds. So that we may with some degree of comfort watch in any suitable spot, and note the doings of these charming birds of summer.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

Identification of Eggs.

Wild birds have evidently no means of identifying eggs, for a Warbler will as readily sit upon Thrushes' eggs as its own.

Blackbird Nesting on Ground.

It is not a very uncommon occurrence for a Blackbird to nest on the bank upon the bare ground; but in such a position the contents of the nest, and even the old bird, run considerable risks from rats, weasels, and stoats, to say nothing of the farmyard cat, which appears to have some special ability for finding the young birds just before they are able to fly.

Spring Migrants in the West.

The following Warblers, etc., have been noted by Mr. A. Thomas, the well-known taxidermist of Gloucester, who is generally one of the first to see and hear of any fresh arrivals in his district:—Blackcap, Willow Wren, Redstart, Pied Flycatcher (Norfolk Plover gone through). Wheatear and Whinchat are here, but have not seen them. Expecting more this week.

Tameness of Birds in Spring.

One sign of the season is the comparative tameness of well-known shy species of birds. To nest, to hatch, and rear young, means the running of risks to the parent birds, which only the courage begotten of love for eggs and offspring could make possible. Take such a wary bird as the bald-headed Coot, which one can scarcely catch a fleeting glance of under very favourable circumstances. At nesting time he will splutter across the surface of the water not ten yards in front of the intruder; and so closely does the hen bird sit that I have known one to be photographed from the towing path of a canal, barely hidden by the rough herbage growing along its banks. But the Coot is no exception. All birds are given to taking more risks at this season, and in some cases have actually allowed themselves to be handled.

The Chief Robber of Nests.

There are very few birds but what build in situations somewhat protected by surrounding foliage; even ground builders select a tuft of herbage, or bush to incubate under. This is not only done for protection from the hot sun, wind and rain, but also for protection from the prying eyes of their enemies. Chief of these is the Crow. He appears to be flapping lazily over the marsh and meadow land; but his keen eyes are carefully noting the position of Snipe, Plover, or Redshank nests, which he will rob at the very first opportunity.

The Joy of Life.

The following passage is taken from one of Jefferies' excellent papers on Nature. "The joy of life of these animals—indeed, of almost all animals and birds in freedom—is great. You may see it in every motion—in the lissom bound of the hare, the playful leap of the rabbit, the song that the Lark and the Finch must sing, the soft, loving coo of the Dove in the hawthorn, the Blackbird ruffling out his feathers on a nail. The sense of living is manifestly intense in them all, and is in itself an exquisite pleasure. Their appetites seem ever fresh; they rush to the banquet spread by mother earth with a gusto Lucullus never knew in the midst of his artistic gluttony; they drink from the stream with dainty sips as though it were richest wine. Watch the birds in the spring: the pairs know not how to express their wild happiness."

ALWAYS USE OUR

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1-, 1 6 according to size.

Postal Orders (crossed) must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARR.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to amend any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements close Two days first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

The following are not a few collected at the end of the month, but merely a few - - - EXTRACTS bearing the dates of 1st, 2nd and 3rd May, 1908. Of course, I could easily assert that I have received thousands during these three dates, because any unscrupulous person can make use of terminological inexactitudes; but to prove it would be another thing entirely. I am always pleased to prove up to the hilt all statements made; and for this reason the originals of Extracts have been forwarded to the Editor of "Cage Birds," with envelopes bearing official post-marks. Is this proof positive?

WHICH HENS ARE THE BEST FEEDERS?

SIR, The other week something about "feeding" hens appeared. An old fancier that I knew well, and who bred many excellent Crests, used Lizards and Cinnamons as "feeders." He used to change the eggs of these birds about amongst his Crested hens, so that if they hatched under his Crest hens he had no difficulty in tracing the parentage. The Lizards and Cinnamons, being good feeders, reared his Crested birds. I have often heard that Lizards are good feeders, and I know from experience that Cinnamons are excellent feeders.

J. H. VERRALL.

THE HOOPOE IN THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

SIR, I think it might interest some of your readers who love to watch our own wild birds to know that the Hoopoe still visits our coasts. I saw one to-day in the Isle of Wight near the southern cliffs of the island, between Freshwater Bay and Brook—close to Compton Farm. Its appearance was somewhat interesting, as we have just had the worst blizzard on record, which killed many even of our native birds. The Hoopoe has often been seen in the New Forest, where several specimens have unfortunately been shot, and afterwards set up and placed in some museum as something to be proud of. Let us hope that the one I saw will share a better fate, after having had such a cold welcome.

JOHN M. PATERSON.

THE REMOVAL OF BIRDS.

A Case of Mistaken Identity.

SIR,—I was somewhat surprised on last Friday and Saturday morning to receive at nearly every post letters and post-cards from fanciers from all parts of the United Kingdom asking me for the prices of my birds; also several London fanciers went so far as to make an appointment with a view to buying up all my fertile eggs, as they had hens sitting on clears. I wondered what it all meant and what the hoax was, and who was trying to have me on! On opening CAGE BIRDS on the Saturday evening, however, I could see through it all, and found what had resulted in all this unnecessary correspondence, and put me to inconvenience and bother. The fact is, some brother fancier, of course, my namesake, requests advice re the removal of birds, and he signs his enquiry, "Marley." So may I suggest, just to straighten matters up a little, and put the "House in order" again, that brother Marley signs himself in full, or, better still, puts the district he lives in? Then we shall not have a repetition of this. As regards his enquiry, if I was in his place I should sell all fertile eggs to local fanciers. If he has many birds up, also, he would be well advised to sell all with the exception of about four pairs (those kept must be his very best). Then, later, he can go on in his old sweet way. I am bringing this to notice, not to bring my name into notoriety, but just to let those fanciers that have written to me re my birds know the facts of the case, as it saves postage and keeps their optics on CAGE BIRDS, the popular paper. Of course, it will be some time before I think of turning the Fancy up; I have the fever too strong. Best wishes for CAGE BIRDS future success.

(Leyton). A. J. MARLEY.

SIR,—In reply to your correspondent, "Marley," who asks the best way to remove his birds with their young a distance of some ninety miles by railway, I should think this a matter of easy accomplishment, especially as the birds should be out on the "sticks." Cover up the cages containing the birds with some wraps of nice, warm material, rigidly excluding all possibility of draughts, and keep all quite dark till safely lodged in the new home. Then uncover, and the birds will doubtless be found as unconcerned as if nothing had happened. The removal should, of course, be carried out as expeditiously as possible, and "Marley" would do well to have the cages in his personal charge, and not trust them to the railway company, as otherwise delay may arise. I may add that hens sitting on their eggs can be removed in the manner described without, as a rule, any harm coming to them. Indeed, eggs have been known to hatch whilst in course of transit by train.

JOHN B. WATERMAN.

THE CAGE BIRD UNION AND CLASHING OF SHOWS.

SIR,—The only use I see for the C.B.U. is to keep back any new society that is likely to start, instead of helping the same. A. is an old society and affiliated to the C.B.U., and is about 40 miles, also on another line, from B, which is only a new society of three years' standing, and which held its show on C's date, C being another society which is on the same line and about 20 miles from B. This affected both shows so much that B asks C if we cannot come to terms, with the result that C being the oldest show, B gives way in favour of C. The only suitable date B can take is A's. Now B writes to the C.B.U. applying for a license, and is informed that they cannot have same as they are clashing with A. Now, what I should like to know is, where does any new society come in, when the C.B.U. is giving all the old societies the preference. Again, any society which may have any ill-feeling or selfish motive may lodge a complaint against any new society no matter how far from them, and may stop the license. Why not give every society a chance of dates, old and new? Let the C.B.U. draw the dates honestly every year for each society, and let them take the dates allotted to them; or perhaps the C.B.U. can solve the puzzle for us and inform B through your valuable paper how to get any Saturday from the middle of October to the end of November without clashing with any other show. I may say that B had three times the balance that A had, notwithstanding A had the C.B.U. license.

FAIR PLAY.

SIR, I am surprised to see only one letter in your last issue—that of S. A. Dicken—in furtherance of the subject introduced last week by "Disgusted." I can assure your readers that there are hundreds of fanciers disgusted with the ways of the Cage Bird Union. Cage Bird Union indeed! We should call it rather the Manchester Clique Union Limited. When the idea of the Union was mooted it was universally received with acclamation, as it was then thought it would be the means of obtaining cheaper railway rates and more prompt payment of prize-money, and also of raising the tone of the whole of the Cage Bird Fancy. Instead of that, what good has it done? What benefits have accrued from its formation? It has only caused a good deal of ill-feeling everywhere and the benefits are absolutely nil to the Cage Bird Fancy at large. The only benefit that one can see is to the Union and that is the large sum obtained in fees from the affiliated societies and it would be interesting to know what it is proposed to do with the money. I presume that I, as an exhibitor, whose interests are guarded by the C.B.U. (sic) and as a member of an affiliated society, am not out of order in asking this. I am astonished that secretaries of societies should have allowed the Union to dictate to them as they have done, and I think it is quite time that something was done to check the career of this useless body. I trust other fanciers will give their views through CAGE BIRDS, so that some definite steps may be taken in the matter.

C. P. SMITH.

BIRD CATCHING.

SIR,—In answer to "Novice," I may say that as a rule I use from forty to fifty yards of line, but sometimes I have used double the length. The longer the line the better and the larger the nets the better. I have used 8 ft. nets; i.e., two to cover a 15 ft. gap, worked on 4-ft. poles on the "come-and-go" principle. If worked in the way most catchers use them they would be very awkward, 8-ft. poles coming over, especially in a strong wind, as the nets cut through the air edgeways instead of flat. They are, besides, almost invisible compared with the ordinary way of setting, as the nets are folded up small, like an ordinary rope, until the line of each net is pulled, when it spreads out, covering the five-yard gap and giving the birds no possible chance to escape; the nets are over like a flash. I have known the top cord to strike a settling Goldfinch, and send it insensible to the grass twenty yards away; but when birds are picked up in such circumstances they generally come round again after an hour or two's rest. The line must be fairly strong and made of material that will not stretch, as a poor line, when over fifty yards of it are being run out, will stretch a yard or two. If the line is made right, you won't have to pull back more than from a foot to a foot and a half before the nets are over. When the nets are set, keep the line just tight enough to avoid the two nearest poles springing upwards, as if you have a lot of loose line, your nets may not come over, and you may break your line with the jag that it will cause when it gets tight. Don't get a line with a lot of what ropemakers call "back twist" in it; i.e., twisted round an extra number of times to make it look better. This sort of line is bound to kink and to stretch. Three-quarter inch mesh is the best for the nets, as then you can keep birds in all day and they won't get out; they get their heads through and remain in that position till taken out. If smaller mesh is used they don't get their heads through and they shuffle about till they get to the side. Diamond (that is, diagonal) netting is the best. But for space I would give drawings of the nets as set. Of course, if you can get out of sight of the birds in a ditch behind a tree or anything of that kind all the better. As to brace bird, put brace on when in its cage at home, letting it remain on for some time so long as it is fixed right. You can afterwards attach it to a stick in a cage or aviary among its usual companions to teach it to understand that it cannot get away; if you take the tamest of birds straight on to a pole in the open air they will always knock about a good bit and if a P.C. comes along you will doubtless lose more than you had caught. So it is best to train them first; they will soon get tamed down to it. There is not the slightest cruelty. I have used braced Wood Pigeons as decoys for shooting; they knock about a good bit first time taken out, but soon learn better. As to kinds, Goldies, Greenfinches, Chaffinches, Linnets, and Bullies do all right in a call cage, as they are not birds that are in a very great hurry as a rule, and are mostly good callers early in the morning when they are coming to feed. In winter, have your nets set as soon as it gets light. I have often set mine the night before. Any of the above make good callers as well as Bramblefinches, Yellowhammers, Redpolls, and Larks. If a cock Lark is used as a brace bird, put it in centre and call cages towards the end, but not at the end through which the nets meet, as they would hold the nets up, and this might cause a gap. Many people throw a sack or two of turnip seed and threshing machine rubbish down till the birds have got well on it. You can get old seed at the large seed warehouses very cheap; some they can't trust to for growing about here. Some people buy cart loads of it for manure for grass land and throw it in a heap to rot; I have often seen the heaps covered with birds—Chaffinches, green and brown Linnets, Brambles, and Yellowhammers. I know a person here who has caught about forty Brambles besides others at one pull at one of these heaps during the winter.—In reply to "Anxious" re Bullfinch catching; I always used trap cages with a fair amount of success, but there were a good many that would not go in; but I spring-net them now, as there is nothing to make them suspicious as in the case of a trap-cage. In fact they can be covered up entirely with loose grass except the bait. They are all the better for a call bird in a call cage with two or three traps set round. Just at this time of year they are rather independent, owing to the amount of green buds about, but a few privet berries will mostly fetch them. There are very few berries about now; they want collecting in the winter and preserving in wet sand in an earthenware or iron vessel, one that is watertight. As to his Bullies dying, I had a similar send-off when I first started. I saw a man catching Bullies in a trap-cage, so it took my fancy (as I have never been without a British bird of some kind since my early schooldays. When nine or ten years old, I rejoiced in a family of seven Jackdaws, which I had hand-reared. I always allowed them their freedom and the use of their wings), and I bought the cage and bird of the man next morning. It was thick and foggy, and the hedges were covered with thick ice and frost. So off I and my assistants (rather too numerous) went in quest of Bullfinches. We soon returned with seven as they were hard up and easily caught—four cocks and three hens. I had a few sheaves of dry dock seed I had harvested for the occasion, so a sheaf of it was put in a flight cage and the Bullies after it. And didn't they have a feast? They sat and "gorged" dock seed till they could hold no more. Of course, we quite considered they were on the road to health, but in the afternoon, when we went to look, one was dead, and two more could not stand, and before next day was over all had departed this life except the call-bird; she was still looking hearty and fat and in the best of health, and had also shared in the feast. That set me thinking; the dock seed was not poisonous, or she would have gone too. At last I guessed they were starved down, and I had overdone them. This year I lost one cock Bullie out of a considerable number, and it was one I took of a young man who had had it a week or two; I was doubtful of it as soon as I got it home. If they are caged too many in a cage, the hens are often rather spiteful and start fighting, and some of them get knocked about, while others knock themselves about; you quite likely loose some. I always turn them in some spare rooms for the first week or two.

Sleaford. CONSTANT READER.

SIR, Will "Constant Reader" please explain how he makes the oval wire traps for Hawfinches? He mentioned it in your issue of April 11. I have inquired of a few friends as to the working of same, but they have never seen one. So if "Constant Reader" will supply me with the necessary information, I shall be much obliged

TIMMIE.

A Remarkable Book on British Birds.

The issue of an entirely new and really magnificent work on the Birds of Great Britain (order Passeres), of which the text has been especially written by Dr. Butler, and the full-page plates of Birds and figures of eggs have been lithographed in natural colours from coloured drawings by H. Gronwald and F. W. Frohawk, M.B.O.U., F.E.S., is an event that will awaken interest not only among ornithologists, but amongst all earnest students of Natural History in the Kingdom.

The author, Dr. A. G. Butler, Ph.D., F.L.S., F.Z.S., M.B.O.U., late of the British Museum (Natural History), is well known to ornithologists as the author of "Foreign Finches in Captivity," "A Handbook of British Oology," &c., &c. The plates are drawn expressly for this work by two of the first ornithological artists of the day, who have intimate and life-long experience of British birds in their native haunts, and have access to the vast resources of the British Museum, as well as having the finest collections of living birds in the country at their command. There are considerably over a hundred full-page plates of birds, and two hundred and fifty-five figures of eggs. Perhaps it is, after all, the supreme

that will serve to distinguish this beautiful edition from all other ornithological works. Every species of British bird must be figured in colours if a work is to be complete. Reproduced in Nature's colours by chromo-lithography, these plates are so exquisitely and accurately printed that it is almost impossible, even for an expert to detect any difference between them and the original water colours. The work contains an exact drawing of each Passerine bird included as British: the greater number are life-size, but the scale is given when the birds are drawn smaller than life. The egg-plates are beautifully printed in Nature's colours, and form one of the most complete series of Passerine egg-plates ever issued, giving variations in the form, markings, and colouration of the same species; a figure of the egg of every Passerine bird breeding in the British Isles is included.

For all Earnest Ornithologists.

Enough has been said to show that this fine edition is a necessity in the library of every serious ornithologist. Its outward presentment is admirable in every way. The type is new, and cast especially for this edition. The figures of birds are printed on the finest prepared plate paper: the paper on which the eggs are printed has been manufactured expressly for this work.

This is an opportunity to possess the most recent and up-to-date work on Ornithology (and the only one treating of and illustrating the entire range of Passerine bird life with their nests and eggs in Nature's colours) which should not be missed by ornithologists, the trustees of Public and Private Libraries, scholars in the great Public Schools, and by the reading public throughout the British Isles.

Viscount Llandaff writes:

"It is far and away the best popular work on the subject, and I shall certainly make it my business to induce all my friends to subscribe."

The "Field":

"... Mr. Butler has produced a very beautiful work which will appeal to all lovers of bird life, and especially to those who want accurate portraits of the feathered visitors to their gardens and homesteads."

How to Fit Up a Bird-room.

By ALBERT B. FORSE (Leyton, N.E.)

This is the Essay awarded First Prize in "Cage Birds" Competition in Section Four. Readers should note the announcement concerning this competition which appears on page 455 this week.

When first starting in the delightful hobby of Canary breeding, especially if breeding for exhibition, the novice seldom thinks of the great amount of work it entails to fit up a well-appointed bird-room. However, when once started, it becomes one of the breeder's greatest ambitions to make his bird-room compare favourably with any other in this respect.

It is wonderful the number of cages one requires, even with a stock of moderate proportions. Each year the number of breeding pairs is increased in spite of previous resolutions to limit the stock to a certain number, and each year it is found necessary to make or procure more cages until little by little the room is completely filled. It is with these cages, their arrangement and fittings, that I propose to deal; and, being a breeder of Yorkshire canaries, I shall describe the cages, etc., most suitable for that variety, though, of course, they are also suitable for other breeds, and the fitting up of the room applies equally to all.

How the Cages are made.

In the first place, the cages are all of uniform size and make. The breeders are all of the single pattern, being 23 inches long, 15 inches high and 11 inches deep. The wood used for making the cages is 7 cut pine, 11 inches wide. The backs are glued up to form one wide board, and are put together with plenty of 1 inch oval wire (French) nails. The nails should be slightly pitched the same way as the width of the board; they will then hold much tighter than if driven straight into the grain of the wood. Care must be taken, however, not to pitch the nail sideways, or it will come out at the side of the board.

The back should be fitted tightly inside the cage, not nailed on the outside; this will make the cage more rigid, and should the wood happen to shrink, the crevice will be detected easily. The top and bottom boards should be allowed to hang over ¼ inch at each end, thus giving more strength to the nailing.

Having made the box, the bottom rail should now be fixed in. These rails I make 2¾ inches wide, with 1 inch of this to take out for cleaning purposes. The cages are now fitted with loose, punched-bar fronts, with a sliding door in the centre, which is made to stop up when open, so that there is no fear of the birds being shut in the show cages when these are hung on for training purposes. In fact, all the cage-doors should be made in this way, including those of the show cages. To do this, all that is necessary is to pinch the running wires of the door with a pair of pliers, being careful not to make them run too stiffly.

The Construction of Stock Cages.

The doors of the stock cages should not be less than 4½ inches wide, to allow of the nest pan passing through them. There are three holes on the left-hand side of the front for the seed hoppers, and one on the right for water. See Fig. 2. These holes are 1 inch in diameter.

A small hook should be soldered on to each front for the show cages to hang on (see B, Fig. 2), and so that the perches are fully 9 inches from the top of cage, I solder on two pieces of wire for them to rest on, the pieces being long enough to touch on three wires as at A, Fig. 2. Regarding the perches, I may say I do not like the long perches which some fanciers use for the birds to feed from, as the excrement dropped from the perches above collects on them, and they are a great nuisance to keep clean. Instead of using these perches, I make the bottom rails of the cages only 2¾ inches deep, as above described. The birds can then stand on the floor of the cage to feed, and I find that they reach the food quite easily. I think, however, that if I kept Norwich Canaries, I should make these rails half-an-inch narrower. There are, therefore, only the two perches in each cage, and these are placed at about 8 inches apart, the pieces themselves being fixed on the fronts accordingly.

In the centre of the back of cage a small hook is screwed in for the nest-pan to hang on. This hook is placed so that when in position, the rim of the nest-pan is about 1 inch above the perches. I find this very convenient for the youngsters hopping out of the nest on to the perches. The perches should not, as a general rule, be less than ⅝ths of an inch wide and half-an-inch thick, and should be made oval in shape. Some birds, of course, require different perches to what others do. This point should be studied carefully, especially in the case of show birds, as it will be found that the birds will stand much better if the perch is to their liking. For instance, one bird may have large feet, and will therefore require a good-sized perch, and another bird will probably go better on a smaller perch; again, some birds like the perches a bit flat on the top.

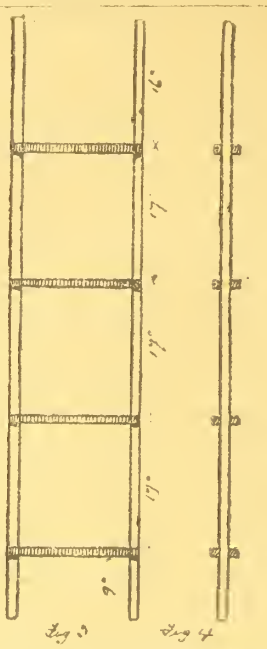

Fig. 3. Single Standard.
Fig. 4.—Showing Edge of Double Standard.

The slides are also very handy in the moulting season. I have four of these flight cages, and I am now making four more, and when these are finished, my room will be quite full.

I have in addition to these a stack of eight single cages, which I find very handy to keep the best birds in during the show season. These are 18 inches long, 15 inches high and 11 inches deep, so that although the cages differ in length they are all of one height and depth, and all painted one colour, viz., blue inside and black outside.

Painting and Enamelling.

Regarding the painting of the cages, it will be an advantage in the case of new cages to give them first a coat of size all over, allowing this to dry well before putting on the first coat of paint. If this is done the paint will not soak into the wood so much, and the cages will require only three coats to make them good; in fact, I have turned them out very well, having given them only two coats.

If enamel is used, only one coat should be put on for finish, painting the wood first with two or three coats of ordinary paint, as near the colour of the enamel as possible, but not darker, or the enamel will not cover. It is a mistake to think that a better job will be made of the cages by giving them, say, three coats of enamel on the raw wood as there is not much body in the enamel and when put one coat on another it is inclined to run, especially when used by a novice. Each coat of paint, when dry, should be rubbed down lightly with fine glass-paper and the cage well dusted out before painting again. The paint should not in any case be put on thickly with the idea of making a less number of coats, as two thin coats will give much better results than one thick one.

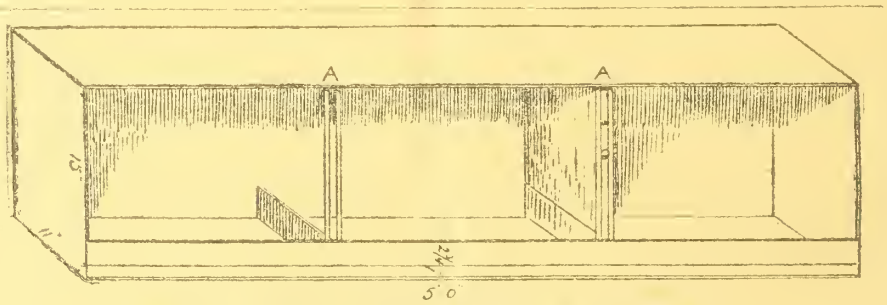

Fig. 5.—Three-Compartment Breeding or Flight Cage.
A.A.—Runners for the Slides.

Breeding, Flight, and Single Cages.

It is, of course, not necessary to use different sized perches for the breeding and flight cages, and if the above-mentioned size is used, it will keep the birds' feet in good condition, the nails seldom requiring to be cut. I have a stack of 12 of these breeders, and in my opinion these are quite enough for one room in order to allow sufficient space for the youngsters; and it will be found that with a very successful season it will be quite a job to find room for them, unless very large flights are used. Fig. 1 gives an idea of what my breeding-cage boxes are like.

I do not like very large flights, that is, where 40 or 50 or sometimes even more birds are kept together. By keeping them like this they become very wild, which is, of course, a great drawback in the case of Yorkshires, and indeed, I should think in the case of any variety. The flights I use are 5 feet long, 15 inches high, and 11 inches deep (see Fig. 5); in these I keep 10 or 12 birds, not more. These flights are fitted with two slides, as at A, Fig. 5; they can be divided into three separate cages if required. They are also fitted with three fronts made in the same way as the one already described.

These flight cages I use for the youngsters when they are leaving their parents. They take, as a rule, three nests of young, and should one nest not be quite so forward as the others, I just pop the slide in until the young are on the same food, when I draw the slide and let them all go together until the moult. The show cages are hung on to these flights as soon as the young birds are put into them.

A COLUMN FOR FANCIERS.

Appended are brief particulars of some of "Cage Birds" SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS for keepers and lovers of birds, with post free prices.

"THE HYGIENE OF BIRD-KEEPING." - 1/1.
By W. Geo. Creswell, M.D.
A most useful manual, thoroughly treating of modern hygiene in bird-keeping, by the most eminent living authority on the subject.

By R. H. Clarke, M.D.,
A very useful booklet concerning this dread disease. It is the only one published, and should be found in every bird-lover's library. Dr. Clarke has given the subject very special study.

"THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD CANARY." 1½d.
By J. H. Payne.
A Lecture reprinted from Cage Birds, delivered by this leading judge and expert before the London and Provincial Ornithological Society, and pronounced by all experts to be a most valuable pamphlet concerning the breeding of the variety.

BREEDING CAGE LABELS, 1d. doz., 7 doz. 6d
A boon to all breeders. Neatly printed in sets of twelve, on perforated gummed paper. They can be torn off, and affixed to the breeding cage in a moment, and prevent all confusion. Useful alike to both small and large breeders of birds.

CARD BREEDING REGISTERS, 1d. each, 4 for 3d., 9 for 6d.
For hanging up in the birdroom. Printed on suitable stiff card, they are ruled to hold a complete record of the breeding results of six pairs of birds; invaluable for future reference, to ensure that knowledge of one's stock essential to accurate breeding.

LIVE BIRD LABELS, 24, 3d.; 50, 6d.; 100, 1/-.
For use when despatching live birds on journeys by rail, or to the shows, etc. Printed in red ink and gummed on back. The simplest, neatest, and best on the market.

NOTE PAPER & POSTCARDS, 250 for 2/-; 500 for 2/6.
Until further notice we have decided to supply below cost price artistic Memorandum Forms and stout postcards, with name, address, twelve words of particulars, and blocks of any special variety of bird at half cost for cash. Carriage paid to any address in the U.K. Our latest style of note-head and postcard has been universally admired, and we will gladly send specimens to anyone enclosing stamped addressed envelope.

BLOCKS OF BIRDS, 1/6 each, 5 for 6/-, or 9 for 10/-.
For inserting in advertisements and for printing memorandums blocks of all kinds of birds at above low prices can be supplied. Larger blocks to order at cheapest possible rates. These dainty little blocks immensely enhance the appearance of note paper, postcards, and advertisements.

PICTURE POSTCARDS, 1d. each; set of six, 6d.
The most delightful and appropriate postcards of Canaries, British Birds, and Hybrids on the market, executed in colours by Mr. H. Norman. Ideal for Fanciers' correspondence. All represent exact and correct show types and have accompanying descriptions. State which bird or birds are required, or whether a mixed selection is preferred.
The latest set is entitled, "Pairs Matched for Breeding"; very educational art postcards. Price 3d. set of 8.

ORNAMENTAL PLATES, 1/- & 1/6 each.
The following coloured plates of Cage Birds can be obtained mounted on stiff card and gelatined. This process makes them washable and gives them the handsome appearance and all the durability of framed plates under glass:—Bullfinch, Blackbird and Robin, Border Fancy Canary, Bullfinch Hybrids, Cinnamon Canary, Cinnamon Marked Yorkshires, Foreign Finches, Goldfinch and Bullfinch, Hybrids (popular), Lancashire and Lizards, Mules (popular) Norwich (Yellow), Parrakeets, Yorkshires. Price 1s. each. Crests. Desirable Aliens (Foreign Birds), Larks and Pipits, Norwich (Blaze of Colour), Wagtails and Stonechat. Price 1s. 6d. each.
Also a padded plate of KINGFISHER having all the appearance of a hand painting executed on ivory. A most charming ornament for brackets, occasional tables, etc. Price 1s. All are post free.
Why spend large sums on decorating the house with other pictures?

FANCIERS' PRINTING.
Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work.

My Experiences with the Nightingale.

By J. JEFFREY (Kidderminster).

This is the Essay awarded FIRST PRIZE in "Cage Birds" Competition in Section Two. Readers should note the announcement which appears on page 455 concerning this Competition.

It is 35 years ago since I obtained my first Nightingale. Ornithology was then in its infancy very little practical information being forthcoming, and it was considered impossible to keep such a bird in confinement. Nothing daunting, however, I determined to try my hand.

Searching for a Nest.

I was living in Gloucestershire, and for several seasons a 'gale had made his house in a corner at the bottom part of our garden, which was surrounded by a thick box hedge and nut trees several deep. I examined the hedge from one end to the other, and every thorn bush on the bank of a stream on the opposite side; in fact, every conceivable place in which I thought the Nightingale could build; but all in vain. At last, when I had given up all hopes, I was standing one day in a small osier bed of a neighbour's garden when I heard a bird making a most peculiar noise, something similar to a low growl of a dog. On looking round to find out the cause, I discovered, sure enough, a Nightingale with a grub in its mouth. Imagine my delight; now was my chance. The nest was near, so I planted myself first in one position, then in another; I dodged here and there, but I was too anxious, and no nest could I find that day.

It was very evident the birds were feeding young ones, but the foliage was so thick and the birds so crafty, that, having little or no knowledge of the kind of nest to look for, or of the position in which it was likely to be found, I was three days in discovering its whereabouts. The young were fully fledged, and I realised that they should be taken at once.

The nest was built close to the ground and consisted of a rough structure made principally of leaves; I had some difficulty in holding it together. The greatest wonder was that I had not trampled on it; I must have looked at it many times, but the nest being made of dead leaves and the plumage of the young being so nearly of the same colour, the ground also being strewn with dead leaves, one could have looked at the nest 20 times without descerning it.

A Fruitless Attempt.

I shall never forget the pride with which I carried up my first nest of 'gales to my home. A cage had been cleaned, and was ready for their reception, and no sooner had the birds been placed in it than my troubles began! What was I to feed them on? No time must be lost; the birds must be fed. I had noticed the old birds carrying grubs to them during the three days I was watching them; but how was I to get sufficient to feed four birds? It was impossible.

Ants' eggs and mealworms were unknown to me, so I rushed off to a friend and borrowed a book on British Birds. In that I found a recipe for feeding young 'gales. So I was alright; the information was sure to be good; my mother was going to help me feed them, and I should be the proud possessor of four beautiful Nightingales. And when they were old enough to sing, what a treat! The food was speedily prepared. I don't remember the exact ingredients, but I know there were boiled bread and milk and hard-boiled eggs.

The birds were duly fed, and at night they were placed in a box and taken up to bed. I think I must have dreamt about them, for next morning I was awake at daylight. It was quite a struggle to rouse myself sufficiently to be able to place such small bits in such little mouths; but I managed to feed them 3 or 4 times before it was time to rise for breakfast. I took the birds down with me, and all in the house had a look. Yes, the birds were alright; they looked quite pert and everything seemed very satisfactory.

But towards night the poor little things began to spit out their food. I was evidently feeding them too much—I would give them a rest. I was very anxious that night and a fear came over me that something was wrong, and when I awoke at daylight next morning one of them was dead. Something was wrong. What could I do? I carefully examined the dead bird. Ah! I have it, I said to myself, the poor little things are bound up. Layer after layer of excreta lay at the vent. I gave them some castor oil, but with all I did the other three birds died the same day, and all my hopes were dashed to the ground.

I was very successful with Blackbirds, Thurshes, Magpies, Jays, Skylarks etc., and for several years it was quite a common thing for me to rear 60 or 70 young ones in a season. The time came, however, for me to leave home and go to my apprenticeship, and for a number of years I had neither time nor opportunity to return to my hobby. But everything comes to him who waits, and at last I was able to resume bird-breeding, when I determined to master the art of keeping Nightingales in confinement.

Locating Birds and Nests.

It was in the year 1896 that I set out to find as many pairs of 'gales as possible. For a small remuneration I persuaded a birdcatcher to accompany me on my journeys. My mode of operation was to start out at 9.30 p.m. and make a tour round the country, often travelling 10 or 12 miles before reaching home again. In this way I succeeded in locating something like thirty pairs of 'gales. Having accomplished this, my next plan was to visit the same spot at daylight to find out (as I considered) the most likely pairs to operate upon, as some of them were situated amongst such dense foliage and undergrowth as to give me very little chance of finding the nest.

This done, my next plan was to use the whole of my spare time in watching, with the aid of powerful field-glasses, one or the other's mode of nesting and their manner of feeding. Many a delightful hour have I passed away in this manner. Many people imagine that the Nightingale only sings at night, but this is a mistake; they sing as much in the day as other birds. I remember watching two pairs that were rather close together, and many a battle royal have I witnessed between them. They would both sing and fight for supremacy, each of the cocks taking care that his hen never rambled too near the domain of his rival.

If anyone wants to hear a 'gale sing he should hear him on an occasion like this. The two birds would sit for 20 minutes within five yards of each other and try their utmost to sing each other down; failing the accomplishment of this, they would finally dash at each other and fight till both lay helpless on the ground. I was so near to two such once that had I not hesitated so long I must have caught them under my hat; I only missed them by a few inches. But I was glad afterwards I did not, as these birds meant thirteen for me altogether that season—one nest of five, another of four, and the four old birds.

I was determined this time to make no mistake as to the diet; so, placing myself very close to the nest of a pair of birds, I watched for hours their mode of feeding, and, strange to say, I saw what I have not seen since. For several hours running, nine times out of ten the birds came with some kind of beetle in their mouths. With the aid of my glasses I could see them as plainly as if they were in my hand.

I got in a thick mass of ferns about seven yards away and practically covered myself over. After the first time or two of this the birds took no heed of me and went about their business as though I was not there. I have repeated this plan on many occasions since, but in nearly every instance the young have been fed on some kind of cat rpillar. The parents are very fond of searching the oak trees for these, and I have seen them fly 200 yards away to different oaks for their food, occasionally taking to the road-side for any stray beetle that might be running across.

Rearing Young Birds.

It was rather fortunate for me in my first essay seeing them feed on beetles, as I was well in with several bakers and mill owners that had hundreds of these large black-beetles on their premises. The walls of one bakehouse I use to visit at night were black with them, and I commissioned a youngster to go round with a tin and collect them at the rate of 1d. per hundred, and every morning he would bring me from three to four hundred beetles and crickets.

These I used to scald with boiling water and give the 'gales. No better food can possibly be given them. To my surprise I found that one pair of 'gales would devour 280 beetles daily. Now, as some of these beetles are nearly an inch long, this seemed almost impossible to me, but they devoured them day after day.

A Remarkable Menu.

I was successful that year in obtaining about 34 Nightingales. Some of them I reared by hand, but about 27 of these were young ones, and being put to my wits' end to secure sufficient food for them, I decided to give some of the old birds a chance of feeding their young, and was very pleased to find that they took to it very readily. This was a great relief to me as it gave me more time to collect their daily supply.

None but those who have kept so many of this class of birds can imagine the amount of food they devoured. I relied on gentles for the principal diet, and was in touch with some keepers who were collecting dead rabbits and cats for the purpose of breeding gentles; I was surprised at the quantity and quality of cats that fell into the keeper's hands. Besides this, 15 sheeps' heads were on order weekly, while three youths were collecting beetles for me.

For all this, I was at times put to my wits' end to keep the supply good, and often had to give these gentles before they were properly scoured in sand. It required over a gallon of solid gentles for the daily supply, and two or three wet, cold days would prove very disastrous to the supply.

Trouble in the Camp.

The birds did very well indeed on this food till the moulting season came round, and then I had a little bit of trouble. No doubt a lot of it was caused through having to give them the gentles before they were properly cleaned. Something like a dozen of the 'gales developed a disease in the head and went blind. I was much disappointed, as up till then the birds had gone on so well. And, strange to say, it was the finest looking birds that went wrong—possibly because they had fed better. Nightingales are very quarrelsome over their food, and the birds that had been kept away from the feeding vessels survived those that had fed well.

However, I became satisfied as to the cause of my trouble, and the season of wasps' nests being now on, I employed several men in collecting "wasp cake," and to a very large extent I stopped the supply of gentles. Wasps' nests were very plentiful that season, and I robbed as many as 40 myself in one day. The loose grubs were excellent food for the 'gales, and I was not long in descerning a marked improvement in my birds. Those that were a bit delicate soon picked up and I moulted out some grand specimens. The disease also disappeared, and I lost no more birds that season. I cured all the wasp grubs that were covered up in their cells and put them by for a future time, and I very soon had several hundredweight of cured wasp cake. This I found most useful for winter use.

Leaving the Nest.

Although the young appear to be well clothed on leaving the nest the density of feather is more apparent than real on account of the loose fluffy nature of the feathers and their immature condition, which makes the slight extra warmth gained by roosting on the side of the nest a decided advantage to sleeping on a perch. The actual age at which the young finally quit the nest is dependent upon the treatment they receive from the parents, and to some extent upon the number in the brood. Thus a brood that is thoroughly well fed, and not plucked by the parents will, as a rule, leave the nest in from eighteen to twenty-one days. This is perhaps the average time, and will cover the time of leaving of the vast majority of normal broods.

I have known birds, especially small broods, leave the nest earlier, but they are exceptions; and others, particularly in the case of very large broods, and of indifferent parents who have fed in a half-hearted manner and perhaps plucked the young as well, will be nearer a month before the final exit takes place. Small broods of two or three birds will naturally be better fed, given the same kind of parents, than broods of four or five, and for this reason small broods will be found to thrive better, grow faster, and leave the nest two or three days sooner on an average than large ones. But in every case, whether the birds have done well or badly, the aim should always be to keep them in the nest as long as possible.

Regulating Broods.

Whenever the exigencies of pedigree-breeding will allow it to be carried out it is an excellent plan to regulate the size of the broods by taking from abnormally large ones and adding to very small ones. An average of three is a nice brood for a pair of birds to rear, and it will almost invariably be found that these broods consist of stronger and better developed birds than will be found to occur where four or five birds are reared at once by the same pair.

Therefore if one has a number of broods of about the same age, some containing one or two birds and others four or five, or in exceptional cases, six, one, two, or three of the young, as the case may be, should be taken from the large broods, and distributed amongst the small broods so as to make them all three each. On the other hand, if there should remain a brood of only one young after making them up to an average of three all round besides, that one should be given to one of the best feeding pair, and the parents allowed to begin nesting again.

It goes without saying that in thus regulating the families, one should, as far as their knowledge of the birds will permit, select the pair that are the best all round parents and feeders to rear the young, and when a brood is wholly distributed it should be that brood belonging to the pair which are the least reliable as feeders and nurses. Say, for example, one has two pairs of birds with broods of one and three respectively. If the pair with only a solitary youngster are known to be a better feeding pair than the one with three they should have the extra three young given them, and not vice versa. This change should not be made all at once, as would be the case in giving a single bird to another pair which already had two of their own. Both pairs must be kept going for a day or two so the brood may be transferred gradually.

One young may be added in the morning, and if the birds appear to take kindly to it at once and feed both young well right away, the other two may be added at once in the evening just when the birds are settling down for the night. See that the crops are full when the change is made so that they will be strong and "gape" well next morning. If the birds appear somewhat chary of the first young one given it will be advisable not to add another that day. But if they are feeding well next day then complete the transference by adding one more young on each of the next two evenings.

When Cripples Appear.

One little detail the fancier must not think too trivial for notice; though apparently insignificant at the time, it will if neglected become a grave trouble. This detail is to be on the look-out when changing soiled nests, containing young for clean ones, for cases of crippled feet—or slipped claws, as it is more familiarly called. If the claws of the young are found to be contracted and drawn together in a bunch without the power of opening out or gripping anything, they should be attended to forthwith, as they are more amenable to treatment at this time than they will ever be again, and if this trouble is allowed to go unattended for any appreciable length of time, no treatment will be of the least benefit, but will probably cause the patient excruciating pain. For this latter reason, and the doubtful value of any treatment after these crippled feet have once become firmly fixed in position I consider it is always much the wisest, as it certainly is the kindest plan, to leave them severely alone. It is essentially a case where one's motto should be early treatment or none.

Method of Treatment.

Therefore, when one is giving a clean nest when a brood is about a fortnight old, this being the first opportunity one usually has of handling the young, it affords a chance which should not be missed of examining whether the claws are in the normal state. If this is not the case, and any hind claws are turned permanently forward, they should be gently placed back in the proper position and loosely tied to the leg—this, of course, is using the word as understood by the general body of fanciers, in preference to the fearsome term "tarso-metatarsus" which the strictly scientific nomenclaturists, to coin a term, would deem correct. But we'll call it the leg for convenience sake. So tie the hind claw loosely to the leg with a bit of soft and thin mending wool. But if the front claws are curled underneath in a fist-like clutch, the best plan is to cut a very narrow strip from a stout postcard, about three-quarters of an inch in length and, gently drawing the claws out straight, place this strip of card underneath, and bind them on to it.

Should there be only one of the front claws affected, one may dispense with the card and bind the deformed claw alongside its nominal neighbour, when the latter will keep it in its proper forward position.

Needless to say, all these operations require extreme care and delicacy of touch. It is so easy to overdo the thing and still more seriously harm a delicate nestling, that this caution is advisable. Above all, do not tamper with a bird unless there is a real necessity for interference. If you think a bird's claws appear deformed, do not jump to the conclusion that they really are without further examination. Satisfy yourself first that it is not a normal and voluntary contraction on the part of the bird which would be relaxed naturally as soon as the bird was left quietly alone.

Removing the Bandages.

In all these cases where one has put on these makeshift splinters and bandages, they should be removed as soon as the birds leave the nest. By this they have had plenty of time to overcome the deformity in birds of this tender age, and if they are left on the birds after they leave the nest, there is a certain danger of the defects being over-corrected, and mischief done in other ways. But, again, one must keep a sharp look-out on these birds for a week or so after they leave the nest, to see the claws do not go back to their unnatural position.

Should they do so, no time should be lost in replacing the remedial appliances, which will be of the same kind, except that an eighth of an inch of the rubber tube of a feeding bottle will be better than tying wool for the hind claw. A close watch should, indeed, be kept over the feet of all birds, and more particularly those of large varieties, for these defects for some days after they first take to the perches. This is the time when they are most apt to occur, due probably to the birds not being sufficiently skilful in travelling the perches and twisting or otherwise straining their claws.

Proper Perches Essential.

A fertile cause of these deformities of birds' feet which is not often suspected is improper perches. This includes not only perches which are of a bad shape and wrong size, but also badly placed, and ill-fitting, wriggley sticks which give the birds some trouble to keep their position. A perch that is too small will very often set up serious foot trouble with a large and heavy bird. The constant strain of supporting itself on a perch that is too small for it will often make the feet of a Crest, Crestbred, or Lancashire, so painful that the bird has a real difficulty in standing upright, and passes a good deal of its time either on the cage floor or crouching flat upon its stomach on the perch. This fact may often give rise to cases which puzzle the novice considerably.

The difference that perches will make is strikingly illustrated when one puts birds of these large varieties in a cage that has been vacated by Lizards or Borders. The perches might have been all that could be desired for the smaller birds, and consequently all went well, but the larger birds were no sooner settled in the cage than things began to go wrong, and the birds lost their vivacity and began to sit crouching flat upon the perch as much as possible. In the great majority of such cases sore and cramped feet will be found to be at the root of the trouble, and the perches the cause of it all.

For the smaller varieties a perch varying from three-eighths of an inch to half an inch wide and three-eighths of an inch thick with just the square edges trimmed off is a very good size: but for the large breeds the width should not be less than five-eighths of an inch, and the same thickness, so that when the edges are roughly trimmed off and the perch drawn a few times through a fold of very coarse sandpaper, it forms a nice flattened oval with a very slight corrugation running across it from end to end all the way round, which gives the heaviest bird a splendid grip and foothold.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

The Chiff Chaff in Surrey.

The day previous to the snow coming, was wet and dreary, with a cold, nipping east wind. A solitary little Chiff-Chaff was flitting about the garden, first among the rose trees, then searching diligently up the fence where the [illegible] dons are trained. He evidently found food fairly plentiful, for he looked exceedingly bright and perky, considering the weather. After the snow had melted as the wind was blowing strongly, he rambled up the footpath to [illegible] Farm. Upon one side is a fair-sized wood; the vegetation in it is very forward, in consequence of its sheltered position. There is always a good number of birds to be seen and heard here, and it is just one of those favoured spots that the early migrants select to settle in. Mingled with the music of the Thrushes one could occasionally hear the sweet trilling notes of a Warbler. There was hardly sufficient to identify the singer by, yet enough to make sure it was neither Dunnock nor Robin. These early notes of the Warblers are generally very faint and unassuming, as though the singer has not yet gained sufficient confidence in his own musical abilities to render his song in full. But, however poorly rendered, they are as welcome as the choicest passages, sung with full power and vigour in the month of June for by that time we are somewhat sated with the music of our feathered minstrels. A manure heap appears to be a rather strange place to look for choice Warblers, yet one knows from experience that in the early summer months this is just the place where the first insects are to be found; consequently wild birds will be there also. Some half-dozen Chiff-Chaffs were flitting about such a heap; they looked anything but happy. With six inches of snow covering everything, they must have spent a cheerless, miserable night, and were possibly without food until the warm April sun melted the winter mantle. They are quick, lively little birds, and are as smart in catching insects on the wing as any of the Flycatchers. Possibly the climatic conditions and the want of food made them less shy than usual as they came within a few feet of us darting about with all the agility they are capable of, although with ruffled plumage.

Food of the Brown Owl.

It is doubtful if the Brown Owl is quite so useful as its congeners, for although it will destroy mice and voles, it takes a heavy toll of feathered life. The common House Sparrow is seldom claimed as a victim.

Protection of Wild Birds.

The protection of wild birds has now become practically a wholesale matter. Although one is delighted to see plenty of bird life when rambling along the country lanes and fields, yet it appears reasonable to hope that the authorities will, from time or time, revise their lists, as some species make considerably more headway than others, and the extraordinary increase of some would possibly outnumber others, and thus prevent somewhat rarer birds from deriving much benefit from protection.

The Wild Birds' Nest.

It is only the nest of the common Hedge Sparrow, one of a dozen, that may be found any morning in the month of May. It is placed in a thicket where the twisted branch of the thorn presses tightly against the moss-grown fence. The feathered architect has built a home of surpassing beauty. The exterior is moss of various shades, gathered from the sloping bank close by. A few dead stalks of last year's herbage are mingled with it, giving a careless, natural look to the structure. Where it touches the fence a little lichen has been added, so closely resembling the weather-worn timber that it needs close scrutiny to detect where one begins and the other ends. It is warmly lined with hair, a scrap of wool, and a few feathers. To collect the materials and build such a nest must have been a big task to such little creatures, and when one thinks that this labour of love will possibly be destroyed in a minute by some thoughtless youth, we cannot but admire these wild birds, for their patience is inexhaustible, and their perseverance something to envy. If one home is destroyed or robbed they at once immediately commence another.

THE SHOWS.

HALIFAX O.S.

The second members' monthly show was held at the Griffin Hotel on May 2nd. A good muster of members turned up. Mr. W. Speak (Halifax) judged, and gave entire satisfaction.

BUFF YORKS.: 1, A. Lloyd; 2, vhc, H. W. Walsh; 3, hc, c, Ross and Robertshaw. NOVICE DO.: 1, B. Garside; 2, 3, vhc, Saville and Hargreaves; hc, c, S. Haigh.—J. F. TUCKRAY and H. WHITAKER, Secretaries.

NORTHERN B.B. M. AND F.B.C.

A successful meeting and table show were held in Lockhart's Cafe, Newcastle-on-Tyne, when a good muster of fanciers and friends met. There were three classes for competition, but we had to cancel the soft bills. The Goldfinch, Bullfinch, Chaffinch and Bramblefinch brought 11 entries, and some were very promising.

HARDBILL: 1, Slack, Bramble grand size and colour; 2, Maddison, Goldfinch, a good finch; 3, Bertram, grand Chaffinch for size not yet in full bloom. A.O.S. HARDBILL (13) brought seven varieties: 1, Story, Blackheaded Bunting, grand size and colour, very steady; 2, Maddison, large Linnet, nice, even colour; 3, Sheppard, Yellow-hammer, gem for colour and markings, with a little more size would be a topper. On our next meeting night, May 20th, we are having three more classes for field-moulted birds, Judge, Mr. Sheppard. We also enrolled two new members, also Vice-President Mr. Dawson. All British, Mule and Foreign Bird Fanciers are cordially invited to join, distance being no object. Rule books will be forwarded to members shortly.—J. R. SLACK, Hon. Secretary.

ALNWICK AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

A very successful meeting and table show for British birds were held at headquarters, The Temperance Hotel, on April 30th, when there was a very good muster of fanciers and friends. Mr. J. Robinson officiated as judge, which he did to the satisfaction of all. The Greenfinch shown by Mr. R. Baxter, was a credit to its owner, taking special for best bird in show, which speaks well for a young novice fancier.

GOLDFINCH, ETC.: 1, Thain, nice Goldie, good bars and tans; 2, Straughan, very nice Goldfinch, just beaten on condition; 3, Forster, Bullfinch, grand cap and size; vhc, Rennison, Goldfinch; hc, c, A Moir. GREENFINCH, ETC.: 1, Baxter, Greenfinch, most perfect specimen, with a moult should take some beating; 2, vhc, Rennison, 2 shade paler in colour, vhc nice Chaffinch; 3, H. P. Staig, Bramblefinch, good size and markings. LINNET GRAY: 1, Rennison, nice size, good, nutty colour and markings; 2, Cairns, a good bird. SISKIN, ETC.: 1, Rennison, taking little Redpoll, fit for keener competition. The judge next gave us a lecture on staging, and how he placed the awards, which was well received. Most points gained throughout show were as follows: R. F. Rennison, 8; R. Baxter, 9; W. Thain, 8. A silver medal was given by the secretary for most points gained throughout the table shows, donor not competing. Messrs. T. Burnett and A. Tweedy were enrolled as new members. Votes of thanks were given to the judge, who was chosen to judge at our show of British birds at our next meeting.—R. F. RENNISON, Hon. Sec.

SINGING CONTESTS.

SHEFFIELD.

Linnet singing contest held at Dog Inn on May 3rd. 27 birds competed. Winners: Knight and Robinson tied for 1st, the scores being 81 each; 3rd, Knight, 75. Judges, Messrs. Blackhadder and Darkey.—H. TIMMS, Sec.

EDMONDSLEY.

Linnet contest, held May 2nd, at the Club House, Colliery Inn, 40 birds competing for three prizes. Result as follows:—1st, 2nd, 3rd, F. Pullar. Judge, Mr. J. Mason; timekeeper, J. Needham. R. Boyd acted as book-keeper.—JOHN NEEDHAM, Sec.

YORK.

Usual weekly contest, held at Bricklayer's Arms, Palmer Lane, on May 2nd, when 24 birds faced the judges. Result:—1st, Allan; 2nd, Key; 3rd, Whitehead; 4th, Laverick; 5th, Chaplin; 6th, Massheder. Judge, Mr. John Paver. Timekeeper, Mr. J. Limbert.—WM. EMPSON.

LEEDS.

Usual weekly contest held at King's Head, Shannon-street, May 2nd, when 16 birds sang. 1st and 3rd, C. Biss; 2nd, T. Stead. Judges, Messrs. Crane and Chadwick. Also on May 3rd, when 25 birds competed. 1st, 4th, and 6th prizes, T. Stead; 2nd, Hardcastle; 3rd and 5th, C. Biss.—Judges, Messrs. C. Cooper and Allen.—T. SUMMERS.

PENTONVILLE.

Weekly contest, held at the Bee Hive, Cynthia-street, Pentonville-road. Linnet and Chaffinch handicaps have been going fairly well. Meacock, Dave, Country Dick, Mabbett, and Howes each found winning birds. Bee Hive open for Linnet or Chaffinch race; reply through CAGE BIRDS. F. Westmore, timekeeper.

SKININGROVE.

The Skiningrove L.S.S. held their cup contest on May 2nd, when the winners were as follows:—1st, Hodge; 2nd and 6th, Dobson and Burnett; 3rd, Leng; 4th, Fox; 5th, Rawson. Messrs. Dobson and Burnett are the winners of the cup for the season. Week-end contest, held April 25th: 1st, Fox; 2nd, Jackson; 3rd, Leng. Contest held April 18th: 1st, Whelford; 2nd, Leng; 3rd, Fox. Timekeeper, J. C. Havelock. Judge, Mr. F. Deadon.—M. DOBSON, Sec.

NEWTOWN (Leeds).

Usual week-end contest took place at the Prince Albert Inn. Results as follows: May 2nd, 15 birds. Judges, Messrs. B. Jackson and G. Tower; timekeeper, Mr. E. Wood. 1st, Kibberly; 2nd and 3rd divided between W. Sissons and A. Binner. Also May 3rd, when 23 birds faced the judges, Messrs. B. Jackson and G. Towers; timekeeper, Mr. E. Wood. Result: 1st, W. Sisson; 2nd and 3rd divided between W. Sissons and A. Binner.—E. WOOD, Hon. Sec.

LEIGH.

An open Linnet Singing Contest, held at Standard Mowen, Chapel Street, Leigh, on May 2nd, when 34 birds competed for 8 prizes—4 prizes for time singing, and 4 for quality. Result for time:—1st, J. Sefton; 2nd, D. Thompson; 3, Wardle; 4, J. Green; for quality: 1st, J. W. Jones; 2nd, P. O'Neil; 3rd, Aspinall; 4th, J. Sefton. Judges for time:—Messrs. O'Neil and Ellison. Timekeeper, Mr. Aspinall. Judges for quality:—Messrs. G. Rostron and J. W. Jones. After the match the prizes were given by Mr. G. Rostron. Another open contest will be held at Collier's Rest, Westleigh Mill, Leigh, on May 9th.—J. W. Jones.

CLUB REPORTS.

BRIGHOUSE AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

The members met at headquarters on April 28th to hear a lecture on the Yorkshire Canary given by Mr. S. Dean (Gt. Horton), which was very interesting. The lecturer answered many questions in an able manner, and a vote of thanks to the lecturer brought a very pleasant meeting to a close.—W. MITCHELL, Hon. Sec.

DERWENT VALLEY C.B.S.

Usual monthly meeting held at headquarters, New Westwood, on May 2nd, Mr. G. Barkas in chair. We went into schedule for first feather show to be held June 27th. There will be 16 classes for Canaries and British birds, and Mr. Thos. Robson (Newcastle) will judge. Mr. J. Stanger, of Felton Fell, is to judge our open show to be held December 26th.—JAS. BROWN, Assist. Sec.

HUDDERSFIELD O.S.

The society at their meeting on April 27th had their quarterly lecture at headquarters, the White Hart Hotel. Mr. Geo. Cartwright, Vice-President, was the lecturer, and, in his usual humorous manner, gave a very instructive and interesting discourse on "Canary Breeding," which was highly appreciated by a large gathering of members and friends. The usual vote of thanks brought a very successful meeting to a close.—S. LODGE.

HEYWOOD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Usual monthly meeting was held April 28th at the Central Dining Rooms. Mr. James Perry presided over a good attendance of members. The principal business was classification for first feather show, to be held on June 27th. Mr. F. W. Nelson, of Stockport, was appointed judge of Canaries, and Mr. James Law, of Rochdale, of British birds and Mules.

RUTHERGLEN AND DISTRICT O.A

Monthly meeting was held on 27th April, Mr. Boyd, vice-president, in the chair. The business was mostly taken up with the reports of members concerning breeding, which were, on the whole, disappointing on account of the unfavourable weather. It was agreed that a young bird show be held on 27th June in the Old Council Chamber. Two new members were admitted into the society.—FRANK WILSON, Secretary.

GREAT HORTON (Good Intent) O.S

Owing to the bad weather there was only a moderate turn-up of fanciers to hear Mr. Wm. Cruise's leeture on his favourite, the Yorkshire Canary, at the Church Schools, Southfield Lane, on April 25. He gave us his experience on first starting the hobby, and the ups and downs he had had since in breeding and exhibiting. He also urged young and new fanciers to join a society as a means of intercourse with other fanciers and judges. There were a lot of questions asked, and these were answered in an able manner by the lecturer. A vote of thanks to Mr. Cruise for his instructive lecture was carried unanimously. Mr. Cruise responded, and then an enjoyable evening was brought to a close.—H. SCHOFIELD, hon. secretary.

The Standard Guide to the Fancy,

IS

The Hit of the Season.

LETTERS OF APPRECIATION REACH US BY EVERY POST.

A charming new cover, many beautiful illustrations of winning birds printed on art paper, a lovely coloured plate for frontispiece, a complete revision of all the popular features, and the addition of strikingly useful new features, mark this 1908 issue.

The articles, too, have never been excelled, and both Canary, Hybrid, British and Foreign bird keepers have been specially catered for. The needs of the beginner have likewise been given the fullest consideration.

REIGATE.

The cage bird section of the Association held a meeting at Mutton's Hotel on April 13th, when a good number of members turned up to hear a lecture, which was given by Mr. A. J. Kilby, of Caterham, on "My Experience in the Breeding of Norwich Plainheads." The lecturer gave some very good hints, which will be very useful to both old and young fanciers, and several questions were asked, which were ably answered by Mr. Kilby. A vote of thanks was given to Mr. Kilby, which he suitably responded to.—A. W. BACON, Hon. Sec.

TONG AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

On April 28th we had Mr. J. S. Clarkson (Halifax) among us to lecture on the pairing, breeding, and rearing of Canaries, Mr. T. Ogden (Ogden Bros.) in the chair. Mr. Clarkson's address was listened to very closely by the large number present. Mr. Clarkson gave some excellent advice and recipes which no doubt will be put to the test by the members before long. He dwelt at great length on the diseases young birds are subject to, also on egg food, and what to do with young ones when a few weeks old. At the close of his address our chairman invited questions, which were soon forthcoming. A vote of thanks to the lecturer was carried, to which he suitably replied. We extend a hearty welcome to fanciers in surrounding districts to join us. There is no limit. We are members of the Yorkshire Union.—J. SMITH, Secretary.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

A specially convened meeting was held on April 25th at the Fawcett Street Cafe, when despite the inclement weather there was a good muster of members. A letter was read from Mr. Gordon, intimating his desire to resign the secretaryship, his reason being that he desired a rest, having served the society as secretary for 15 years, (7 and 8 years respectively). His letter concluded with the heartily expressed wish that the society would continue to prosper, and with the assurance that he would do all in his power in the future as he had done in the past to help in the attainment of that object. It was decided that his resignation be accepted, and that a letter of thanks for his past services on behalf of the society be forwarded to him. Mr. Copeland then resigned his position as assistant secretary stating that he would like to see it held by another. His resignation was accepted, and he too was accorded a hearty vote of thanks for his past services. It was then proposed and seconded that Messrs. W. Reid and W. Maddison be joint secretaries. This was carried unanimously. The ordinary business was then proceeded with and correspondence from the secretaries of the various specialist clubs was dealt with. It was decided to have 5 classes for Yorkshires at our next annual open show, and, if we obtain the patronage of the Lancashire and Lizard Specialist Club to add two more Lizard classes to the two already guaranteed by Messrs. Reid and Riseborough. Mr. R. Armstrong proposed that Messrs. Sanderson, and J. Richardson become members. These two fanciers were admitted as members, and received a hearty welcome. Other fanciers desirous of joining us may do so by attending the next meeting, or by communicating with the secretaries. Suggestions were made for a day's outing, and probably a ramble will be arranged, to take place about the end of June. An interesting discussion, opened by Mr. A. Brown of Gateshead, on Hybrid breeding, and which was taken part in by several of the members, brought a first-class meeting to an end.—REID and MADDISON, Secretaries.

WELSH CAGE BIRD CLUB.

Preparing Birds for Exhibition.

At the annual meeting held on April 21st at Aberdare, Mr. G. L. Harber, M.R.C.V.S., read a paper on "Preparing of Birds for Exhibition." He spoke as follows:—

I have been asked by our worthy secretary to read a paper, or sing a song, for this our first meeting of the year. I want you to let me down easily, for I am well aware that I am in a veritable hotbed of fanciers in S. Wales—fanciers who can hold their own against others of any part of the United Kingdom.

We will take for granted that you have had a good breeding season (which I most sincerely hope all of us will), and that you have a number of young birds in the flights, some of which look promising, others not so. I think I hear someone say, "Oh, I'm not going to the expense and trouble of colour-feeding all these; I shall just pick out the best, and let the others run in the flight." But are you sure that you are selecting the best birds? Young birds after tremendously during their first moult, and the worst looking youngsters often turn out the best. I should suggest that you colour-feed all your stock (of course, I am speaking now of those varieties which admit of artificial colouring); it not only enhances the beauty of the birds, but also their value. The expense is very trivial. I think I hear some of you say, "How about ruining the constitutions of your birds by giving them a lot of colour feeding?" Well, my experience has taught me that colour-feeding does not injure the internal organs in any way. I have made lots of postmortem examinations upon birds which have been killed accidentally, and the internal organs have been perfectly healthy, although these birds have been hot fed.

You have now got your birds well through their moult, and the shows are about to come on. Now is the time to begin handling them; that is, running them into a show cage, every day for a short while. I give them at this time a little mixed seed every other day, as during the moult they have had nothing but plain Canary, and a little linseed. But beware of hemp seed, as nothing puts a Norwich or a Yorkshire so much out of shape as hemp. And what is uglier than a hemp-seed-chested Norwich? The next thing is to see to your bird's cleanliness of feather. Of course, you must have your birds clean, but avoid washing as much as possible for the first two or three shows after the moult. Spraying with warm water should be sufficient to keep them clean. After that you will have to wash, but still wash as seldom as possible, as this is a very trying ordeal for most birds, and very often leads to colds and asthma, and very often nervous birds faint. When you do wash your birds, do it thoroughly, and take your time. I don't intend to go into the modus operandi, as we shall have plenty of that shown us to-day; but, let me say, always wash three days before the show, and keep them covered in a show cage and spray them every morning until you send to the show.

The next item is your show cage. Have this scrupulously clean, wires nicely blacked, and if a box cage nicely enamelled. I think pale green shows off a carefully fed bird aswell as any colour. The perches should be of nice size and clean. I was surprised to see the dirty condition of some really good birds shown at some of our big exhibitions last season. I consider that a Scotch Fancy, a Belgian or Crest should be shown in as cleanly a condition as a Norwich or a Yorkshire Canary, and many a good bird is pegged through being badly staged. This closes my paper; if there should be any hints useful to any of you I shall be amply repaid.—D. H. TENSTONE.

HAMILTON (Cadzow Oaks) O.S.

Usual monthly meeting held in Room 5, Royal Hotel, on the 2nd May. Mr. W. Haddow, president, occupied the chair. The date of our next annual (open) show was altered from 28th to 21st November. The selection of judges was proceeded with. The date of our young bird (open) show was fixed for 4th July, when it is hoped local fanciers will patronise us and make it a huge success. The classification has not yet been fixed. In connection with this it transpired that some of our members are having a lucky breeding season, two Greenie Bullfies and Linnet Mules being reported. Strenuous efforts are being made to make our society more popular in the district, and with a view to this negotiations for a lecture by a well-known fancier at our meeting on 6th June are being made. Fanciers are heartily invited to attend.—A. CANT, Secretary.

SCOTTISH METROPOLITAN OPEN DERBY O.A.

On April 29th we issued a large number of postcards to Scotch Fancy and Belgian breeders who had previously received copies of membership tickets. They were sent to those who had not before let us know as to whether they intended joining, and also to those who had tickets for disposal. Fanciers who had already joined, not having any extra tickets in their possession, did not receive postcards. We hope they will accept this explanation. Being extremely anxious to have as large a number as possible, we would specially request those gentlemen who have made up their minds to become members, to send on their reply by May 18th at latest. Of course, it is understood that the time allowed for joining the association does not expire until the 31st of this month, when all subscriptions must have been paid. Should there have been any fanciers omitted, will they please apply for copy of rules, when they will be sent on by return of post. We are meeting with a liberal response to our postcards, and we take this opportunity of returning thanks to those fanciers who are so ably assisting us in securing members.—J. R. MEIKLE, Hon. Sec. and Treas., 51, Lothian-rd., Edinburgh.

GATESHEAD AND DIS. C.B.S.

At the last ordinary meeting of the society it was agreed that Mr. Battye be appointed an additional judge for our show to be held on December 11th and 12th. Six new members were elected, and these received a hearty welcome: Messrs. Crawhall (Newcastle), Mullin, Tait, Askew, Robins (of Gateshead), and J. Robson (Sacriston). Recompense for special loss in transit was considered satisfactory and agreed to. It was also agreed to add novice classes for young birds in our next open schedule—one each for Norwich, Borders, Yorks, Cinnamons and Mules. Also one each Crest and Crestbred, with the usual guarantee that all classes be paid full prize money. The next meeting was arranged to take place May 20th.—THOS. TAYLOR, Hon. Sec.

OPEN NORWICH PLAINHEAD CLUB

The voting for the election of vice-chairman and committee of the above has been very satisfactory, 59 ballot papers being returned out of 72 sent out. This can be considered very good. The following have been elected:—Vice-chairman, Mr. F. Hammond; Bradford committee, Messrs. Haigh (Buttershaw), R. Halliday (Shipley), Joe Wilcock (Eccleshill), W. H. Shackleton (Wilsey), H. S. Naylor, J. E. Brotherton (Bradford), T. Boyle (York), H. J. Chittenden (Bradford), W. A. Cowgill (Girlington), H. W. Battye (Huddersfield), A. Hirst (Accrington), B. Holmes (Keighley), S. H. Jeffreys (Sowerby Bridge), W. H. Lindley (Wombwell), Wm. Foxall (Ashton-under-Lyne), A. J. Savery (Leeds), A. W. Waters (Wombwell-nr.-Barnsley), J. Moorhouse (Meltham), J. F. Thackray (Halifax), and A. Pickles (Wadsworth). The club is progressing splendidly, having a membership at present of 72. The secretary would be pleased to send particulars, etc., to intending members.—O. MITCHELL, Hon. Sec., 13, Lodge-terrace, Bowling, Bradford.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE C.B.S.

Usual monthly meeting held at headquarters on April 2nd, when there was a large attendance. Mr. J. Currah (chairman) presided. The first item was the fixing of the date of first feather show. It was carried that we hold it on July 11th. It was also carried that there be two classes for each variety of Canaries, and two for Mules. It was further decided to add some British and Foreign bird classes, viz., Goldfinch or Bullfinch, Greenfinch, Linnet, Chaffinch, or Bramblefinch, Siskin, Redpoll, or Twite, A.O.S. Hardbill, and two classes for Softbills, one for Lark, or smaller, and the other for birds larger than a Lark; two Foreign classes, one for Goldfinch or Bullfinch, and the other for A.O.S. Foreign. It was proposed and carried that all birds competing in British and Foreign Goldfinch and Bullfinch classes he field moulted. Messrs. T. Robson (for Canaries) and J. Maddison (for the remainder) were elected judges. This completed the general business. Mr. T. C. Crawhall then gave his promised lecture on the Yorkshire Canary, and right well did he do it, as someone said. He first told us what he thought to be a real typical show Yorkshire; then how to pair up for breeding show specimens. Not the least interesting were his remarks anent feeding. I have no doubt these were highly appreciated by the novices present. After Mr. Crawhall had answered questions (and he got plenty of them), our vice-chairman, Mr. McPartling, proposed a vote of thanks to him for his highly interesting and instructive lecture, which was carried with acclamation. Mr. Crawhall suitably replied. Mr. McPartling, our C.B.U. delegate, gave a report of a meeting he had attended. The following new members were elected:—Mrs. Pearce (this being the second lady on our books), Messrs. J. Lumsden, C. Birkett, D. E. Kent, A. Holdon, D. Todd, R. Johnson, A. Stevenson, J. Muters, S. S. Hnxham, J. G. Smith, and T. Smith. Will members please note that subscriptions are now due, and at our next meeting, May 7th, the schedule for open show is to be drawn up.—CURRY and HUTCHINSON, joint Secretaries.

METROPOLITAN ASSOCIATION OF CANARY BREEDERS.

At the Crown Hotel, Lavender Hill, Mr. C. A. House delivered before the members of the above society an instructive lecture, entitled, "Where are we." Mr. House reminded his hearers that they were now at that season of the year when fanciers were anxious to have their birds on the go in breeding operations. He advised them to go steadily for the time was yet young. In breeding Yorkshires, fanciers should at all times keep the standard type before them. The great craze for size amongst some fanciers was a mistake, and their class of bids would nine times out of ten, under a good judge, get beaten by a bird that could rightly be termed a standard type of bird. The class of bird set forth in the standard invariably carried itself better, had nicer quality, and was more attractive. That other popular variety, the Norwich, was making great headway in all-round properties, and to breeders of that variety he would give the same advice—stick to the standard type. In this variety the Northern Fancier liked size, and the Southern Fancier, particularly in the west, had the smart chubby bird teeming with quality. Mr. House touched upon the other varieties, and in every case assured his hearers that type and quality would come out on top except, perhaps, in Crests, where it was generally a case of all heads and no tails. At the conclusion of the lecture the Chairman congratulated the members upon having the opportunity of hearing so instructive a lecture. He reminded them that the collection for young bird show specials amounted to nearly a couple of sovereigns, and that he was anxious to see even that good sum added to, for they were having good judges. With plenty of members he hoped to see the Club stage a larger number of birds than any Society in London.—In questioning the lecturer, Mr. Honeysett desired to know whether a strain of birds could he built up from one pair of birds? Mr. House replied in the affirmative, and showed how the same could be accomplished.—Mr. Eversett inquired whether In-breeding lessened size?—Mr. House's reply was a decided no, providing that sound judgment was used in selection. He spoke from long practical experience in nearly every branch of the Fancy.—Mr. McGregor wished to learn the reason why the young from the same pair of birds should vary every season, if not nearly every nest?—Mr. House said that In-breeding was the only way to secure a unity of points, and that birds unrelated, as were Mr. McGregor's, would throw all sorts, and generally nothing in particular.—A vote of thanks to Mr. House for his able lecture brought the meeting to a close.—A. J. HEAD, Secretary.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

There was a special gathering, including several ladies, and Messrs. George Crabb and J. W. Rameden, to hear a paper upon "The Cinnamon Canary," by W. A. Bladon, Esq., and this can only be attributed to the respect in which the President of the C.B.U. and M. and N.C.O.S. is held. The election of W. E. Cobb, and nomination of Miss Muriel Clark took place. The following amendments, etc., to the rules of the London Federation of Cage Bird Societies were agreed upon, with instructions to the delegates (Messrs. R. L. Crisp and A. C. Burn) to consider at their next council meeting, viz.:—To oppose Mr. Honeysett's (Battersea) motion to amend Rule 7; that Rules 11 and 12 be left to the delegates to decide; that Mr. Adamthwaite's (London and Counties) motion to amend Rule 20, be left in the hands of the delegates; to delete in Rule 21 the last five words and substitute "a sum not exceeding one guinea"; to delete in Rule 23 at the seventh line, the words "by 9 o'clock the day following," and substitute "within 24 hours of"; to raise a point for discussion upon the first part of Rule 24 as to what advantages will he gained. The balance sheet of the British and Foreign Bird Show (duly audited) showing a loss of £1 16s. 2d., was confirmed as read. Details of the summer outing in conjunction with the N.B.B. and M.C., which takes place on May 30th to Surrey, were announced, several members intimating their intention of taking part. On Mr. Bladon's paper coming up to be read, the Chairman remarked that the brilliant company before him abundantly testified to the authority the writer (with 30 years of Cinnamon breeding) was considered. A most hearty vote of thanks was awarded Mr. Bladon at the close.—V. WYNN, Hon. Sec.

Books every Bird Keeper and Breeder must have.

By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to-date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price.

Cage Birds 1908 Annual — post free, 7d.

The Standard Guide to the Cage Bird Hobby is a title bestowed upon the ANNUAL years ago. And the 1908 edition merits it more than any previous volume. Revised and brought up-to-date from cover to cover, with a lovely coloured plate and many full-page art illustrations, and crammed with valuable articles and unique and helpful features, it is the finest value for money ever offered lovers of birds. Canary, British, Hybrid and Foreign bird enthusiasts alike will find it a Complete Guide to the Fancy.

The Stock Book (Our Invaluable "Breeding Room Register.") — post free, 7d.

A well-known fancier has said of it:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." This book is one no breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred—keep account of their strong and weak points. It contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages, and many invaluable "Hints for Emergencies."

BRADFORD (EAST) O.S.

Ramble to Grassington and Bolton Abbey.

A "Merry Christmas" was the most familiar greeting heard in the Midland Station on Easter Monday morning as the members and friends of our society assembled to take part in the first ramble of the year to this world-famed beauty spot in Wharfedale; and certainly the remark could be excused under the condition which prevailed in Bradford in the early part of the morning, for all was covered with snow and looked cheerless in the extreme. I myself made down to the station feeling certain I could write "failure" against our first venture, and I could not have been disappointed had there been no one there. My fears, however, were swept on one side, for a nice party, numbering 27, left Bradford by the 8.50 train, and later in the day we were joined by nine other friends at Bolton Abbey, making a total of 36—not a bad turn up considering the weather. On our arrival at Grassington, Messrs. Rushworth and Cruise took charge of the party, and under their capable leadership many prominent places of interest were visited. From the station we first visited the famous "Linton Falls" which roar and fume under the bridge which connects Linton with Grassington. Standing on this bridge one gets a magnificent view both up and down stream. This view was much admired and served to whet our appetite for what was to follow. We wended our way up into the village of Grassington for dinner, which was served at Chapman's dining rooms in the main street. While dinner was being prepared we had a walk through the village, and if one desires to see all the quaintness of an old-time village, this is a place with treats galore—picturesque houses, cobbled square, disused theatre, and fine old hall. Few places can boast of such a beautiful "viciuage" as Grassington. The place itself would be a popular one even apart from these items of interest, for it is the centre for walks of unparalleled beauty and charm, through some of the nicest river and dale scenery that Yorkshire can so proudly boast of. When the inner man had been replenished, we wended our way by the river side to the swing bridge which crosses the river between Grassington and Burnsall. Those who preferred to cross by the stepping-stones had the opportunity, as the river was running rather low; some amusement was caused here by watching the various methods adopted in order to cross the bridge, which swings considerably when a lot are crossing together. From here we went on to Burnsall and visited the little church, which is well worth a visit, if for no other reason but to see and compare an old-time village church with our modern structures. The next place visited was the beautiful village of Burnsall, and here is a place whose beauty cannot be described in words.

Ah, beautiful, bonnie Burnsall,
How shall we thus describe
The beauties that thou dost unfold
To human hearts and eyes?
Here all that Nature holds so dear
Has long been gathered in thy folds,
As one endowed with all that's blest
With Nature's hall-mark, Loveliness.

This attempt is a poor one, but to give even a faint idea of the beauties of this village alone is far beyond my power; suffice it to say that the best view obtainable, in my estimation, is to ascend the hill leading from Burnsall to Barden, and look back upon the panorama which unfolds itself to human eyes. The village lying in all its simplicity amidst the beautics of Nature is a sight which the lover of country scenery will never forget. Turning reluctantly away from it we turn ourselves towards Barden, and after a good stiff climb we reach the tower. Here, while some indulged in refreshments others inspected the ruins of the tower, which dates back to the sixteenth century. After a short stay here, we made our way over by Barden Bridge and took the Abbey side of the river, and here begins what is thought by many to be the most magnificent river scenery to be obtained in the whole of Wharfedale. It is one continual variation of river and glen right away from Barden Bridge to Bolton Abbey, and is a haven of delight to all naturalists, botanists and students of natural history. From Pembroke seat a grand view is obtained of Barden Tower in the distance enshrouded in the woods, and, combined with the river scenery at this spot, it forms a most pleasing and comprehensive picture. From this place we made our way to the Strid, and this is another of the beauties which has to be seen before one can form any adequate idea of the combination of awe and charm which it gives to the visitor when he first glances on the swirling rush of waters. It has been described by Wordsworth as that famous passage of the Wharic, out of which a white horse rises, vaporous and shadowy, in warning that another life is about to end in the whirlpools where so many others have gone down since the boy of Egremont missed his leap and fell there, dragged back by the hound which he was leading by a leash, and which faltered at the noise of the rushing torrent. From the Strid we wended our way to the Abbey, passing on the way two memorials—one a handsome cross in the churchyard, and the other a massive stone fountain near the entrance to the woods from the Bolton side, which were erected in honour of Lord Frederick Cavendish, who was assassinated in Phœnix Park, 1882. We were only able to have a passing glance at the Abbey, but to give it its due a few hours should be spent there, for anyone can rest assured that the time will be well spent. This is an old Augustinean Priory dating as far back as the eleventh century, and was built to commemorate the loss of the aforementioned boy of Egremont. Much of the original building, together with additions which have been made at various times, is now standing in ruins, but the nave, which was repaired in 1853, still serves as a parish church. The structure itself is a magnificent piece of architecture, and serves as an illustration to us at the present time of the patience and perseverance which must have been given in the erection of this grand old priory. It is situated in a glorious position, and anyone, however indifferent he may be to spiritual things, must admit the beauty of the surroundings in which the ruins of these abbeys and priories stand, as if to instill into our minds the necessity which has been felt all through the ages to worship God through Nature. We then proceeded to the Post Office Cottages in Bolton to partake of tea, to which full justice was done after the long walk from Grassington to Bolton Abbey. The station was our next calling place, and we caught the 7.30 train to Bradford, landing home at about 9.15 after having spent a splendid day, with ideal conditons for walkng.—B. Hill, Sec.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

ILLUSTRATED IDEAS

Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some ideas useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird-room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

HOW TO FIX PERCHES.

Sent by S. John Elmer, Friendly House, Witney.

Enclosed is a sketch which illustrates the method I adopt of fixing perches. Drive a flat wire nail, head down, into perch, leaving about ⅜th. inch projecting and sharpen perch off. Bore a small hole in back of cage to put nail point in, and you have at once a firmly fixed perch, and one of the chief hiding places for red mite is destroyed, as a small hole is easily cleaned with a small brush from back of cage. The illustration will, I think, make it much clearer.—S. John Elmer.

A USEFUL HAND-FEEDING SPOON.

Sent by F. J. Day, 243, Kingston Road, Wimbledon.

I enclose sketch of a feeding spoon, which I have found very useful in the hand-feeding of young Canaries. It is very simple and I like it much better than using a stick or quill. Get a small piece of wood A, about 2in. by ½in. Round it off at corners. Then take an ordinary pen nib (B), a small one for preference, and drive the point of nib into the end of wood as shown in sketch (C). A ring put in the end will be useful to hang it up by. If the egg food is made to the consistancy of cream it will be most readily conveyed to the young birds by the spoon.—F. J. Day.

I find your paper very interesting, writes Mr. Geo. Widlake (Crewkerne); much information for the novice is to be gleaned from its columns.

I thank you for the Annual, which this year is a really splendid guide for all bird lovers. I wish it continued success.—M. Kirkhouse (Sunderland).

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

THE tea and concert promoted by the Wibsey and Dis. Society on May 2nd proved a great success. About 200 persons sat down to the substantial spread, and at the concert which followed the room was well filled. An excellent programme had been arranged, which, judging by the applause each item received, gave every enjoyment to the company assembled. During the interval in the programme, a very interesting item came forward, Mr. Crowther, the President, presenting to Mr. E. W. Johnson, their enthusiastic and worthy secretary, a magnificent picture, containing the photo of Mr. Johnson in the centre surrounded by photographs of some 60 or more of fellow-members, a token of their appreciation of his valuable services to the society.

MR. JOHNSON, when responding, gave a brief outline of the history of the society which has grown to quite large proportions, now numbering close on 80 members, whereas only twelve months ago it stood at a total of about twenty. Mr. Fred Hammond, the late secretary of the Y.U., spoke a few words in appreciation of Mr. Johnson, giving it as his opinion that he was one of the best secretaries he had had the pleasure of coming into contact with. Mr. S. Dean also spoke in respect to his able handling of secretarial duties, after which the musical part of the programme was proceeded with.

ON Tuesday, the 28th of April, Mr. J. S. Clarkson lectured before the members and friends of the Tong Society, and on the same evening, Mr. S. Dean appeared before the fanciers at the Brighouse society's headquarters. At neither place was there a particularly good muster, consequent upon the very inclement weather which prevailed, rain pouring down in torrents the whole of the evening.

FANCIERS' FESTIVITIES.

Wibsey and District C.B.S. Annual Tea and Concert.

The first annual tea and concert were held at the Wibsey Wesleyan Reform School on May 2nd. Over two hundred sat down to tea, and more than 300 attended the concert. The concert was all that could be desired. There was a grand programme, which was well received. During the interval the president, Mr. J. Crowther, presented the secretary, Mr. Ernest Johnson, with a magnificent photo of the members, with Mr. Johnson's own picture in the centre, which the society had subscribed for in recognition of his services as secretary. Mr. Johnson accepted the photo, and spoke of the history of the society, telling us how, after becoming almost extinct, it had got to be one of the leading societies in Yorkshire. Mr. Fred Hammond, secretary for the Yorkshire Union (1907), said he had known Mr. Johnson both as a delegate and as secretary for the Wibsey Society. That society had cause to be proud of their secretary, as he was one of the first secretaries in the Yorkshire Union. Mr. Sam Dean also spoke in a very eulogistic manner of the sterling worth of Mr. Johnson as a secretary. The picture is by Mr. Webster (Bradford). It is about 6ft. by 4ft., and contains 58 photos and one large photo. At the conclusion of the concert a hearty vote of thanks was given to the artistes for the generous and able manner in which they had entertained the audience, and also to Miss Mortimer for the able catering.—Fred Pickles, assistant secretary.

The Egg Problem Solved.

—BY USING—

"Woodland Bird Milk."

It contains the natural constituents of an egg; the only difference being "Woodland Bird Milk" holds them in a far greater proportion, thereby giving it more nourishing and bone-building qualities. 1 lb. of Woodland Bird milk equals over 60 eggs.

The Best is ALWAYS the Cheapest.

Some Reasons Why Vi-Cocoa Relieves Exhaustion and Creates Energy.

The Best is always the Cheapest in the end, and Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa is indeed both best and cheapest. Ordinary cocoas do not possess its great natural nutrient properties, and therefore are to it as water is to wine. As a regular family beverage, Vi-Cocoa is infinitely preferable to tea and coffee, which produce nervous irritation, and it is far and away superior to the brain destroying alcohol.

There is no more nourishing Food-Beverage than Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa, which, by promoting the animal heat, will keep the body in a healthy glow.

You have not yet tried Vi-Cocoa. Why not try it to-day? Every grocer sells it in 6d. packets and 9d. and 1/6 tins.

THE YOUNG NATURALIST.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given each week for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age, and must state from where stories are taken.

A Narrow Squeak.

We have a Linnet, and he will sit on my finger and peck. But the other day he flew off father's fingers into the fire and scorched his legs and wings. We thought he would have died of fright, but the next day he was as lively as ever. We are all very glad.—James Allsopp (age 9 years), 110, Molyneux Road, Kensington, Liverpool.

*Catching a Bullfinch.

One day all our neighbours were very excited, seeing a fine cock Bullfinch feeding from a Linnet's cage that was hanging outside one of the windows, and all were very anxious to catch him. They tried everything and in every way, but my dada, being a bird fancier, put out his hen Bullie, and fixed a trap by turning a small cage upside down with the door on top weighted with lead, and in a very few minutes dada's aviary had another welcome addition.—Sent by Willie Maunder (age 10 years), 67, Mill Road, Gillingham, Kent.

*After the Snowstorm.

I knew of a Mavis nest and a Hedge Sparrow's with one egg in each on April 18th; so I went round on the 25th to see how they were getting on amid the snow and frost. The Mavis' nest was full of snow, and four green blue eggs, spotted with black, peeping out amongst the snow. I lifted them out, but they gave way and broke in my hands with being all frost-bitten. I then went to the Hedge Sparrow's nest, and to my surprise it was filled with water, and three bonny blue eggs lying in the bottom. They were the same as the Mavis' eggs, all frosted and forsaken.—Sent by Robert Robertson (aged 12), 17, Harriet Street, Pathhead, Kirkcaldy.

The Egg that Wouldn't Hatch.

Father gave me a Canary egg which had not hatched with the others, to blow and put with my collection. I made a hole at the top and bottom of the egg, and got a cup of water for the yolk to drop in. Then I blew down one of the holes, but nothing would come out. After blowing awhile the shell broke, and the inside flopped into the cup of water, and it was a baby Canary, and alive, for it opened its beak. I lifted it out of the water at once, and wrapped it in cotton wool, and put it before the fire. Then my mother put it in the nest with the other two young ones, which were two days old, and it is still living, but it is smaller than the other two.—Sent by John Grimshaw (age 11 years), 23, Westgate, Hale.

I am practically a novice in the Canary Fancy, writes Mr. T. J. Checkland (Norwich), but I owe a great deal to the many valuable hints I have picked up in your interesting journal, CAGE BIRDS.

I was greatly surprised on receiving my copy of CAGE BIRDS, dated April 25th, to find my Linnet Mule depicted on such a prominent page in the Fancy paper, writes Mr. A. Coffey (Liverpool). During the season just past the bird won five first prizes, and was in the money on 14 occasions.

TWITTERINGS.

Mr. H. E. Wilkinson informs us that his present address is Wood Willows, Stocksbridge, near Sheffield.

We are holding our Young Bird show on July 11th, writes Mr. H. Thomas, secretary of the Middleton O.S.

There is not a migrant to be seen here yet, writes Mr. J. W. Bruce (Coldstream, N.B.). Simply wretched weather.

CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL safely to hand. I am highly pleased with it. It far exceeds my expectations.—M. Hennessy (Cardiff).

I think CAGE BIRDS just splendid, writes Mr. Dash (Chichester). I had more replies to my advertisement than I have had time to answer.

I already have some thirty young Yorkshire Canaries, which are getting used to the show cages, writes Mr. James Devins, of Sligo. More luck in Ireland is both my motto and hope.

My stock is quite sold out, writes Mr. J. Wilkinson (Knightsbridge). I had so many replies to my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS that I found it quite impossible to answer all the letters.

Mr. Thos. Heath has accepted the invitation to judge cage birds at the annual show of the South London Col. and F.A., to be held on November 25th, writes Mr G. A. Jefferys, the hon. secretary.

We are informed of the retirement of Mr. Bennett from the firm of Messrs. Payne and Bennett. The business will now be carried on by Messrs. Payne and Son, of 24 Clarke Road, Norwich.

Irish secretaries please note that the dates for show under the auspices of this club have been fixed for 18th and 19th December, writes Mr. Jas. Stewart, secretary of the Norwich Plainhead C.C. of Ireland.

The Burnley and Dis. C.B.S. will hold their annual First Feather show on June 20th, writes Mr. G. Watson, secretary, when Mr. Battye (Huddersfield) will judge. Mr. Roe will judge at the annual October show.

We have engaged the Caxton Hall for our open show on December 11th and 12th, writes Mr. W. Jackson, secretary of the Pendleton and Salford O.S. It is situated within five minutes' walk of all stations.

Q.M.-Sergt. A. Cant, secretary of the Hamilton (Cadzow Oaks) O.S., writes that his society have altered their open show date from November 28th to November 21st, and hopes that fanciers will note the change.

I am sorry I could not answer all the letters respecting the aviary and breeders, which I advertised in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Lay (Lowestoft). I have sold them, thanks to CAGE BIRDS, which I wish the best of luck.

Mr. Lugg writes asking all friends who are joining in the Dulwich and Peckham and Lewisham Societies' ramble on Sunday next, May 10th, to meet at New Cross Station (L.B. and S.C.R.) a few minutes before 9 o'clock.

I have resigned the secretaryship of the Blaydon-on-Tyne and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. D. A. Ogilvie, owing to my leaving the district. Future correspondence relating to the society should be addressed to my successor, Mr. G. Harver, 1, Theresa Street, Blaydon-on-Tyne.

Am pleased to inform you I received very good results from my advertising in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. E. Cash (Birkenhead). I have got into touch with some of the leading birdie men of the day through your paper. You have my best wishes for its future success.

The following have been appointed judges for our open show on November 28th, writes Mr. A. Miller, secretary of the City of Dundee and Dis. N.M. and B.B.A.:—Messrs. J. McLay (Crests), A. McFarlane (Plainheads), H. Bennet (Border Fancies), and P. Pettigrew (British Birds).

I should esteem it a favour, writes Mr. S. Drake (Halifax), if you would advise those answering advertisements to write very plainly. I cannot make some of the addresses I receive out, and no doubt other advertisers have the same difficulty. I don't want any letters to go astray.

We have elected Messrs. J. Wilcock (Bradford) to judge all cage birds except Border Fancies, which will be judged by Mr. Jas. Thompson (Wigton), at our annual show on November 20th and 21st, writes Mr. J. Ferguson, hon. secretary of the Whitehaven C.B. and H.S.

Mr. Sam Dean, secretary of the Yorkshire Union, has been engaged to give us a lecture on May 9th on the general management of Canaries, writes Mr. P. Parker, secretary of Wakefield O.S. Our First Feather show will be held on June 20th in connection with our British Bird show.

We have arranged with Messrs. W. E. Greeves, W. Vardy, and G. E. Weston to judge at our annual exhibition, to be held at the Mechanics' Lecture Hall, Nottingham, on November 14th and 16th next, writes Mr. G. E. Wilkinson, secretary of the Nottingham and Nottinghamshire O.S.

Cage Birds Charts:

How to Judge Exhibition Birds.

NO. 6: THE LIZARD CANARY.

In this issue No. 6 of the series of CAGE BIRDS CHARTS appears. It deals with the Lizard Canary, and the lover of this bird, and especially the beginner, has only to keep the chart in his birdroom to have always before him the ideal to look for and breed to, while the faults to be avoided can never escape his eye.

In due course many other favourite exhibition birds will be made the subject of one of CAGE BIRDS CHARTS.

The same great pains will be taken to ensure the completeness of every chart, and its accompanying letterpress, and the deft fingers of our artist will portray the excellencies and deficiencies of the birds with the same precision and clearness. The value of CAGE BIRDS latest feature to the novices and amateurs in our hobby will be obvious to all, and we ask our many kind friends to bring CAGE BIRDS CHARTS to the notice of everyone interested in Bird-keeping and breeding.

Impress upon them that they must on no account miss any one of the series to be issued in the near future, or they will miss a TRULY HELPFUL AND EDUCATIONAL feature never previously put before bird-keepers.

CAGE BIRDS CHARTS may be had beautifully printed on stiff art card, with eyelet holes, for hanging in the bird-room, price 3d. each, post free. The explanatory notes and scales of exhibition points are printed round the margin. No. 1, the Goldfinch, No. 2, the Yorkshire Canary, No. 3, The Bullfinch, No. 4, The Border Fancy, and No. 5, The Hawfinch, are now on sale, and No. 6 will be on sale early next week.

SEND YOUR ORDER AT ONCE.

A special meeting of the Stonehouse C.B.S. will be held in the Public Hall on May 16th, at 7 p.m., writes Mr. John Govan, secretary, when a full attendance is requested. The business will be the arrangement of classes. Mr. Wm. Clark (Larkhall) will afterwards give a lecture on cage bird breeding.

Members of the Barrow and Dis. C.B.A., writes the secretary, Mr. G. Large, should make a special effort to attend the meeting to be held on May 13th, at 7.30, as the entries for the Nest Feather show close on this date. The business includes the balance sheet, judges for shows, and other important matters.

The Edinburgh Southern O.S. annual show, writes Mr. Jas. Drysdale, the secretary, will be held in the Central Hall, Nicholson Street, on October 24th. The judges for Scotch Fancies are Messrs. James Cook (Cowdenbeath), and James Carson (Dalkeith), and for the variety section, Mr. James Adams (Dundee).

Mr. A. Watson, secretary of the Civil Service F.A., writes: I should be glad to hear of any society catering for cage birds, poultry, pigeons, etc., which would care to come to some arrangement with this society whereby we may hold a combined annual show. My address is 116, Maurice Avenue, Noel Park, Wood Green, N.

OBITUARY.

MR. A RETTICH (Balham).

It is with the deepest regret, writes Mr. J. W. Norris, hon. secretary of the British Roller Canary Club, that I have to inform Roller fanciers of the untimely death of Mr. Albert Rettich, and by which the B.R.C.C. has sustained a great loss, as he was our premier judge. Mr. Rettich was on a visit to his son in New York, and while at his office he fell from the sixth storey and was instantly killed. Those who have met Mr. Rettich will remember him as a most courteous gentleman. By his excellent work in the Fancy and daily Press he had helped to bring the Roller Fancy in England to its present high position.

MR. JOHN PEARSON (Carlisle).

It is with deep regret that I announce the death of Mr. John Pearson, who passed away on 30th April, at his son-in-law's residence, 13, St. Ann's Road, Ellery, at the age of 68, writes Mr. T. H. Jones (Carlisle). He was one of the oldest bird fanciers in Carlisle, and was much respected by all who knew him.

It has been our pleasure to inspect the large batch of testimonials forwarded to us by Mr. W. Rudd, the well-known Bird Specialist, of Norwich. The post-marks bear witness that they were all penned on either May 1st, 2nd, or 3rd, and the contents show they are genuine expressions of approval from delighted customers.

The Rochdale Good Intent C.B.S. are arranging a ramble for May 17th to Holmes Chapel and Burnley, writes the secretary, Mr. S. M. Clayton. Members will meet at 8.30 prompt at the station. Those who intend going will please give me their names not later than May 11th, my address being 55, Percy Street, Rochdale.

The Wolverhampton and Dis. C.B.S. have removed to permanent headquarters, which are now the Swan and Peacock Hotel, Dudley Street, writes Mr. F. Howes, the hon. secretary. We are holding an inter-club nest-feather show with West Bromwich Society on June 20th, when Mr. J. Pitchford will judge. We have also arranged a country ramble for Whit-Monday. All wishing to join will please let me know.

Mr. W. Hodson, the hon. secretary of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., has received the hearty congratulations of a large number of fanciers, writes "A Dulwichite," upon his appointment to the important position of assistant hon. secretary of the London and Provincial O.S. His friends wish Mr. Hodson all success in his new capacity.

The Jarrow and Hebburn and Dis. C.B.F.S. will hold their First Feather show on June 13th, judge Mr. J. Maddison (Newcastle), writes Mr. J. T. Carrick, secretary. There will be numerous specials, and a good classification All entries must be sent to me at 44, Caledonian Road, Jarrow-on-Tyne.

A sample of "Ramsden's Pure Tasteless Pepper" reaches us from the vendor. This noted colour-food will, it is evident, more than sustain its wonderful reputation during the present season. The sample before us is astonishingly rich in color, which is entirely natural, no added oil or artificial coloring being present (the pepper is sold under a guarantee as "absolutely pure and unadulterated"). Further, it is really tasteless and sweet, leaving no hot flavour on the tongue. Fanciers desirous of color-feeding their birds (either young or old) should make a point of inspecting this efficient and harmless pepper. Full particulars and free advice on color-feeding can be had from Mr. J. W. Ramsden, 11, Josephine Avenue, Brixton, S.W.

Very Likely.

The Cuckoo was heard in more than one place in the neighbourhood of Norwich at the end of April, writes "Spring" to the "Eastern Daily Press." It was a little hoarse, having no doubt caught cold in last week's snowstorm.

Nest on a Clothes-Line.

A Wren, it is said, has built its nest on a clothes-line suspended from a hook in the tool-house of Mr. E. G. Culpin, at Garden City (Letchworth). The doors are fastened at night, and the place constantly used, but neither of these circumstances seems to affect the new tenant.

Southern Norwich Plainhead Club

Societies wishing to get the patronage of this club for their show in the forthcoming season should apply at once to the secretary. Fanciers wishing to join kindly send entry fee 1s. before May 16th. Notification of alterations in members' addresses must be in before June 1st. Members in arrears will not be able to compete for any specials (rule 3). Few more breeders' cards in rule book are available for 1908-9.—F. S. Matthes, secretary, 34, Rotherhithe New Road, S.E.

"Oh! Dry those Tears."

Extract from the "Sporting Life," date May 5th, under heading "Bird Singing":

Young Frank Beatley, of Southend-on-Sea and Burnham-on-Crouch, is prepared to match his famous Canary to compete against any similar class of bird in the world for £10 or £20 a side, the "Sporting Life" to be stakeholder, and Mr. Eugene Corri, referee. A deposit at this office will lead to business.

Extract from the same paper, date May 6th:

We received the following communication from Mr. Frank Beatley yesterday:—"I regret to state that my bird, Caruso, died this morning, thanks to the beautiful spring weather."

CAGE BIRDS CHARTS.

No. 5.—THE LIZARD CANARY, Its Exhibition Points & Failings.

By BARKER CLEGG.

I have been honoured by the Editor of CAGE BIRDS with the task of saying a few words upon the merits of Mr. Norman's most interesting and instructive plate on the Lizard Canary. From this plate, breeders will see at a glance the desired properties they must seek to attain, and the defects and imperfections they must strive to avoid.

The Lizard Canary is, I believe, the oldest of our fancy breeds, and is totally unlike any other, having a character altogether its own. In a first-class Lizard we have nothing out of proportion, no exaggerations. There is type nicely blended and balanced with substance and sound, rich ground colour, which is enhanced and beautified by the charming spangling. Then the neatness and chasteness of the thumb-shaped cap has a fascination for all who love the beautiful, whilst the black wings and tail, with their rich metallic lustre, add to and enhance the beauties of one of the most handsome birds known to the Canary Fancy.

The central figure in the chart shows a richly spangled bird, one with plenty of clean, bold spangling on its back, and carrying the same well down its breast and sides. The cap also is clearly cut, showing the nice clear line which is so much desired by Lizard breeders. The wings and tail show that solid black colour which is known as being "sound in flights and tail." The legs and breast are also dark. Taking it all-in-all, this bird is most typical and representative of the Lizard family.

"Too open in spangling," shows us a bird with a common fault; that is, having the rows too far apart, and thus quite opposed to the good back which should be "full of work."

"Weak in spangling." Here we have a bird that is not only short of spangle, but what it has is not clear and distinct. It is indeed "weak in spangling," and not at all a desirable bird for a breeder to use.

"White-faced." This is caused by an over-running of the cap, and by a lack of soundness in the ground colour. White-faced birds are pit-falls for the unwary, and breeders should be very careful how they use them.

"Too full in cap." Too full in cap, or over-capped, shows us a bird in which the cap has run down the neck too far, and has exceeded the bounds of the thumb mark. This failing is caused by breeding with clear-capped birds continually. Of course, at times they come quite unexpectedly and, when this is so, may be used for breeding, but care must be exercised in their use. When a bird is not too badly "over-capped," it may, if it excels in spangling, colour and quality, be shown with a fair measure of success.

"Non-cap." Here Mr. Norman has excelled himself by giving us a splendid representation of the work on a Lizard. It commences at the entrance of the skull, and gradually increases in size and volume as it reaches the back. This is the kind of bird to use if you wish to keep up to high-water point in spangling.

"Patched-cap." This is frequently seen, and is not a bad marking for birds shown in "Broken-capped classes." There is a dark patch in the centre of the head with a line all round showing the outline of the cap.

"Broken cap." Here we see a bird ticked in front of the eye, a very common form of the breaking of the cap. There are many other forms of breaking which might be shown, some very irregular, and others more pleasing to the eye. It is strange, but never-the-less a fact that the "broken" and "non-capped" birds are invariably rich in colour and more profusely spangled than the "clear-caps," and this often enables them to beat the "clear-caps," when they meet in competition, and these "broken" and "non-caps" are most useful to the breeder in regulating any tendency there may be to over-capping.

"A Bold head;" "Pinched in Front." Here we have the two opposites, the bad and the good. The pinched head is of no use to a Lizard breeder, and birds which are narrow in skull should be avoided. A good bold head, so that the cap may be well displayed, is a great point in a Lizard. It must also be remembered that a good, bold head and broad back generally go together, and thus there is room for "plenty of work," whilst a narrow-bodied bird cannot carry much work, and its narrow-pinched skull gives it a mean and puny appearance.

"Short of spangles." This shows us a very poor specimen indeed. Quite one of those known as "wasters," and not to be desired at all.

"Deficiency of body markings." This is a really well-marked bird on top, but its lack of work on chest and sides detracts greatly from its beauty and would handicap it upon the show bench, although such a bird by virtue of its other excellencies would secure some notice from the judges.

"Not sufficiently mooned." This shows us a bird in which the spangling is not clear and distinct, but runs too much, giving the back a cloudy appearance. There is plenty of work, but it lacks clearness, owing to the spangles over-lapping each other. This is a fault which is not at all times perceptible. I have known birds come through the moult looking splendid and showing a wealth of clear, bold spangling, and then later, when they had made a little more feather growth, the moons have been obscured and their value as exhibition birds rendered nil.

READERS WANTED AS REFEREES.

An Interesting Point Arises out of Our Recent Essay Competition.

AS we mentioned in our issue of last week, when announcing the winners in the Essay Competition, the chief prize, that of an original Painting of birds, value Four Guineas, was not awarded. This was owing to a difference of opinion among the judges as to which was the best essay out of the winning efforts in the four sections of the Competition. As we also then stated, instead of calling in someone to give a casting vote, we considered the best way out of this difficulty was to devise a means whereby

Readers of "Cage Birds" shall be Referees.

Here is our plan: In our last week's issue appeared instalments of the winning articles in the Canary and Hybrid sections. In our issue of this week we print instalments of the winning British Bird and the Aviary articles. We shall endeavour to complete the publication of these four articles in the next two issues, and in the last issue a coupon will appear, which we ask all readers to fill up and return to us through the post. On this coupon readers may vote for the essay which they consider worthy of the Four Guinea painting as the best out of the winning quartette.

We anticipate, so keen has been the competition, that a very interesting difference of opinion as to which is the best article will be found to exist when the votes come to be cast up. Readers should get their friends, whether bird-lovers or not, to peruse the essays and give their opinion, as we feel that the endeavour to forecast the result cannot prove other than an agreeable pastime. So, readers, make sure you vote yourselves, and persuade your friends to join in also.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention.

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:—

NOTE.—Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John. British Birds, Mules and Hybrids—G. E. Weston. Foreign Birds—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S., &c., Park and Lake Aviculture—Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. M.B.O.U., &c. Wild Bird Life—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc. of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Grecus, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his question for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Would Not Feed.

J. Harry.—Your experience is by no means an uncommon occurrence. As your birds are of good pedigree stock your best way to meet the difficulty is to have a pair or two of common hardy birds breeding at the same time, so that you may transfer the better class birds to them to be reared if their own parents fail in their duty. With the next broods of these hens after they begin to sit drop mixed seed to twice a week, give a small scrap of chickweed, and a teaspoonful of sponge cake crumbs, both twice a week. Give the latter as a substitute for egg food, until young are due to hatch. On the eve of hatching give the hens a bath in which half a teaspoonful of boric acid has been dissolved, and add as much Epsom salts to the drinking water as will cover a threepenny-piece. When young are three days old give a scrap of tender, crisp lettuce leaf a time or two a day. You may treat hen now due to hatch in same way but try to have a pair of good feeding foster parents ready for the two other hens in case of need. There is the Ilford Fanciers' Association, which is probably near you. The secretary is: E. Collins, 88, Henley-road, Ilford.

Get no "Forrader."

"Nary."—Am not sure whether I have deciphered signature correctly. The pair of birds put together on Good Friday, but which have made no progress yet, were probably not quite ready. The cock had probably not quite recovered from the moult in February. Then your feeding has been decidedly faulty. Now, begin all over again. First give in the drinking water for three days as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence; then give five drops of tincture of steel for the next three days. Feed on a staple mixture of two parts Canary to one part rape. Every second day give a small pinch of niger—a few grains only—twice a week a teaspoonful of hemp, and every second day a teaspoonful of sponge cake crumbs. Give all these separately, and on different days, only one each day, and discontinue as soon as the hen has laid her eggs, recommencing with the hemp and sponge cake, or egg food, when the young are due to hatch. As you have only one pair you would find it cheaper to use preserved yolk mixed with sponge cake crumbs or biscuit, or you might try one of the advertised foods, without eggs. But please note that I take no responsibility in suggesting the latter course. Give two leaves of dandelion daily to each bird, until the hen goes to nest; after that give chickweed, lettuce, groundsel, or watercress. Give no other messes of any kind in the way of food. The sample of felt enclosed should make nice cosy nests.

Asthma and Hens' Vagaries.

"Curious."—1. You do not say what remedy you have been trying for the Yorkshire hen. More than one has appeared in CAGE BIRDS. Anyway, try following: twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and two of oil of eucalyptus in the drinking water two days in every three for a week. Shake vessel vigorously, to mix it. Next week give five drops of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day, and repeat these two weeks' treatment over again in the order named. I certainly would not advise you to breed with this hen until she is quite recovered, and as the affection seems to have become chronic I am afraid there is but little prospect of that happy termination. 2. As regards the vagaries of your hens' laying, it may be partly accounted for by your being much too liberal with your egg food. Give just half the quantity you now supply, and, of course, drop it altogether whilst the hens are sitting. It is quite possible for the first four eggs of the hen that is sitting on six to be good. If I follow your letter correctly you set her with the first three on April 15th. Allowing for her not sitting closely, these should have hatched on April 30th, and the eggs laid afterwards should hatch on May 1st, 3rd, and 4th. Your best plan would be to leave the cock with the hen for two or three days after putting her to sit. It is quite likely the weather has something to do with these vagaries, which seem to have been more common than usual this spring.

A Doubtful Pair.

W.T.S.—1. Give twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and two of oil of eucalyptus in the water two days in every three for a fortnight. Shake the water bottle vigorously before putting on the cage to break up the oil into minute globules. Give also a teaspoonful of sponge cake crumbs to the two birds daily until well, and well mix with it every second day five drops of cod liver oil emulsion, and on the alternate days six or eight drops of sherry. 2. It is not usual for two hens to feed each other, and from your description I have no doubt whatever that the larger bird is a cock. If you catch the birds and blow up the feathers on the abdomen you will find the vent of the cock is more prominent and pointed than that of the hen, which is almost level with the abdomen.

Colour Feeding, etc.

"Feed."—1. I do not see what advantage you can gain by using any of the things you mention which could not be obtained equally as good or better from pure tasteless pepper, or Red Feed, either with or without the addition of a small proportion of Natal. Providing it did not cause undue looseness, there would be no objection to giving a little beetroot daily instead of the usual piece of carrot which many fanciers use during the moult. I must confess ignorance of carnation cloves. If you mean the old clove carnation flower I should say it would be inferior to a regular supply of marigold or nasturtium blooms. Neither of the other things you name should I care to use for my birds. 2. When you wish to introduce a new cock to a hen that is rearing a brood by herself you should defer doing so until the young are old enough to be placed in a nursery by themselves. Should the hen not show signs of wishing to go to nest again you may defer the change until the young are beginning to feed themselves with every advantage. The hen would doubtless go on feeding the young through the wires whilst mating again.

A Love Philter Wanted.

"A Starter."—Sorry, but I am really at a loss to know how you can make the love-lorn cock take to a hen of your choice, and not keep longing for a clandestine ceremony with one of the other charmers which he can hear but not see. Although you say both seem in good condition, I scarcely think the hen is ready for breeding, or the cock would certainly take some notice of her. Separate them, and put one in each side of a double breeding cage, with the wire slide in. Then feed up the hen a little, and give two dandelion leaves a day until she is calling vigorously to the cock. Then if you see the cock feed her through the wires, remove the slide, and see how they go on then. If it is convenient to do so, also remove them out of hearing of the other birds.

Yorkshires not Singing.

Scarlet Lancer.—Although it is quite probable that, being deprived of the company of all the other birds would make the Yorkshire come in song later this year, it is not likely to have been the sole cause of its silence so long as this. See that it is kept quite free from draughts, and carefully examine its cage for redmite, removing either of these causes if present. Feed on a mixture of three parts Canary to one part summer rape as a staple, and give in addition a few grains of hemp twice a week, and every second day until in song, half a teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake, with five drops of sherry mixed in it, and a few grains of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it. Give a spray of chickweed or leaf of dandelion daily. In the drinking water give a mild dose of Epsom salts for two days, and afterwards five drops of tincture of steel every second day for a week.

Refuses to Mate.

A., Brighouse.—Assuming you are not mistaken about the sex of the bird that absolutely refuses to "have anything to say" to a mate, I am sorry I cannot tell you how you can force her to a different frame of mind, beyond the usual method of feeding her so as to keep her in a vigorously healthy condition, and let her have a lusty young cock bird near her, where she can see him. You must keep a cock set apart from her, and not try casual matings with one that is also being mated with another hen. Get a strong, healthy cock bird, in stout song, and ready for mating, and put in one side of a double breeding cage, with the hen in the other end, and the wire slide in between them. Feed the hen on a mixture of two parts Canary to one part rape, and each day give in addition two dandelion leaves, and a half teaspoonful of sponge cake crumbs, with five drops of sherry in it, sprinkling it one day with a few grains of inga, and the next of gold of pleasure seed. Repeat these alternately for a week or so. Give four drops of tincture of steel in the drinking water every second day for a week. Try running the birds together when you see the hen allowing the cock to feed her through the wires in the partition.

Beaks Broken Off.

Geo. Bleach.—Are you quite sure you made no mistake about the beaks being eaten off? At five days old the beak is still a "wee sma'" thing, and it would be very easy to mistake a little dirt, or dry remnant of a recent meal, for some injury. Of course, it is quite possible that one of the parents had injured the birds, either maliciously or accidentally—perhaps through putting too much vigour into their feeding operations—but in either case, it is most likely that having injured them once it would have gone on occurring over and over again. See the nests are free from redmite, which may be indirectly the cause of such injuries as these. If the beaks are still very sore, you might touch the sore parts very slightly with the tip of a small feather dipped in castor oil. Nature will repair what seems to be a very serious injury at this tender age, so I should say that the beaks will recover quite sufficiently for the birds to feed themselves. Shall be glad to hear how they terminate.

When Friends Advise.

"Louis Van."—Your fancier friend who advised you to throw away the clutch of eggs because they could not possibly be fertile, seeing that the first egg was laid so early as four-and-a-half days after the birds were mated, certainly could not have had a very extensive experience in these matters. You did quite right not to act upon this advice, as you now know, seeing that all the eggs have hatched out. As a matter of fact, provided both birds were in good, vigorous condition, every egg may reasonably be expected to be fertile after a period of thirty hours has elapsed from the first mating, and I would not discard one untested after twenty-four hours had elapsed. On the other hand, it is not unusual for mating to occur frequently for a week before the first egg is laid, and yet the first half of the clutch prove unfertile, and the last half fertile. It is chiefly a question of the vigour of the birds, but there is a certain amount of mystery which cannot be explained in it.

Epicurean Wheezers.

A.J.F.—Your feeding is decidedly faulty, and as the birds "pick out the hemp" from the seed given, it is not unlikely that the wheeziness may be due to fatness. Now the birds are nesting you cannot do much to reduce this. Give as much Epsom salts as will cover a threepenny piece, for two days, and afterwards twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and one of eucalyptus oil in the water every second day for a week or so. Shake water vigorously when mixing. See the birds are not exposed to any draughts. Feed on a mixture of three parts Canary to one part rape seed as a staple. Give nothing else whilst the birds are sitting, save a teaspoonful of egg food to each pair once a week, and a small spray of green food every alternate day. When the young are due to hatch, begin to supply egg food, and other seeds and green food as advised at length on the Novices' Page two and three weeks ago.

Builds, but Does Not Lay.

W. Dudley.—There is something radically wrong with your management, but as you say nothing on that point I cannot tell what it is. Better read up the Novices' Page for the last month or so. I am inclined to think one cause of the trouble is the cage being infested with mite. Ascertain if this is so, and treat accordingly. If the bird appears to sit steadily, give her two or three common fertile eggs to hatch, and she may then go on all right. Feed on a staple mixture of three parts Canary and one part summer rape; every day give in addition until she has laid (this is assuming you do not set her with common eggs as just mentioned), a teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake, and well mix with it every second day four drops of cod liver oil emulsion, and sprinkle with a few grains of inga, and on the alternate days add six drops of sherry, sprinkling with gold of pleasure seed. In the drinking water add ten drops of chemical food every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days four drops of tincture of steel. Give a couple of leaves of dandelion daily, or a spray of chickweed if dandelion is not available.

Aviary in Greenhouse.

A.B.C.—A greenhouse is not an ideal place for an aviary by any means, as the humidity which is necessary for the well-being of the plants is not equally healthful for birds kept in a small space. As you do not wish to breed, your aviary would accommodate from twenty to thirty birds the size of a Canary, and as you say you want them for "attraction only"—a term which probably includes song—I assume you prefer a varied mixture. As it is not advisable to mix soft-bills and hard-bills in so small a space, I would suggest the following collection of hard-bills, and if you prefer soft-bills you must address a query to our British or Foreign bird experts. Canaries:—Clear body, dark crest; variegated, or even-marked, yellow Norwich; clear buff Yorkshire. British birds:—Goldfinch; Bullfinch; Chaffinch; Siskin; Yellowhammer. Foreign birds:—Saffron Finch; Green Singing Finch; Zebra Finch; Cordon Bleu; Alario Finch; Cutthroat; Grey Java; Blackheaded Siskin; Combassou; Avadavat; Diamond Sparrow; and a Gouldian or a Bicheno Finch—all single cocks. You would have to be careful about your ventilation until foreigners were quite acclimatised. For staple food supply hemp, rape, Canary, red and white millet, and Indian millet in separate vessels, and spray millet, grass seeds, oats, sunflower, linseed, thistle, and teazle, in small quantities occasionally for a treat. The only objection to keeping two cock Canaries in same room in view of each other is that they may be incited to sing rather more than you deem well for your own comfort.

Brevities.

Cock Sitting on Nest (Novice).—As the hen refuses to sit without having the cock with her, you can do nothing but leave him with her, and trust to chance. But if he does not pull the nest about, or drive the hen off, you have no cause to worry about his going and sitting on the nest with her. Many cock birds will do this, and often prove the most excellent parents and of immense service in helping to bring up the young. It is only when you find him trying to prevent the hen sitting or pulling the nest to pieces that it becomes really necessary to remove him.

Would She Breed? (G.J.F.).—Without knowing the nature of the small lump you say is on the vent, it would be impossible to say whether she would do to breed with. Is it possible the lump is the bird's oil gland, which is situated at the bottom of the back close to the root of the tail? If so, this is quite a natural organ, and would not interfere with breeding in any way. See reply to "Nary" re feeding in this issue. If still mopy, five drops of aromatic sulphuric acid in the water for a day or two would do good.

Flutters About at Night (Paradox).—The most likely thing I can think of is that mice have found their way to the cage, and it is the advent of one of these visitors that sets up the fluttering and squeaking pains at night. Carefully examine dirt cleaned out of the cages for a few mornings and see if you find any mice droppings. If so, the remedy is obvious. It is just possible the bird may be scared by some passing incident outdoors, but I think the above theory the most likely.

Two Hens (F. Yardley).—1. The symptoms of this hen certainly pointed to her being about to lay. If that was the case her trouble will be all over before this reply appears. If this was not the case, her puffiness is due to overfeeding. Give ten drops each whiskey and glycerine, and every second day for a week as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence; and the next week give six drops of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day, and on alternate days ten of chemical food. If she gets well and active she will be quite fit to mate for one late brood this year. 2. The vibration from the passing and re-passing of the steam roller will probably not affect the eggs that are sitting in any way whatever.

Deserting Nest (Chef).—Cannot give a reason why your Yorkshire deserted her nest after sitting a few days, without knowing the surroundings and conditions, and whether the cock was taken away from her or not. Some will not sit when the cock is removed, so if you took him away when she commenced to sit last time, you will know that you must not do it with the next brood. Your theory re eggs being unfertile, luvests the hen with a little too much knowledge I fear. A more likely circumstance is that the extreme change in the weather accounted for her behaviour. Better try to provide a pair of feeders to take charge of the next brood, if necessary, if you wish to save them at any cost.

Now Sitting (A. Johnson).—Am very glad to hear the birds have done so well, and are now sitting closely. Hope you will have luck with the young. Add on the thirteenth day of incubation, and for the next two days following, as much Epsom salts to the water as will cover a threepenny-piece. Also give a bath on the thirteenth day. It is not very unusual for a young or weakly hen to be affected as yours was prior to laying.

Stopped Singing (E.L.).—The cage in which your bird is kept is badly infested with redmite. These are at the root of all the bird's trouble, and are the cause of its picking its wings. If it still refuses to bathe, spray it a little with warm water in which a few quassia chips have been soaked. When it is dry, remove to a perfectly clean cage, and thoroughly clean the vacated one. Saturate all joints with a solution of camphor in methylated spirits, and afterwards re-whitewash or distemper, paint, and varnish. See replies in back numbers for further details. Give a bath daily, with a little quassia in it twice a week, as soon as the bird will bathe. Give it now twelve drops of chemical food in its water every alternate day for a fortnight.

Damaged Toe (C. Oxley).—Catch bird and put a drop of Friar's Balsam on the end of the injured toe from the point of a knitting needle, or a small spill of wood. Or you may dip a small feather in the balsam and allow the drop from the tip to drip on the end of the toe end, then wipe the feather along the toe. The latter plan will be the better, as it will help to soothe the toe altogether. Hold the bird in the hand for a minute or two afterwards. Repeat this every second day until it no longer bleeds when the birds picks it. Give a bath daily, and keep the cage floor scrupulously clean.

Hens Dying Egg-bound (Novice).—It is quite likely your hens may have been too fat, as the mixture of seeds which suit Finches so well are not so well suited for hen Canaries. You should increase quantity of Canary seed to at least one-half the total bulk in each case. If you did not provide cuttlefish, you must do so next time, and also get a little limy mortar from an old building that is being demolished; pound it up into a coarse powder, and scatter on cage floor. When the hens are coming forward for laying, if you appear to be in for a repetition of the trouble, add twenty drops of sherry and six of glycerine to the drinking water every day until the clutch of eggs is laid. Also give a few grains of inga each day to those hens having access to a mixture of seed containing it. By the way, inga should not form part of a regular item of food supply.

Aviary Queries (Ignoramus).—1. Your aviary would accommodate from 20 to 25 birds the size of a Canary if you do not wish to breed. In the latter case the number depends upon the species and your object. 2. Yes, two Goldfinches would live together quite amicably in such an aviary, and would agree with Canaries. Bad language may pass between them at times, but it would end at that. 3. Supply unlimited Canary seed in one vessel; hemp in another; and a mixture of thistle, teazle, rape, one part each maw, millet, linseed, and charlock, half part of each in a third vessel.

Identity of Bird (Steele).—Your query should not have been marked "Canaries," as it belongs properly to Mr. Weston's department. See his columns for reply.

Not Made Fair Start (Young Beginner).—The birds were not in condition when mated. If they do not seem to have made a definite start when this reply appears, separate them by a wire slide for a week or so, and give cock half a teaspoonful of hemp every second day, two leaves of dandelion, and half a teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake daily, with five drops of sherry mixed in it, and slightly sprinkled over with gold of pleasure seed. In the drinking water of both birds give four drops of tincture of steel every other day. Give the hen also two leaves of dandelion daily, and a little sponge cake as above, but in her case sprinkle it with a few grains of niger. Pair them again, if they appear ready, after a week or eight days of this treatment.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

Identity of Bird.

G. Clarke.—I can call to mind no British bird answering the description you give. Those who tell you it is a cross between a Linnet and a Bunting are but making wild guesses; don't take any notice of them. My own opinion is that you have caught an escaped Weaver (probably a female, but possibly a male out of colour), and I expect it is one of the common species, worth but a shilling or two. These Foreign birds are imported in large numbers, and "fill the bill" (when out of colour) as regards your description, while their appearance might conceivably lead to people hazarding the guess that they were Linnet-Bunting hybrids.

A Lover of Mules.

Patsy.—I quite agree with you that Mules make excellent pets, being hardy, very nice, free songsters, and easy to cater for. I should put the Linnet-Mule in the first place as a songster, with the Goldfinch Mule a good second, then following closely the Greenfinch, Siskin and Redpoll Mules. There is not the slightest need to make separate seed-mixtures for either; they will all thrive and sing to perfection if fed and caged precisely the same. They will certainly thrive well in the all-wire household cages; at the same time, the box pattern cage (especially that known as the Finch stock cage) is unquestionably the best. A good seed mixture for Mules at this season of the year is:—Canary three parts, teazle two parts, hemp one part, charlock and summer rape half-part each, maw and linseed quarter-part each. In the hot weather reduce the hemp and linseed, and increase the teazle. Any of the special Finch or wild-seed mixtures advertised in our columns will make a good and acceptable change, given twice or so a week. A little sunflower seed twice or thrice a week would also be sure to be appreciated. Any of the usual green foods may be given, flowering groundsel (not coarse leaves), chickweed, shepherd's purse, dandelion, lettuce, watercress, etc. The three first mentioned may be given practically ad libitum. All Mules are very fond of shepherd's purse.

Greenfinch and Goldfinch Mulers.

N.E.T.—I have given many answers this last few weeks respecting the treatment of muling couples, and you would do well to look them up; I have also dealt with the management (pairing, etc.) at considerable length. A Greenfinch-Canary couple is not difficult to cater for. They will do well on canary and teazle, equal parts, hemp half part, and a little summer rape and charlock seeds, which seeds will not hurt the wife. Give a little maw and mga, now and again in a finger drawer, or throw on the clean sand. The Greenfinch will have to have some sunflower daily. He will shell the latter easily enough, whereas the Canary will experience some difficulty in doing so, and so is not likely to overgorge herself on it. I do not care to keep Goldfinches without a free supply of hemp; of course, his mate is certain to help herself freely to this. But at the breeding season hemp does not hurt the hen Canaries at all; on the contrary, it is a fine seed for bringing them into forward condition. As most Finches, however, are late coming into breeding trim, the hens, of course, want little hemp early in the season, unless a first nest of Canaries is being taken from them. For food see reply to A.B.C. this week. Look out for and gather in plenty dandelion heads and young tender leaves—a free supply works wonders in getting all muling Finches into prime condition. Give also flowering chickweed, groundsel, and shepherd's purse—these should be freely used.

Goldfinches Backward in Condition.

Lucas B.—It has been a very curious season, my friend, and I don't for one moment suppose that yours are the only Goldfinches which seem to be still backward in condition. I have often explained, however, that the clear beak is not an essential sign of breeding condition in the Goldfinch. I have had fertile eggs scores of times from Goldies showing a distinct dark tip to their beaks. One of the best muling Finches I ever possessed went best part of the season without a clear beak, yet he could be depended on to fill every egg in every clutch. If I were to tell you the number of different hens I have popped him in with during a season, you would think I was "drawing the long-bow." You want to be guided by the birds' antics, and by their behaviour towards the hens when alongside them. If the Finches sing out stoutly, answering one another boldly and defiantly, then they can't be very backward. A forward Finch, too, is often to be seen "feeding" his feet, or the perch end, or the wires of the cages, regurgitating seed from his crop for the purpose. I have known querists who have thought such a bird sick, and even ill fit to die! One I have at present without a mate makes his perches one dirty, sticky mess. Could you not contrive to run the Goldfinches close by the hens for a few days, a wired slide (or something similar) separating them? You would soon see, then, whether they "sung at them," fed them through the wires, or otherwise took notice of their presence. It will help you to really gauge their condition. For suggested feeding, see reply to "A.B.C." this week.

The Yellow Wagtail.

Novice.—The Yellow Wagtail, when steady, is certainly a most delightful pet. I do not find Wagtails difficult to keep; the chief essentials to success are a really good stock-food and a sufficiency of live-food regularly supplied. "Cheap feeding" spells disaster with delicate insectivorous species of all kinds. A really good and cheap stock (house) cage can be contrived out of an ordinary double breeding cage, with two perches at top, one at each end, thus giving a long fly, and two at bottom, food and water vessels, and a bath, all inside. A show-cage of correct pattern will be supplied by any good cage-maker using our columns. I use a thick layer of sand on the bottoms of my cages. The Yellow Wagtail should be colour-fed for the show-bench. A newly-caught bird is often best kept in a cage with a canvas (false) top. As regards the menu, briefly put, my own methods of keeping Wagtails, Blackcaps, Nightingales, and similar small insectivorous birds are as follows:—As a stock mixture: Powdered Osborne biscuit, four parts; best ants' eggs and dried flies, two parts each; powdered silkworm pupæ, one part; meat meal, half part, by measure. Take the quantity required of this, and mix it just crumbly moist with grated raw carrot, or finely chopped lettuce, watercress, or chickweed (use young leaves only), or cold boiled potato, varying it frequently. It is necessary, of course, to give, in addition, all the live insect food (flies, spiders, wood-lice, earwigs, small beetles, smooth caterpillars, green-fly, live ants' eggs, etc.) one can possibly obtain; mealworms given regularly are indispensable. To the above stock mixture I occasionally add, after damping, a teaspoonful or two of preserved egg-flake, or part of a hard-boiled fresh egg, finely minced, and, more occasionally still, a little finely scraped raw lean mutton or beef. Good cream cheese is a splendid food, too; give a little, finely chopped, and mixed, of course, with the above biscuit food, or just laid on top of it. In place of Osborne biscuits, for economy's sake, the "broken biscuits" (sweet) obtainable very cheaply from most grocers may be used. Excellent ready-made foods, too, may be bought through our columns.

A Trio.

E. Taylor.—1, Stop the hemp and niger, and only give them the Bullie occasionally. Giving these seeds regularly has probably tended to upset the bird. Let him have plenty of the wild seeding plants (chickweed, etc.), I recommend. Give him two daily doses of sulphate of soda, as much as will lie over a sixpence, dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water. 2, It is reputed an excellent remedy; try it by all means. 3, Blue Tits seldom keep long in health in captivity, and the best thing to do when they commence to go wrong is unquestionably to give them their liberty. Just before freeing it (early in the morning) let it have a good feed of mealworms.

Feeding Goldfinch-Canary Muling Couple.

A.B.C.—You are rather late in the day commencing to "feed up." Still, if your birds are in good condition, they ought now to need but little before the long-delayed spell of "summer" comes and starts them off housekeeping. The couple should have a small teaspoonful of egg-bread every other day if the Goldie eats any it will not hurt him. The seed mixture should be: Canary two parts, teazle and hemp one part each, summer rape half a part. In addition, make up these two mixtures, (1) niger two parts, maw one part, (2) thistle, dandelion and sesame seeds in equal parts. Give a good teaspoonful of these on alternate days (No. 1 one day, 2 the next). Then you must go out and gather plenty of seeding dandelion heads, and the young leaves (you can give flowering heads and washed pot, too, if you like), also seeding chickweed, shepherd's purse and groundsel. These wild seeding plants (dandelion in particular) are simply invaluable for bringing all Finches into proper breeding condition, and the hen Canaries as well. When you separate the Goldie from the hen (when she commences to sit) let him have the usual Finch stock mixture again. The hen should then have plain Canary seed only in the hopper, but give her a tiny pinch of maw and summer rape now and again, just to "cheer her up"; mine get a sprig of seeding shepherd's purse or chickweed, too, occasionally. When the young hatch, I give my hens egg and biscuit, with Canary, summer rape and crushed hemp seeds in plenty, and a little maw for variety. When three or four days old, I give the hen a feed of the seeding shepherd's purse and chickweed, and as the youngsters progress I increase the latter two items until I am giving them practically ad libitum; they are the grandest "green foods" one can possibly give to feeding hens.

Brevities.

Hand-rearing Robins (J. R. Ward).—Robins are to be successfully reared by hand by following the methods advised "A. Horan" in last week's issue. Instead of using the gritty sand, however, substitute a good pinch of finely-powdered cuttlefish. Keep them warm, cosy, and scrupulously clean.

Colour-Feeding Thrushes (Bluff).—A naturally rich-coloured Thrush, if good in all points, could compete successfully on the show bench. But the majority of winning Song Thrushes (and other Thrushes) undoubtedly have a little sweet pepper given them by their owners. In my opinion it adds to their chance of securing the coveted first prize (although I tremble to say it, for fear some peppery anti-colour foodite will rise up and smite me).

Crossed Mandibles (A. B. Hanley).—It is a fact that once you start to cut either a bird's claws, or its beak, the faster they will grow in the future, so that the operation becomes necessary increasingly often. Old birds (and your twelve-year-old Goldie is a very ancient customer) are particularly liable to this trouble. Provide him with cubes of old mortar and cuttlefish to use his beak upon.

Hand-rearing Thrushes (No Name).—Probably you would notice that all the information you want was given in reply to "A. Horan" last week. There is no book published dealing solely with the particular thing you mention.

Song of Hedge Sparrow (A. Shine).—Yes; the Hedge Sparrow has quite a pleasing little song. "Cuddy's" cheerful ditty is one of the first we hear in the spring. The notes are loud and high pitched, and uttered in a jerky, hurried fashion. Once identified, you will have no difficulty in always recognising its song.

Goldie's Behaviour (Blaze).—As your Goldfinch is a black-legged one (how, by the way, do you know he is four years old?), he is no doubt not in quite fit condition yet. You must separate the couple until you find him feeding the hen through the partition wires. Your feeding is not good; see reply to "A.B.C." this week. Four years are not by any means enough to make a bird "too old for breeding"; at this age a Goldie is in its prime. A spell of hot weather is badly needed.

Identity of Bird (H. S. Negus).—The bird you have acquired is a Redstart (a male); local names are "Firetail" and "Shaketail." It should be kept in the usual type of small softbill cage, with inside glass feeders. For feeding hints see reply to "Novice" this week. By-the-way, this species certainly perches; all my own Redstarts do so.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

Birds for Cages.

"Foreigner."—(1) This is not as easy to answer as it appears, as you do not say for what purpose you require them. Songsters: Grey and Green Singing Finches, Alario, Cape Canary, any of the Serins as advertised in Cage Birds. Ornamental: Zebra, Grey, St. Helena, and Orange-cheek Waxbills, Gouldian Ruficauda, Diamond, Bicheno Finches, Cordon Bleus and Firefinches. Probable breeders: Zebra and Ribbon Finches, Silverbills, Bronze Mannikins, Bengalese, White and Grey Java Sparrows. Tanagers also make good cage birds, but are not seed-eaters, the same applies to most species of Foreign Thrushes. The former are gorgeous birds, and need a soft food, fruit and insect dietary, as also do the latter, most of which are fine songsters. (2) A full-sized Canary breeding cage is a useful type for a pair of such birds as are given above—that for the Tanagers as large again, and of the box type. For the Thrushes the cage must not be less than those provided for the English Blackbird or Thrush, and a similar type answers well. If this does not quite meet your need, specialise your desires and I will help you further.

Birds for Outdoor Aviary.

Novice.—I must warn you against keeping Budgerigars with Finches; they will be all right for a time, and then all at once, you'll be picking up maimed and murdered birds. As regards the list you name, all can be kept together, but Waxbills, Weavers, and Bishops seldom breed. The following are all probable breeders, easy to keep, and though not brilliant, are most certainly pretty and attractive; Zebra, Spice, Ruficauda, Long-tail and Chestnut Finches, Bronze Mannikin, Zebra or Golden-breasted Waxbill, Silverbills, Bengalese, Diamond Doves (very small and pretty), Grey and Green Singing Finches, and any of the Serins you see advertised in Cage Birds. Do not put in more than 20 pairs all told, and fix up at least double that number of nest boxes all over your aviary, even in the open part of flight, but these nest boxes for the open must have waterproof tops, which should overhang the sides a little. Note: The cheapest are seldom the best; usually they are dear in the end, for losses are many, as such birds have only just come to hand. All new purchases should be nursed up in cages for a few days, at least, before being turned out.

Sample of Seed, Hybrids, etc.

H. E. R.—(1) It is of fair average quality, and is known as white millet. I should also give the Finches and Waxbills small brown and spray millet, in addition to the sample, and also keep a tin of Canary seed in their aviary or cage. (2) No, I do not think you are likely to breed any foreign Hybrids if you keep any others with them. Get an ordinary double breeding cage, take out the partition, and put the Grey and Green Singing Finches in this and you will have a reasonable prospect of success. Soft food should be offered some days before the young are due to hatch; get a pound of the best ants' eggs (cocoons), scald a small quantity and add sufficient crumbled sponge cake to absorb the moisture so as to leave it just crumbly moist; all the other items of diet you name may be offered. (3) Yes, but the main difficulty with these birds is getting them over the first few months in this country; once acclimatised they are not unduly delicate if kept out of draught. The Pintailed and Nonpariel must be numbered amongst the most beautiful of foreign birds.

Treatment for Laughing Doves.

"Juliet."—You have a pair of ordinary Barbary Turtle Doves, also known as half-collared and Laughing Doves. No, the wicker cage is not suitable for breeding purposes. Get a well pointed box (draught proof), and cover front with wire netting, of course providing a door for cleaning and feeding purposes. A useful size is 2 ft. high and 1½ ft. square. Fix a shallow box near the top in one corner, place a layer of pine sawdust in same, and once your birds are adult, your stock will soon multiply. Of course, in a cage the young would have to be removed as soon as they were able to feed for themselves. Diet: A mixture of equal parts Canary and white millet and dari is about all they require, with a little green food (lettuce), and the floor of cage kept covered with gritty sand. It is an advantage to sprinkle over this crushed cuttlefish bone; most Doves are very fond of rock salt and a small piece should be kept in the cage. They are hardy and can be left out of doors all the year round in any enclosure, providing the accommodation of an ordinary fowl run, and under such conditions young and old may be left together.

Parrot with Strained Leg.

W. Ellis.—I almost fear it is a case of paralysis. Carry out the advice already given as to arrangement of food vessels, etc. For the wheezing mix a few chilies with the seed mixture, and if there should be any exusion from the nostrils, bathe same with diluted glyco-thymoline. Make its drinking water the colour of port wine, with Parrish's Chemical Food, and at the least sign of constipation, give a dose or two of Dinneford's Magnesia till relief is given. For dose, etc., see other replies. It is either a bad fracture or paralysis. Keep bird quiet and warm, yet not in a vitiated atmosphere. All Parrots indulge more or less in the rasping you speak of, and if there is no rash you may take it, it is natural.

What Parrot?

H. G. Nap.—It is quite evident you have an Amazon Parrot, but I fail to recognise its species from your description, and incline to the opinion that you are either mistaken as to its age, or that it is abnormally coloured. As to value, if a freely imported species, from 20/- upwards, according to its talent as a talker. If a rare species, practically what you can get for it. It all depends upon the degree of rarity. Diet: A seed mixture of two parts each canary seed and oats and one part each wheat, dari, maize, hemp and sunflower seeds. Well mix and keep a regular supply in the cage; also give a little boiled maize twice a week. This soon turns sour; it must only be left in cage one day and care must be taken that stray corn is not left about. Also give so as to keep up a varied diet, ripe fruit, plain biscuits, little boiled potato (dry) nuts, greenfood, such as lettuce, green peas, etc., according to season. Do not give table scraps, tea, coffee, or milk slops, or any kind of animal food. The warty substance you mention on upper mandible, is the cere surrounding the nostrils, and is quite natural.

What Parrot?

"Anxious."—If "Anxious" will supply particulars as to size of bird, whether long or short tail, I can then give a more definite reply. I can only express an opinion that your bird is an immature blue-fronted Amazon. It should have, if very young, some boiled maize daily (this soon turns sour in hot weather), if it is able to crack and eat heartily of dry seed. Twice a week will be often enough for the boiled maize, but it must be left in cage one day, and been made fresh for each occasion. Seed mixture: Canary, wheat, oats, maize, dari, hemp and sunflower seeds; in equal parts with the exception of the two latter kinds, of which only one half portions. Also supply so as to vary the diet, ripe fruit, plain biscuit, nuts (shelled walnuts are best), and a little boiled carrot or potato occasionally. Do not give table scraps, tea, coffee, or milk slops, nor any kind of animal food. The blue-front usually makes both a good talker and a mimic. Train by keeping it where it will hear plenty of conversation, and also by the constant repetition of such things as you wish it to repeat.

Hard Luck.

H.V.J.—Yes, it is hard luck, but unfortunately it is what assails only too often those who follow the fascinating pursuit of aviculture; you must also cultivate philosophy at the same time. I have not found the Yellow-billed or Lesser Cardinals by any means as hardy or long-lived as the Red and Black-crested, and I think yours was a case of possibly a sluggish individual, coupled with high living, but such cases are not common with Cardinals. In such event, in future, take the bird gently but firmly in the hand, and dip it into cold water—put it right under, head as well—a quick immersion and out again. Repeat this several times if necessary. Then put it in its cage, where it will be quiet and out of draughts till it is dry. Afterwards make its drinking water saline with Epsom salts for a couple of days. I have a Varied Lorrikeet, which to-day is in exhibition trim, and which 12 months ago had three fits in one afternoon, and was treated as above. Pintail Nonpariels are precarious creatures to keep at any time, and we have been through some awful weather changes lately. If the White Javas were new purchases, I can quite understand it, with the awful weather of late April, and also with birds that have started nesting. I expect losses have been many all over the country—wild birds suffering equally with captive ones—I hope you'll have such luck as will bury the present disappointment. The joys of aviculture are great, nevertheless, philosophy is a sine qua non at times.

White Java Sparrows.

"Notsduh."—(1) Only a small percentage of these birds breed true to colour. Quite a large portion of the young partially revert back to the original stock, and show more or less of grey mottling in their plumage. You will probably get some pure whites from your present pair. (2) I rather expect that in the change from the dealer's shop to your cage they have been subjected to a sudden change of temperature, and thus thrown into a moult. If they still persist in plucking one another, you will have to part them and keep them separate till their plumage is renewed. For the next fortnight make their drinking water the colour of pale port every other day with Parrish's Chemical Food. They do not need soft food. (4) See answer to 1. (5) As soon as they are in condition, put in a nest box, supply a little hay and a Canary nest bag, and leave them to themselves. They often breed quite late in the year. (6) Compare the birds' beaks closely, view them in profile, and if they are a true pair, you will find one of them (the hen's) narrower at the base and more tapering than the other. (7) See answer to 2. Canary, white and spray millet, with a few oats, and a little rice in the husk, if you can readily obtain it, with green-food, water, and a piece of clean cuttlefish in the cage, will fully meet the modest needs of these birds, which, once they become fit, are not difficult to keep so.

Brevities.

Sexing Budgerigars (Preston). — The cere, which is the substance surrounding the nostrils on the upper mandible, is bright blue in the male and deep brown in the female; that is, when they are in breeding condition. You certainly should have ultimate success in breeding the birds in your cage. I presume you have hung up a husk nest in one corner at the back of the cage. Two would be better. Hang them in so that the entrance of the husk faces the front of cage.

Budgerigars and Small Finches (Mongie).—(1) Yes, put in two pairs and hang up four husks, with the openings as much as possible facing different ways, near the top of cage. It will be necessary to remove the young as soon as they can fend for themselves. (2) Grey Singing Finches are plain but pretty birds and very sweet singers; Green Avadavats, Zebra Waxbills, St. Helena Waxbills, Bengalese, Gouldian Finches. Or if you had single birds only of each, you could add the following: Ruficauda and Long-tailed Grassfinches, Silverbill, Spice Finch, Orange-cheeked Waxbill and Alario Finch. Most of the above are really brilliant and beautiful birds—none of them are really plain.

Birds for Outdoor Aviary (A.J.P.).—You have accommodation for about 12 pairs of birds, some of which would breed. You could keep double that number and keep them healthy, but very few breeding results would occur with so many. The list of birds given in reply to "Novice" in this issue would be very suitable for you, and such as Cape Canary, Grey and Green Singing Finches, and Alario Finches should cross with Canaries, providing you only include males of these species. Diamond or Peaceful Doves, or both, would agree; they are small, amiable, very pretty, and make a pleasing variety in an aviary containing Finches and Waxbills. The Doves would thrive on the same diet as the Finches, etc. The whole of the birds referred to would only need white and spray millet in addition to what you are supplying to the Canaries.

What Bird? (H. Lloyd).—They are Cockatiels, and their value is about 10s. or a little more a pair at the present time, according to condition, etc. Canary, white millet and oats, with lettuce, grass in the ear, or other green-food as in season, will meet the modest needs of this pleasing species. They are hardy and need no coddling, but of course must not be subjected to draught. Of course, it is understood that water, cuttlefish, and grit must be supplied to all species of Parrots and Parrakeets.

Too Many in a Given Space (C.G.).—No, you are aiming to do more than the scope of your aviary warrants. Again, the temper of Blossom-heads is so uncertain that I doubt their being safe company for the Cockatiels and Budgerigars. What I advise is, cage up the Blossom-head and put two pairs of Budgerigars in with your Cockatiels. In so small an aviary I do not think the Lovebirds would survive our winter. As an alternative, if you wish to risk the Blossom-heads, then sell one pair of Cockatiels, procure a hen Blossom-head and two pairs of Budgerigars. Put up double the number of husks and log nests that you have pairs of birds.

"Stranger's" and F. L. Martin's queries will be answered in our next issue.

PARK & LAKE AVICULTURE

Answered by Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S., M.B.O.U., etc.

Rearing Young Pheasants.

A.B.C.—Young Pheasants are easily reared, but require better food than chickens. Custard is good, but a simple and convenient food is hard egg and bread-crumb, well mixed together—the egg being first rubbed through a bit of perforated zinc. Chopped green food, especially spring onions, dried flies, and dried ants' eggs, should be mixed with this food. Millet and Canary seed should also be given, and crushed hemp and chopped cheese are useful additions. After the birds are a week or ten days old, chopped, cooked meat can be substituted for the egg, and some of the advertised game meals used. Always keep up a supply of green food, and gradually get the birds on to larger grain. Be careful to guard against damp, and give grit regularly. Hens for hatching Pheasants should not be too large and clumsy. A good supply of well-scoured gentles is a great help in rearing these birds, and if they can have a grass run, they will be more easily kept, as they can thus find much of their own food, and will not need so expensive a diet as that recommended. Such a regimen, however, will rear them in close confinement, where they cannot procure insects and green food themselves.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Pair Canaries (W. C. Teasdale).—Acute pneumonia, or "chill" caused death in both cases.

Cardinal (Miss Martin). Septic inflammation of liver, lungs, and bowels, ending in apoplexy.

Budgerigar (Miss Rowney).—Acute pneumonia, accelerated, in my opinion, by enlarged and feverish condition of liver.

GENERAL.

Answered by The Editor.

Diseases of Birds (W.G.B.).—We do not think there is such a book by the writer named. Probably you are thinking of the late Dr. Greene's book entitled "The Diseases of Cage Birds," which we can send you post free on receipt of postal order value 1s. 2d.

Long Eaton's Yellow Crests (The Troubled Man).—Your communication made us smile, despite the depressing weather. Really, however, we dare not publish such a communication unless the writer's name be appended to it.

Articles on Seeds (Seeds).—If you will kindly forward us your name and address, which seem to have been mislaid, we will write you concerning this matter.

Two Recipes (Spotted Camel).—If you will let us know your address, we will write you direct.

Skylarks Breeding (L. Meason).—An account of Skylarks breeding in captivity appeared in No. 227. There is also an article on their feeding, etc., in No. 282. Both numbers can be sent you post free on receipt of four penny stamps.

Sterile Pigeon Eggs (J. W. Partridge).—This question is out of our line. We have forwarded it on to the Editor of "Pigeons," who will probably answer it in this week's issue of his paper.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NIGHTINGALE IN SURREY.

SIR,—Last week, when I wrote respecting bird-life in Surrey, I mentioned that we might expect to hear the Nightingale soon in this district (Guildford). That expectation is now realised. I heard the 'gale on April 29 and was awakened by its song this morning (April 30) at 5 o'clock. It was only a few yards away from my bedroom window.

T. H. SKELTON.

THE CATCHING OF HAWFINCHES.

SIR,—It would be very interesting if Mr. Hakes would oblige by writing particulars of how he caught the young Hawfinches in trap-cage, what position he placed trap cage in, whether he used a call-bird in bottom part and what he used for bait. Will he also say whether he has ever caught them in nets in winter-time with a brace or call bird? They seem very shy, wary birds always making off at sight: at least, that is my experience. I greatly appreciated his article in your valuable paper last week.

BIRD LOVER.

STARLINGS AND SKYLARKS.

SIR,—In reference to the interesting paragraph quoted in your columns from "The Northern Herald," I agree with the writer as to the decreasing numbers of Skylarks in localities where the Starling abounds. Across a considerable stretch of the Highlands to the extreme West at Gairloch in Ross-shire, the Skylark is becoming rare and the Starling rapidly increasing. The latter bird is singularly voracious, and does, I believe, destroy or devour eggs of the Thrush as well as those of the Lark. In the Highlands fifty years ago, Thrushes, Skylarks, and Blackbirds were abundant, but Starlings were rare. Now, the former birds are little seen, while great flocks of Starlings visit every part of the country and build their nests in the suburbs of every town. No doubt the Starling has his own attractions as a sprightly songster; but he cannot compete with the Lark, and he is specially destructive in orchards. I am inclined to agree with the "Northern Herald" when the writer says that the Starling interferes with nests, eggs, and young of certain other birds, and that his preponderance in localities formerly unvisited by him, is due to that fact.

THE BORDER FANCY CANARY CLUB AND ITS JUDGES.

SIR,—I regret to notice that Mr. Patterson is so much upset over this discussion as to allow himself to blame me wrongly. If Mr. Patterson is now calm, he will see that I never stated that he could neither write well, nor think justly. But again, I say that "to write well one must think justly," which he did not do in the letter I referred to. Now, Sir, it is well-known to your many readers that Mr. Patterson, being absent from the general meeting of the B.F.C.C. when the much talked about rule was passed to restrict judges to two shows (with the club's patronage), entered your columns to ask the reasons for passing such a rule: he also appealed to the mover of the motion for such. In the same letter he discussed his own question very fully and prophesied what would take place through this rule, by saying that by the time the Scottish National and the Crystal Palace (two of the largest shows) came on there would be nothing but perfect novices to place the awards. Now I hold such statements as Mr. Patterson made in discussing his own question without waiting for an answer from his club members, were either a cheap advertisement for the club's judges, or taking an undue advantage of judges, and likely judges, outside the B.F.C.C. Again, in reply to Mr. Turnbull he showed (if they were not satisfied with the present judges) the club's power through its members being members of other societies. Now I hold a different opinion, and am quite in order to take exception to his statement that it is likely to do any injustice to the large body of fanciers outside the B.F.C.C., as I am of opinion that, suppose all the present prominent judges were engaged, there still could be found in the fancy judges capable of placing the awards at any show with as much satisfaction as at present. I may say I am sorry if I have wronged the B.F.C.C. by saying they had only 300 members. I took a quotation from Mr. Turnbull's letter, which passed uncontradicted, where he stated they had nearly 300 members. In conclusion, Mr. Patterson, not being a member of the B.F.C.C., I cannot discuss the advancement of the club's interests, and I have no desire to bully you to answer any question.

ROBT. LAMBIE.

[Some portion of the above letter has had to be deleted. Mr. Patterson has very definitely stated that he will not answer any questions which touch outside the effect of the new rule in the Club's interests; therefore we see no object in straying away from that point.—EDITOR.]

A QUESTION FOR ILFORD FANCIERS.

SIR,—May I be permitted, through the valuable medium of your columns, to seek the whereabouts of the Ilford Fanciers' Society? I saw it announced that it had changed its name, which is rather interesting to me as a member of the society. I had no intimation of the change or any notice of its meeting. Also, in view of the fact that I wrote to the secretary previous to the intimation about some financial matters, and have not yet received a reply, perhaps the secretary of the new venture will kindly state whether they have taken over the debts as well as the assets of the late society.

S. G. QUELCH.

THE HEATING OF A BIRD ROOM.

SIR,—Re heating apparatus in issue of April 11th, which Mr. E. Wear says is similar to my Regenator heater that appeared in CAGE BIRDS, No. 166 (March 18th, 1905), I am sorry to have to differ. The one that I used in my bird-room did its work well, nor did it condense or evaporate, and it was set up altogether differently. Should the reader who asked you, Sir, some time ago about my Regenator flower-pot heater care to send me his address, I shall be most pleased to give him a sketch of it; also full details of a heater that will give him no trouble, is easy to fit up in the right way, a cheap, safe, cold air draught heater, that will hold its own for cheapness. It will also be a good heater for a green house up to 20 feet long, and will keep frost out. I might say, Sir, that I was some time before I could get it to do its work with success; and this is my reason for writing these few notes. The two sketches are similar as regards flower pots.

ALBERT BURTENSHAW.

A GOOD TIP FOR KEEPERS OF INSECTIVOROUS BIRDS.

SIR,—In your Mr. Weston's reply to Mr. T. H. Skelton in last week's CAGE BIRDS, he mentions the difficulty of supplying live ants to insectivorous birds without many escaping. I have overcome this to a very great extent by having a small all-wire cage made with a zinc bottom, and round the top edge of the latter portion I have a water-tight trough about an inch square. Into the bottom of this cage I put anything which crawls, and it is impossible for same to escape without crossing the water, which very few do. I hang this cage in front of my Nightingales' cages (after the manner of a bath) and find my birds do well. In fact I have a 'gale which commenced to sing early in January that had been kept out day and night all winter in an ordinary box cage, and a healthier or better songster I don't think anyone has. If this arrangement is new to your Mr. Weston and he considers it worth trying, I shall be pleased to have written.

ARTHUR SILLS.

YELLOWHAMMER-CANARY MULES.

SIR,—It may interest your numerous readers to hear that a friend of mine has a nest of Yellowhammer-Mules, now nine days old and doing well. The hen laid four eggs, hatching out three young; the other was dead in shell. I might state the eggs were placed under a Norwich hen known to be a good mother. The Yellowhammer is now sending its mate to nest again, and another clutch is expected. If it is of interest to your readers I will be pleased to let you know in about a month's time how the young have fared, and if the eggs expected this week are fertile.

E. H. HULL.

[We shall be very pleased to receive further details. Seeing that our correspondent terms the youngsters "Yellowhammer-Mules," we assume the mate of the Yellowhammer to be a hen Canary, although he does not definitely state what it is. Perhaps he will kindly tell readers if this is correct.—EDITOR.]

SOME OBSERVATIONS ON THE GOLDFINCH.

SIR,—I should think all Goldfinch fanciers will be greatly pleased (as I myself was) with the chart depicting the different points of the Goldfinch, which you have published. The ideal bird, and the sketches showing the failings of the others, do the artist, Mr. Norman, great credit, while to the young fanciers, and even the older ones, the illustrations and the remarks by that well known British bird judge, Mr. G. E. Weston, dealing with each bird pictured there and describing the failings in a simple way, will be most helpful. Having kept Goldfinches for over twenty-five years, and never being without them the whole of the time, I myself have seen birds as Mr. Weston describes them to your readers. I have studied the Goldfinch from boyhood and seen hundreds of them together at liberty in years gone by. It is over twenty-five years ago since I first caught them, and I have seen all sorts of different specimens during this time, walking and training it miles for that purpose. It is now over ten years ago that I laid a net, or limed a twig. I found that it paid better to get the pick from different trappers if you want the very best birds, and it is the cheapest in the end. Goldfinches differ in size, shape, colour and markings. If you visit their breeding places you will find some are very chestnut coloured, while others are very white. These white birds carry clean cheeks, but when they are so brown the cheeks always are dirty. I like them between the two. Get all the points that you require, and when the birds are two years of age they are right, though most of them get better with age, up to five or six years old. I have a dozen now in my possession, some old winners. I do not show them after I have proved them breeders. It is better to keep them at home; breeding birds are breeding birds, and show birds should be kept for showing. I have seen, I may say, some of the finest Goldfinches this season that I have for many a long day. I have the bird which I exhibited last year in the Exeter and District Cage Bird Society's three monthly shows, under three different judges, and which was awarded first prize each month, scoring 21 points, and thereby gaining the silver medal. I send you the photo of this bird and myself, with the cards and medal. I succeeded in going one better at the open show, first, second, and vhc, in a very strong class, being also awarded special and CAGE BIRDS special for the best British bird in the show. You only learn by keeping Goldfinches how much they differ. You will hardly ever see two alike, but yet they may be good specimens. The remarks about them by Mr. Weston, ought to put Goldfinch lovers on the right path to success.

W. H. COMMINS.

MORE TROUBLE IN IRELAND.

SIR,—It was pitiful to see no reply in CAGE BIRDS last week from the secretary, or the "family party," to my challenge re the six questions extracted from my letter upon which they pronounced sentence of suspension for three months. Poor "Non-official" made a plucky effort at rescue; he is now worthy of being brought into the fold and having his "non" cut off. He had a good "dip," but stirred up some unsolicited testimonials on my behalf, viz., "that my conduct as chairman is quite in keeping with my letter" exposing the doings of the family party. I evidently practise what I preach. And how familiar "non-official" is with my official conduct! Again, he goes on that "my accusations against the secretary are frivolous." Of course they are, and true, too, that's my point: so why suspend me for same? Of course, he knows. He says, further, that "the winners of the cup this season came up smiling." They did: in fact they came up laughing, but it was in their sleeve, and "non-off," with many others, are only their laughing stock. The non-feds put a colour on the matter this season! Another interesting admission is that, "the feeling of the club at large now is one of relief since my suspension." No doubt some do feel at large for the present, and appreciate relief, which, of course, is unofficial and only temporary. I regret taking so much of CAGE BIRDS' valuable space and time to have these matters thrashed out, but it is my duty to do so. With regard to my own grievance, this I have placed in my solicitors' hands, and will let members know result in due course.

RICHARD DEVITT.

Chairman, Y.C.C. of I.

A DULWICH AND PECKHAM MATTER.

SIR,—"Anonymous" hears quite rightly that we are applying for affiliation to the C.B.C. It is also right that the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., of which he is a member, are so afraid of our forthcoming show that they are protesting; we hope, without avail, for it might be injurious to that body were the powerful Dulwich Ornithological Society to lead the way by running an anti-union show. There is no fear of that, as it is only a question of dates. We hear also that the D. and P.C.B.S. have gone so far as to ask "specialist" clubs not to grant their patronage to the D.O.S.! Surely jealously has no limit! We feel confident that if we do apply, our application will be considered in an unbiased manner, by the committees, and that they will not be prompted by those who have quite enough to do to manage their own affairs.

ROGERS AND MAZZONI, Hon. Secs. D.O.S.

SIR,—The controversy now appearing in the columns of your valuable journal under the above heading has greatly interested me. I for some time past took considerable interest in the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., and thinking they were a very good company, I joined them and was the means of presenting them with the very much advertised seven guinea challenge shield for open competition I found to my regret, although a very deserving society, they were in low water financially. I spoke to Mr. Woolhouse (their late chairman and show manager) and suggested that in co-operation with Mr. Rogers, I would run a concert on a large scale at the Imperial Hall, in January last, with a view of helping them. The idea was placed before the committee, who welcomed it and promised every support. Owing to an unfortunate split, this concert, although acknowledged to be the best ever held in the district, was a dismal failure financially. The only support we received was from the section now known as the Dulwich Ornithological society. Mr. Rogers and I lost about £10 over the transaction, which we are not crying over, but we did expect some of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. who took tickets at least as a matter of courtesy, to return them, even if they did not sell them. I know very little of cage bird societies, and my first experience was rather bitter, but my humble favours shall be certainly bestowed on the most deserving, and as the Dulwich Ornithological meets my views as a go-ahead society, composed of fanciers who mean business and have their hobby at heart, it grieves me to see a certain section trying to throw cold water on their commendable efforts, which should entitle them not only to the name of Dulwich, but the admiration of the fancy. They are all good fellows, and I must congratulate them on the success they are making. The society has still friends.

ROLLER CANARIES AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE SHOW.

Norris v. Whittaker.

After going carefully through the lengthy and complicated correspondence referring to the above dispute, the joint arbitrators decided in favour of Mr. Whittaker on the following grounds:—That whilst it has been fairly established by Mr. Norris that there was the additional challenger prepared to meet Mr. Whittaker's birds, there was never any actual acceptance by Mr. Norris or anyone else of the challenge made by Mr. Whittaker in the Fancy Press of February 22nd, 1908.

(Signed) F. CARL. } Joint arbitrators.
J. ROBSON. }

SIR,—Seeing that Mr. Whittaker doubts Mr. Norris's word to the effect that several members were quite willing to accept his (Mr. Whittaker's) challenge, I beg to say that I wrote to Mr. Norris offering to send my bird as I thought it only fair, for I felt confident that my bird had been judged fair when at the Palace show.

T. W. WALTON.

PRIZE-MONEY AT GREENWICH SHOW.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Henry Lowe's letter, I should like to be allowed to make it quite clear that the prize-money he refers to is members' prize-money. All prize-money won in open classes was paid out last November and our late secretary advised you to that effect, and this intimation appeared in CAGE BIRDS of 23rd November, 1907, or the following week. Any information Mr. Lowe requires concerning purely society affairs, may be had from me, or by attending one of our meetings.

F. W. HAMER, hon. sec.

SIR,—I received a letter this morning from Mr. Hamer and also a copy of a letter he has sent to CAGE BIRDS in answer to mine in your last issue. Mr. Hamer says that the prize-money refers to members' prize-money. All prize money won in open classes was paid last November. My wife obtained a first in open class, but has not received any money. Mr. Hamer goes on to say this is purely society affairs. It would be interesting to know how many members the society consists of. According to catalogue, there were fifty-five exhibits. Say the club consists of forty; that leaves fifteen open exhibitors. This is not much to pay out. On the morning of show I paid Mr. Hill, secretary, nineteen shillings and ninepence for exhibits, membership and advertisement, and now I am to be treated in this manner. I belong to other clubs as well as this and am able to show and compete in any class. Thousands of exhibitors do the same thing. I never attend any club meetings of any clubs I belong to.

ALWAYS USE OUR DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE. Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1-, 1.6 according to size.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

RINGS The Oldest Ring Maker in The World.

My 1908 improved rings are now ready, also my Pedigree Books. These rings are the finest ever put on a bird's leg. All the numbers are embossed, and not same as all other makes, stamped in; therefore cannot fill up with dirt; all edges are neatly rounded. They are not cheap flimsy rings that birds can nip to the leg and cause inflammation, as many a good bird has been lost through cheap rings. Prices as before, 6d. per dozen, 5/- per gross. Pedigree Books, 6d. each. Agents apply at once; enclose stamp for terms.

LOOK AHEAD AND SEE THE SHINING STAR ROYAL RED.

Yes, it shines as it never shone before!

I have just received 12 tons of this beautiful famous COLOUR FEED.

READ THESE TESTIMONIALS, they will surprise you.

At Crystal Palace Show, 1908. Every 1st prize winner, including championship diploma in open Norwich classes, were moulted on Royal Red. Every 1st, 2nd, and 3rd prize winner, including championship diploma in Cinnamon section, were moulted on Royal Red. These are the classes where you can't win without colour. Mr. J. F. Bishop, Nottingham, writes, May 6th,—1908: "I have much pleasure in stating all my birds have been moulted on your Royal Red feed at the Crystal Palace Show, 1908. I won three champion classes in Norwich, including five specials for the best Norwich in the show, also many other prizes at Nottingham, Derby, Ilkeston, Wellingboro, etc." Mr. E. Baker, Cowes, May, 1908, writes: "Your Royal Red feed worked wonders again last season, as all will know with my winnings, which included three firsts at last Palace Show." Mr. J. C. Barnes, Sheffield, writes: "February, 1908.—Sir,—For the benefit of the fancy I have great pleasure in informing you of the wonderful depth of colour I got in my birds last season by using your Royal Red. They came out exceedingly hot and beautifully bright, and not in the least bricky. At Sheffield Show, Nov. 8th-9th, I won silver challenge cup (making three years in succession), silver medal for hottest bird, special for best Buff cock, special for best hen, eight firsts, nine seconds, five thirds, and other honours. For last 10 years I have used no other feed, and I have great pleasure in recommending its use to all who are ambitious of procuring the highest colour at lowest cost." All Mr. Godley's noted winning Cinnamons, also all Mr. Dormer's Cinnamons, were moulted solely on Royal Red. Mr. J. Wilcock, Eccleshill, writes: "May 7th, 1908.—Sir,—Just a few lines to let you know all my birds have done extra well on your Royal Red feed. I was third for the great Yorkshire challenge cup, second for the Cinnamon-marked trophy, and third Shackleton trophy, and winner of L. and P.O.S. Cup, London; also won 50 specials, 63 firsts, 59 seconds, 51 thirds, 35 fourths, beside 100 other prizes, and second for Yorkshire Club specials. I think this speaks extra well for the grand bright rich colour I got, which pleases our judges so well. Send me half-cwt. at once." Have scores more, but above should prove enough to satisfy you or anyone that there is only one colour feed on this earth—that's Sandiford's Royal Red. Prices Royal Red, 1 lb. 2/-, 2 lb. 3/3, 5 lb. 7/6; 14 lb. 17/-. Hot Natal, 2/- lb., 2lb. 3/8. All carriage paid. Wholesalers and agents write for terms.

Chatteris. May 9, 1908.—Your cheque for 29 birds received this morning with best thanks. I must compliment you on your prompt and businesslike methods, and shall certainly send to you when I have more to dispose of.—A. ——, to W. Rudd.

The name of W. RUDD stands for STABILITY the World over, and is not clothed with a female name or garb. VALUE FOR MONEY, and even more, but no profession of POUNDS FOR SHILLINGS. I hold ALL varieties of Canaries at this moment. Kindly bear this in mind.

AMATEURS would do well to try a pair of my specially matched Plainheaded Norwich or Yorkshire Canaries at 12/6, 15/- or 20/-. Crests ditto, 15/-, 20/-, 30/-. Nothing elsewhere at the present time can touch them for value. Travelling Cages 3d. extra. Approval with pleasure upon receipt of Cash or deposit with Editor. I PAY CARRIAGE BACK. For other varieties, Cages and everything connected with the Birdroom; send for my FREE Copyright Illustrated Price List and Catalogue, and don't be gulled by self-styled specialists, who are either afraid or ashamed to use their proper names. These facts have never been contradicted, simply because they are incontrovertible. I am standing in front of the public, and have done so for over 35 years.

BOOKLET FREE.

Finest Talking Parrots. I only deal in Parrots that will make first-class talkers; no rubbish. I am willing at all times to send my Parrots on four weeks' trial and three months' talking guarantee. Why? Because all my Parrots are young, strong, and reliable. My lifetime has been spent among grey Parrots, both at home and abroad. I guarantee every customer every satisfaction. Grey Parrots are my special fancy. I have trained them, know their wants, and can give every purchaser a bird that will please him in every way. I can supply grey talkers, not thinkers, that will say almost anything, at reasonable prices. Before you purchase a grey or green Parrot, send for my Booklet, entitled "Talking Parrots." All my birds are sent on four weeks' trial, at my risk. Send postcard for catalogue.—Mrs. Forster, Princes Park Aviaries, Violet Street, Liverpool.

PARROT PROBLEM

solved. For full proofs send postcard at once for my large book, "Parrot Prattle," now containing 168 pages. This is the most wonderful book ever offered free of all charge to all Parrot fanciers. (This "Parrot Prattle" is registered copyright, and all infringers and imitators will be proceeded against). It contains hundreds of testimonials from all parts with full names and addresses, many interesting facts, and gives valuable advice and hints to all Parrot buyers. Full details of our original system of selling Parrots on four week's trial, at our risk, which we were the first to introduce. We sell Parrots of all descriptions on four weeks' trial, at our risk, before settlement. Cheapest and best in the Kingdom, and any Parrot sold by us, and not giving full satisfaction, will be exchanged any time within twelve months. Remember we lead and others try to follow. Write to other dealers as well as us, and judge for yourselves. Lists of Parrots for sale and above book post free on receipt of postcard.

Advertisements continued on page 484.

The last litter of pups which I advertised in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Thos. Cadogan (Newport), were disposed of quickly, as I had replies from all over the country, thus testifying to the splendid medium your paper is for advertisers. I wish it every success.

A Noted Winner.

I was pleasantly surprised to see my natural coloured Yellow Norwich hen occupying the page of honour in this week's CAGE BIRDS—an honour which I highly appreciate—writes Mr. Jas. Winter (Edinburgh). She was one of a nest of three, hatched in May, 1905, the other two (a clear Yellow hen and a four-pointed Buff cock) being also noted winners. The bird portrayed was not exhibited as an unflighted one, but for the past two summers she was exhibited both in England and Scotland with a very fair amount of success. Her record includes first prizes at Manchester, Dundee, Aberdeen, and twice in succession at the Scottish National. She was also first at Preston last season in the open variegated class, beating the colour-fed birds. The progress of the Norwich Plainhead in Scotland of late years has been very rapid, which is scarcely to be wondered at, as they have many attractive points to recommend them and, before another show season comes round, I hope to see a great addition to the ranks of breeders of this interesting branch of our hobby.

Wheezing Canaries.

Canaries are troubled often with a wheezing in the chest, says "Health," which, from its resemblance to what is known as asthma in human beings, is given the same name. It is not, however, asthma, but an affection of the lungs. The cause is not far to seek. Canaries can bear great extremes of heat and cold, delicately framed though they be, but they cannot stand sudden transitions from one to the other. When they are kept in a room where the temperature is very variable, perhaps close to a draughty window during the day, with hot, vitiated atmosphere from burning gas in the evening, and later on the other extreme of cold, we must not wonder if the lungs are affected. It is therefore important that care should be taken to prevent such a state of things, and this is best done by hanging the cage below the middle bar of the window, or, what is better, standing it on the table some distance away. If such a plan be adopted the so-called asthma will be prevented, but if it is found, a little tincture of aconite is the best remedy—say, a drop to a teaspoonful of water.

THE SHOWS.

GRIMSBY AND DIST. O.S.

Monthly meeting held at the Hall of Science, on May 5, Mr. H. E. Stubbs presiding, when there was a fair attendance. Mr. Harness very kindly presented a special prize for competition among-t members. Owing to the exceptionally cold weather, which has been a great drawback to breeders locally this season, only ten young Canaries were staged, but we anticipate a much greater number at our next monthly meeting. The following was the result of the nest feather show and table show for British birds, the chairman awarding the cards satisfactorily:—NOR. YELL.: 1, 3, Moore, senr.; 2, Robinson. BUFFS: 1, 2, Moore, senr.; 3, 4, vhc, Robinson. CLASS 4: 1, 2, Cartwright. GOLDFINCHES: 1, 2, Wax. BULLFINCHES: 1, A. Sutcliffe. A.O.S. BRIT.: 1, 2, A. Sutcliffe.—Moore and Crowson, Secs.

CITY OF HULL C.B.S.

A capital nest feather show was held at headquarters, Oddfellows' Hall, Charlotte Street, on May 4th. Yorkshires were to the front, making a total of 18 in two classes, which, considering the almost Arctic weather conditions we have experienced, we must rank as "very good." One or two of the successful exhibitors were asked to give the secret of keeping them alive, but they seemed deaf to all appeals. OPEN YORKS. (10): 1, 2, 3, hc, Stones; vhc, c, Brumby. NOVICE DO. (8): 1, 2, 3, vhc, Burrill; hc, c, Parkes. OPEN NOR. (2): 1, 2, Stones. NOR. DO. (6): 1, 2, vhc, Riley; 3,c, McKay; hc, Loughorn. A.O.V. (2): 1, McKay; 2, Riley.

A discussion on "Common Ailments of Birds" was opened by Mr. Loughorn, who, in his remarks, stated that the difficult thing with birds was diagnosing the ailment. He suggested putting the bird that was ill into a clean cage, and then notice what the excretions were like. In cases of diarrhœa, he recommended five drops of chlorodine in the drinking water, or a little prepared chalk. Several other ailments were described, and a treatment suggested. We then went into the next room to see the "youngsters." It was agreed that our trip be to Drewton Dale on July 4th, instead of to Bently Woods, as on syllabus.—F. H. Stamford, Minute Secretary.

LEWISHAM AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

A good muster of members and friends attended the first table show of British and Foreign birds held on May 5th at headquarters, The Rochuck Hotel, Lewisham. Mr. Robson, who judged, congratulated the exhibitors on the excellent quality and splendid condition in which the birds were shown. The exhibits, numbering 37, were, with few exceptions, typical show specimens, some of the classes, though small, containing some particularly fine and choice ones. The winning Goldfinch was a grand bird of nice size and rich colour, having a good, bold, square-cut blaze of lovely colour. The 2nd was another excellent Goldie. Bullfinches were a fine level lot, the 1st being a fine specimen, with lovely colour cap and markings. The 2nd and 3rd were also two good birds. Linnets provided the largest class and the most keen competition, the 1st being a lovely specimen. All in the mealy were grand birds. The winning Redpoll was a grand exhibit, shown in fine condition. Greenfinches also provided some very typical specimens, all being of fine size and shape. The two winning Bramblefinches were excellent. In the A.O.S. seed-eating class, a well-marked Yellowhammer took premier honours, while the 2nd was a very fine Reed Bunting. The insectivorous classes contained a Blackbird (winner), and (in small) a good Tree Pipit, a well-known winner. In the Foreign the 1st was a good Indian Rose Linnet in good condition. At the conclusion of his work, the judge gave a criticism of the exhibits, and answered questions which were put to him.

GOLDFINCH: 1, Jordan; 2, Botting; 3, Lugg; vhc, Austin; hc, White. BULLFINCH: 1, Botting; 2, Austin; 3, Jordan. LINNET: 1, c, Lugg; 2, Botting; 3, Austin; vhc, Carter; hc, White. REDPOLL, ETC.: 1, Dowling; 2, Phillip; 3, Austin; vhc, hc, White. GREENFINCH: 1, Carter; 2, vhc, White; 3, Butler; hc, Phillips. CHAFFINCH, ETC.: 1, Carter; 2, Jordan. A.O.S. SEED-EATING: 1, Botting; 2, Carter; 3, White. LARGE INSECTIV.: 1, Butler. SMALL: 1, R. Carter. FOREIGN: 1, Lugg. SELL.: 1, Botting.—H. Thos. Lucas, Hon. Sec.

REVIEW OF SCHEDULE.

Harpenden.—June 8th, Rothamsted Park.—Judge, Mr. C. E. Silk. 10 open classes: Nor. 2, Yorks. 2, A.O.V. 1, Mules 1, Brit. 3, For. 1. Prizes, 10/-, 5/-, and 2/6. Fee, 2/-.—Entries close June 1st to J. B. Townend, Station-road, Harpenden.

CITY OF WAKEFIELD O.S.

A special meeting was held at headquarters on May 9th. There was a good number of members and friends (ladies included) to listen to a lecture given by Mr. Sam Dean on "The General Management of Canaries." The lecturer commenced with the cage and finished with the show bird. He gave some very profitable hints. An enjoyable evening was spent, and was brought to a close by a vote of thanks to the lecturer.—Parker and Atkinson, Secs.

SOWERBY BRIDGE AND DIS. C.B.S.

There was a moderate attendance of members and friends at the Bull's Head Hotel on May 9th, to hear Mr. R. Calvert's lecture on British birds. The lecturer dealt with his subject in a masterly manner. Dividing the birds into sections, he gave an account of their manners, etc., the kind of nests they build, and where they are to be found. The lecture was full of information, and was listened to with the greatest interest. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Calvert, who responded in a neat speech. Many questions were asked, and these were answered to everybody's satisfaction. Mr. Calvert promised another lecture. A new member was added to the society's membership roll, and this ended a very pleasant evening. Next month the society will hold its first feather show.—A. E. Mourby, Hon. Sec.

CLUB REPORTS.

GLOUCESTER & DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held on May 7th at the Ram Hotel, Mr. Close in the chair. A very interesting discussion was carried on between the members on the prospects of the present breeding season. Taking it in general, the season is a promising one. It was agreed that a young bird show be held on June 25th at 7 p.m. Messrs. Payne and Mansfield were appointed to judge same. Fanciers are invited.—J. Houghton, Hon. Sec

LEITH JUBILEE O.S.

Monthly meeting held on May 5th, Mr. Begg presiding over a fair turn-out of members. After the ordinary business of the evening had been dealt with, Mr. Petrie gave a very interesting lecture on "Hybrid Breeding," and was accorded a hearty vote of thanks. After a few inquiries of members as to how many young birds each had on the spars the President declared the meeting closed. We meet again on August 4th.—Jas. Sinclair, Sec.

WORCESTER AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

The monthly meeting was held at the Black Horse Hotel, Lowesmoor, on April 30th, when there was a good attendance. Mr. W. Morgan took the chair. It was unanimously decided to hold an open show this coming season, the date being fixed for November 19th, as not being likely to clash with any other cage bird show to be held in the Midlands. Seven classes have already been guaranteed by members. We have secured the services of that popular judge, Mr. J. H. Payne. Two new members were nominated and accepted. A hearty vote of thanks to our chairman brought a happy evening to a close.—A. E. Bishop, Hon. Sec.

ACCRINGTON & DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held on May 7th. We decided to hold our young bird show on July 11th. We had Mr. Jas. Lyons (Blackburn) down for a lecture on the Roller Canary, but as the meeting was rather late in getting to business, he had not much time left, so he gave us just an outline, touching on all the various periods from the pairing of the breeding stock to the training of the young. He also displayed and distributed amongst the meeting some grand samples of sweet German rape, German egg-bread and malted biscuit. A short discussion then followed on the different effects Canary and rape seed had on different birds. The meeting was brought to a close by a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Lyons for his instructive and enjoyable lecture.—Jas. W. Philpott, Sec.

POPLAR AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

The society held its second meeting on April 30th. Ten new members were enrolled, and many more, who were unable to attend, have promised to join at our next meeting, which will be held in our new headquarters (147, East India Dock-road, Poplar, E., the same building as the Poplar Labour League offices), May 15th (see Club Notice column). Mr. C. A. House, who had come to give us a lecture entitled "Our Society—Its Future," was accorded a hearty reception. The subject proved a very interesting and instructive one to both members and officers. He touched upon many points of interest to us as a new society, such as the management of the society, the relationship which should exist between members and officers, and visitors, and many other points too numerous to mention. It was evident that all appreciated, and much enjoyed listening to such an interesting lecture. Mr. House suitably responded, and this ended a very pleasant evening.—H. W. Cook, Hon. Secretary.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.

On May 7th, at headquarters, Mr. Robson gave his promised lecture, "The Use and Abuse of Colour." Over forty members and friends were present, and Mr. R. L. Crisp was elected to the chair for this meeting. Several new members were nominated. Mr. Robson's lecture proved to be of the very greatest interest, and a lengthy and interesting discussion followed. The Chairman called the attention of members to a section of the new staging which had been erected in the room for their inspection, inviting them to make any suggestions regarding same. As everyone was apparently satisfied, the making of same will be proceeded with. A very hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Robson for his lecture was carried unanimously. Mr. R. L. Crisp, in replying to a vote of thanks to the chair, said it had afforded him much pleasure to preside. He was delighted to see such a splendid meeting, and if any doubt existed in the minds of the Fancy that the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. had lost ground, that meeting ought to assure them that it was still very much alive. Eight new members have been elected, making the total elected since January well over forty. A local gentleman well known to the Fancy (but who wishes to remain anonymous) sent a cheque for £1 1s. to the funds.—W. Hodson, Hon. Sec.

BORDER COUNTIES N. AND C.C.

Change of Name.

Annual meeting was held in Lockhart's Rooms, 37, Clayton-street, Newcastle, on May 2nd. The balance-sheet was read and adopted; it showed a balance on the right side, which was very satisfactory. The following new and important resolutions were passed:—1st, "That the name of club be changed to the Northern Norwich Plainhead Club," thus dispensing with Cinnamon section altogether; 2nd, "That the club's patronage only be given to shows providing six or more classes for Norwich Plainheads"; 3rd, "That the five following shows be selected as the shows where the silver challenge bowl be competed for, viz., Sunderland, Berwick, Gateshead, Wallsend, and Carlisle, providing each has not less than six classes for Norwich Plainheads and the judge is a member of club"; 4th, "That the club present a medal to winner of 1st and 2nd most points at the above-mentioned five shows"; 5th, "That handsome specials also be given to winners of 1st, 2nd, and 3rd most points over all shows under club's patronage"; 6th, "That all officebearers be re-elected, and the name of A. Hodgson (Gateshead) be added to committee." Members' subscriptions are now due. Any new members residing in radius wishing to join can do so by enclosing fee, 2s. 6d. Radius the same—Northumberland, Cumberland, Durham, Westmoreland, Dumfries, Berwick, Peebles, Selkirk, and Roxburgh. Any show secretary in above radius desirous of patronage, and whose society has six classes for Norwich at its show, should communicate as early as possible with me.—Anthony Hay, Secretary, 30, Main-road, Tweedmouth, Berwick-on-Tweed.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

FROME AND DIS. C.B.S.

First monthly meeting held at headquarters on May 5th, when there was a large attendance. Mr. J. Tottle (chairman) presided. The first item was the fixing of the date of the first feather (members') show. It was carried that we hold it on July 4th, the classes to be considered at the next meeting, June 2nd. It was then proposed and carried that the rules governing membership should be drawn up by the committee.—W. Minty, Sec.

LEYTON AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

At our monthly meeting held on May 4th we had some 50 members and friends present to hear Mr. C. A. House give his promised lecture on "The Yorkshire Canary." Naturally enough, the seven-inch birds were spoken about, and also the troublesome "ticked question," but everything went with such a delightful swing that everybody was sorry when we had to close at 10.30 o'clock, which was half an hour over the ordinary time. It was one of the most enjoyable evenings we have had for some time, and a hearty vote of thanks to the popular lecturer, with everybody well satisfied, brought the meeting to a close.—B. F. Forse, Sec.

ARBROATH SCOTCH FANCY C.B.S.

The annual meeting was held on May 6th, but owing to the stir caused by the bye-election in the Burghs the attendance was not so large as it might have been. Mr. James Strachan, the President, occupied the chair.—The Secretary reported that the Society was in a sound financial condition, there being a surplus in the bank of £5 6s. 6d. The undernoted office-bearers were elected for the ensuing season, viz.: Hon. president, the Right Hon. the Earl of Strathmore; hon. vice-president, Mr. Conway Grant Fletcher; president, Mr. Charles Crockatt; vice-president, Mr. D. C. Lyall; treasurer, Miss M. Black; secretary, Mr. John S. Napier, 52, St. Vigean's Road. It was arranged to hold the annual show in the White Hart Hall on October 30th. The election of judges, committee, and stewards was left over to next meeting, which was fixed for Thursday, May 21st.—J. S. Napier, Sec.

LEEDS C.B.S.

The usual monthly meeting was held on May 2nd at Lockhart's Cafe, Briggate, Mr. King, the chairman, presiding. Mr. C. Fryer was elected a member of our society, this making 12 new members within three months; we still have room for more. After the ordinary business Mr. Wilkins gave us his paper on the Haunts and Habits of British Birds, which was instructive and interesting, and was closely followed. At the conclusion a varied discussion ensued, and several members asked about the different species of birds and seeds, and the best places to get them. These questions were answered to their satisfaction. A vote of thanks to Mr. Wilkins for his interesting paper was carried with applause. We propose, in connection with our next monthly meeting, June 6th, to hold a first nest feather show; all fanciers joining by that date are eligible to compete. We hope to have a good muster present.—A. Wilkins, Hon. Secretary.

LEITH O.S.

Monthly meeting held in the Liberal Club, Hope Street, on May 9th. The President (Mr. Jas. Lumsden) presided over a very fair attendance.—The Secretary intimated that the following gentlemen had consented to judge at the annual show on October 31st, viz.:—For Scotch Fancies, Mr. Jas. Carson (Easthouses); for Norwich, Mr. Alex. Cochrane (Edinburgh); and for Border Fancies and British Birds, Mr. J. W. Bruce (Coldstream). Two classes have been added to those already provided for the Norwich Plainheads and one to the Border Fancies. The Society has now 36 members on the roll, against 17 last year, which is very gratifying, a good proportion of the new members being young Fanciers, which also speaks well for the success of the Society and the interesting hobby of cage-bird keeping. As this is our last meeting till September, we hope members will have a record breeding season, so as to make our annual show a great success.—George Brown, Secretary.

CIVIL SERVICE F.A.

Annual general meeting held at Ye Old Bell Noble-street, E.C., April 28th, when Mr. W. H. Wells presided, in the absence of Mr. F. Biggs. Messrs. S. Hatt, Deverall, and F. A. W. Harding were duly elected. A hearty vote of thanks having been accorded to the retiring officers, the following gentlemen were elected for 1908-9:—Patrons, J. A. Simon, Esq., K.C., M.P.; Thos. Wiles, Esq., M.P.; president, A. H. Roosmalecocq, Esq.; vice-presidents, Messrs. Fred. Biggs, Geo. Bleach, J. R. S. Dixon, and J. F. Hills; chairman, Mr. J. C. Dower; vice-chairman, Mr. E. J. Voss; hon. treasurer, Mr. J. S. Barton; auditors, Messrs. E. E. Allen and W. Mess; committee, Messrs. H. G. Ager, A. W. Dance, R. H. Dobin, G. H. Hooks, D. Hutchens, J. Russell, Geo. Smalley, and W. H. Wells; hon. assist-sec., Mr. A. E. Wheeler; hon. sec., A. Watson, 116, Maurice-avenue, Noel Park, Wood Green, N. The 21st July was fixed for holding a young stock show of cage birds. It was agreed that the committee consider the desirability or otherwise of holding the annual show in conjunction with another society catering for poultry, pigeons, etc. The meeting was adjourned till 12th May with a hearty vote of thanks to the chair.—A. Watson, Hon. Sec.

SUNDERLAND CAGE BIRD ASSOCIATION.

Fortnightly meeting May 9th, with the usual good attendance, Mr. G. Clark occupied the chair, in the unavoidable absence of Mr. John Farrar.—The appointment of the other judge for our annual open show, November 20th and 21st, was left over, pending further communications from the various specialist clubs. It was moved that we hold our annual first feather show upon our usual date, viz., the first Saturday in July, but it was eventually decided that the date be left in the hands of the secretaries, who were instructed to avoid clashing with neighbouring shows as far as possible. It was carried that the following classes be provided:—Norwich, Cinnamons, Yorkshires, Lizards, and Borders, two classes each; and one class each for Crests, Crest-breds, Mules, Linnet, Redpoll, or Twite, British Finch, A.O.S., and British Bird, A.O.S., a total of sixteen classes in all, British birds both house and field moulted birds. Mr. Millar, of Southwick, is to judge if we obtain his services on the date selected. Mr. J. O'Cain became a member, and received the usual hearty welcome to our ranks. The secretaries will be pleased to give any information to other Fanciers who may be desirous of joining us, and they would like to point out that there is no boundary restriction; therefore, all Fanciers are welcome. At the conclusion of the business, the usual discussion took place, the subject being "One cock and one hen, or one cock and two hens." The very interesting discussion could not be otherwise than instructive to the novice members present. A discussion was then opened on when to commence colour-feeding, but as time was getting on we were compelled to adjourn.—Reid and Thomson, Secs.

CAMBRIDGE C.B.S.

Two informative lectures were delivered before the members on May 6th, at headquarters, by Messrs. W. Linsey and F. Doggett. There was a large audience. Mr. Linsey dealt chiefly with Canaries, reviewing the management of the birds from the nest to the show bench, and Mr. Doggett followed with many valuable hints for the successful keeping of British birds in captivity. Both gentlemen at the close of their remarks answered a number of questions put to them by members of the audience, and altogether a profitable and enjoyable evening was spent.—T. S. MOORE, Hon. Sec.

SCOTCH FANCY NATIONAL DERBY O.A.

Those to whom membership tickets were sent have been reminded by post-card that the closing date is May 31st. We should like to be able to make up the ticket account before that date. So far, the response is a record one, and there is every prospect of its being maintained. The executive have done their best to put the tickets before Fanciers, and those wishing for same can have a copy of the rules on application to the secretary. It will be a very great help to have a full account of the tickets by May 23rd. We recognise the value of the assistance so freely given by those who have taken an interest in the Association, and we tender our sincere thanks to them for all the help we have enjoyed in the building up of the National Derby Association.—THOS. SMITH, Secretary, 50, Minard Road, Glasgow.

ROCHDALE GOOD INTENT C.B.S.

Members and friends met in the club-room to hear a lecture by Mr. Raynes, secretary of the Norwich Plainhead Club, on "The Norwich Canary." At the outset Mr. Raynes dealt with the origin of the Canary up to the present time. He then went on to speak of the Norwich, the standard of which he considered in detail, discussing as he went along the number of points allotted to the various properties. Comments were freely passed at the number of points for head, which a few thought would lead to browiness. Colour also came in for a good share of comment. One point he made special mention of was the breeding and keeping of the stock birds, as these, in his opinion, were the birds that bred the show specimens. He is also a firm believer in having size in the cock birds, and type and quality of feather in the hens, and in having plenty of the green blood in his birds, as much less colour-food would be required if colour were bred for. In the discussion which followed one member asked which were the hardest faults to breed out, to which Mr. Raynes replied "bad wing carriage"; if you had a pair, one of which had crossed wings and the other perfect ones, the offspring would have to be very judiciously mated the following year, or the same fault would crop up again. Mr. Raynes was also asked about the introduction of the Cinnaman blood, and replied that he had had considerable experience in that direction, and anyone who introduced the Cinnamon into his stock was opening up a wide range of possibilities. This was a question very much discussed. Another was, "Did he believe in inbreeding?" to which he replied that he did not care to breed with anything nearer than cousins. After the usual vote of thanks, Mr. Raynes suitably replied, saying that if anyone had benefited from anything he had said he was more than satisfied, as he himself had learned a few wrinkles.—SAM M. CLAYTON, Hon. Sec.

WIMBLEDON AND DIS. C.B.S.

A Parting Presentation.

On May 4th the monthly meeting was held at 6, The Broadway, Mr. W. H. Stoakley presiding over a very good attendance. Three new members were elected, and Mr. J. G. Warley was appointed delegate of the society to the Cage Bird Union. The feature of the evening, however, was an essay competition, and three essays, contributed by members under noms de plume, were read by the chairman. On a vote being taken, the prize was awarded to Mr. H. Smith, the secretary of the society, who, it was discovered, was the writer of the chosen paper. The Chairman then rose, and said he was sorry to say that one who was amongst them that night would probably be present for the last time. Mr. Colman, who had been their secretary for a good time, and had always done his duty faithfully and well, had, as they knew, had to resign on account of giving up business in the town, and had now informed him that, in about three weeks' time he intended to leave England for New Zealand. They would all, he was sure, much regret to hear of this decision, and they felt that, when he was in a strange land, amongst strange people, they would like him to have something which would remind him of the society at Wimbledon to which he had belonged, and the members had asked him on their behalf to present to Mr. Colman a meerschaum pipe, as a small recognition of the regard and esteem they had for him, and they wished him every success in the new land to which he intended to emigrate. Mr. Colman, in returning thanks, said the presentation had come as a great surprise to him. He already had one thing to remind him of the society when he should be in a distant land, and that was the tea service which had been presented to him some little time ago by the society, but, perhaps the thing that would more often remind him of them would be the pipe they had so kindly presented to him that night. He should always think of the pleasant time he had spent with them. It was stated during the evening that Queen's Hall had been obtained for the annual show, November 17th and 18th, and that Mr. Colman had very kindly presented "The Canary Book" as a special prize, to be awarded at any show at the discretion of the committee.

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

STILL another society joins the ranks of the Yorkshire Union. The City of Wakefield O.S. has decided to throw in its lot with its Yorkshire brethren. The Union is now composed of 27 societies, having probably a total membership of over 1,200; truly a powerful body in birdie circles. The Wakefield Society had Mr. S. Dean (Great Horton) to lecture at their meeting on Saturday last. A good number of fanciers put in an appearance to hear it, after which several questions in relation to the Yorkshire Union were asked and answered.

THE annual general meeting of the Y.C.C. took place at headquarters on Saturday last. There was not a very large attendance, probably due to the exceptionally fine state of the weather, many fanciers preferring the country to the town under such ideal conditions.

TO-DAY (Saturday) the first meeting of the council of The Yorkshire Union of C.B.S. for season 1908-1909 takes place, and it is hoped a good attendance will result, as the business is important.

"STRAIGHT 'UN."

The Active Whitethroat.

The Whitethroat is nearly as acrobatic as the tiny Tit. It is no uncommon sight to see him hanging head downwards, or reaching so far from his perch after an insect, as to be in danger of tippling over.

Were they Fanciers?

The "Westminster Gazette" recently enlarged upon the fitness of two weddings which were celebrated in London, in which Mr. Bird led Miss Linnet to the altar and Mr. Wren was linked to Miss Nightingale. Although it is seldom that one comes across two of these "ornithological" weddings in one day, they are by no means uncommon. Not long ago a church near Dublin was the scene of an interesting marriage, in which a Mr. Crowe was united to a Miss Crowe by the Rev. Canon Peacock, the wedding march being played by Mr. Rook. Much more remarkable, however, was a match which set Edinburgh in a flutter some years since. The bride, according to the "Edinburgh Evening Despatch," was Miss Hen-rietta Peacock and the bridegroom was Mr. Robin Sparrow. The Rev. Mr. Daw performed the marriage ceremony; Mr. Philip Hawk officiated as best man, and Miss Larkins was principal bridesmaid, while the marriage lines were extracted by Mr. John Crow, session clerk. "It is worthy of further remark," adds a reporter, "that the sexton's name is Raven, one of the pew-opener's is a Gull, and the assistant sexton is a Hen-ry Lay-cock."

THE BREEDING OF THE NORWICH CANARY.

By T. H. DENT.

A Lecture Delivered before the Clitheroe and District C.B.S. on March 7th.

The first thing necessary in the breeding of Norwich Canaries is, I think, a suitable cage. Of course, the choice of this is a matter of taste with most fanciers; some prefer one size, some another. For my own part, I like a cage about 18 or 20 inches long, 16 or 18 inches high, and 8 or 10 inches from back to front; if a little larger so much the better.

Procuring the Right Birds.

Having got our cages, we have now to get our birds. Before giving you an idea of the kinds of birds I like for breeding purposes, let me offer a little advice on how to procure the right kind of birds to commence with. Don't on any account try to get your birds cheap, or from all over the globe, with pedigrees as long as a wet week.

Let me explain: I think this is the most important part of the whole business. Say you get a cock bird somewhere in Scotland and a hen in the South of England and another hen in Wales. We will assume that they have all three been winners in their different localities. It does not follow that you will breed winners from them. They may look all right; but if they do not "hit" with one another, you are doomed to disappointment. I know many fanciers who have suffered in that way.

My advice is, go to some well-known fancier have a good look round his stock, tell him exactly what you want and place yourself entirely in his hands. Let him pair up a few pairs for you, fixing the price, and then take the best you can afford. By doing this you will, I am sure, have greater success than you would by any other means.

How to Pair Your Birds.

I will now give you my idea of the way in which Norwich Canaries should be paired. I don't mind whether the cock bird is a buff or a yellow or whether the hens are buffs or yellows, and I am not very particular whether they are large or small, so long as I know how they were bred. If the hen is rather small I pair her to a large cock bird, and if large, with a small cock bird if I have one. But I prefer above all, both cock and hen to be of a fairly good size, and one or the other ticked or variegated, as I am sure that by the use of variegated blood you can keep the colour good. If I do pair two clear birds together, I make sure they have some green blood in them.

It is not necessary for stock birds to be show birds. I don't mind if they are related to winners, say brothers or sisters to winners; they are quite as good for breeding with as the biggest winners in my opinion.

The Time to Pair.

I don't care about forcing my birds by giving egg and other stimulating foods, but prefer to let them come on naturally and be ready when the weather gets nice and warm and the days fairly long—say the last week in March or the first in April. My reasons for this are, first, that you get more fertile eggs and more young hatched than by starting earlier when the weather is cold and the days are short; and secondly, that when we have long days the young get fed for a longer period each day, which gives them a far better chance of getting a good start.

I am sure most show birds are "made" in the nest. You will understand what I mean by this; it does not matter how good a pair of birds you are breeding from, if the young are badly fed at the start (in the nest) they rarely develop into show birds.

I generally run one cock bird with two hens or even with three if there is something I particularly want in a pair. I remove him when the hen has laid the third egg. I then replace the first two eggs, which I always remove previously, putting a dummy egg in their place. I cut all the birds' claws before pairing them up, and any that carry a lot of feather there I clip about the vent. If any have very sharp beaks, I clip them also.

A Word about the Nests.

I use the ordinary wood nest-pan, giving the birds moss and hair for building purposes. If any hens fail to build nests, I make one for them when I set them. I give very little egg-food to the hens whilst they are sitting; about twice a week is sufficient. When the young are hatched, I give egg-food fresh twice or three times a day; also green food (dandelion leaves in preference) with a liberal supply of crushed hemp and groats, which some hens are very fond of.

My method of preparing egg-food is as follows: To one hard-boiled egg, I put about twice its weight of home-made bread, or a little more if I have a lot of hens with young.

Attending to the Young.

I have a good look in every nest with young in it at least twice every day to see that all the inmates are alive and doing well. If all goes right with them, I expect them out of the nest when they are about three weeks old, when I remove them at once to a nursery cage, and hang them in front of the breeding cage. Some hens have a nasty habit of plucking the young for the purpose of building a nest; and it is surprising in how short a time a hen so disposed can strip three or four young ones. So I think prevention in this case is better than cure.

When I find the young are feeding themselves, I remove them to a flight cage and feed with egg-food and crushed hemp, gradually getting them on to hard seed previous to getting them on colour food.

If there is anything I have not made quite clear I shall be pleased to answer any questions, and I shall therefore conclude by thanking you all for the kind way you have listened to me.

Several of the members having brought pairs to the meeting, Mr. Dent pointed out the good and bad points in each pairs, and answered many questions. A hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer, proposed by the Chairman, Mr. Lambert, brought the proceedings to a close.

Thinning the Rooks.

Rook-shooting has now commenced, when the young birds of the year are somewhat thinned out to prevent the species becoming too numerous. For whatever one may think about the bird's usefulness, there can be no question that it is possible to have too many during seed-time and harvest. Letting one's thoughts wander back, one wonders how the Rook fared before the age of shot gun and rifle. Were they more numerous then, or had they enemies unknown to us? The Peregrine was no doubt much more frequently seen then than now, but there is just the question, if the Rook was his quarry that he may occasionally have taken one, but not have systematically pursued them. Man appears to be the chief enemy of the Rook.

By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to-date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price.

Cage Birds 1908 Annual - - - - post free, 7d.

The Standard Guide to the Cage Bird Hobby is a title bestowed upon the ANNUAL years ago. And the 1908 edition merits it more than any previous volume. Revised and brought up-to-date from cover to cover, with a lovely coloured plate and many full-page art illustrations, and crammed with valuable articles and unique and helpful features, it is the finest value for money ever offered lovers of birds. Canary, British, Hybrid and Foreign bird enthusiasts alike will find it a Complete Guide to the Fancy.

The Stock Book (Our Invaluable "Breeding Room Register.") - - - post free, 7d.

A well-known fancier has said of it:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." This book is one no breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred—keep account of their strong and weak points. It contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages, and many invaluable "Hints for Emergencies."

CAGE BIRDS CHARTS.

No. 7.—THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD CANARY, Its Exhibition Points & Failings.

By C. A. HOUSE.

THE Norwich Plainhead Canary is, without doubt, the most popular and most widely-bred of any of the breeds known to the British Canary Fancy. North, South, East and West is the orange-hued, chubby-bodied Norwich to be found, and the fact that some half-dozen specialist clubs in different parts of the country have been formed to look after and advance its interests is proof conclusive that the Norwich Plainhead Canary holds a position which is absolutely unassailable in the affections of thousands upon thousands of fanciers. As showing how the breed is growing in popular esteem, one has only to mention the fact of the recent establishment of a Norwich specialist club in Bradford, that hot-bed of our chief bird of position—the Yorkshire.

"First and special" is the award Mr. Norman confers upon the beautiful representative of the breed which occupies the centre of the plate accompanying these notes, and how many thousands of breeders there are as they gaze upon its gracefully-modelled outlines will heave a sigh and say, How I wish I could breed one like that! How neat is its beak, how graceful its pose, how short its neck, how plump its chest, how broad its back, how short and compact its wings, how nicely piped and well-balanced its tail, and how clean and compact it is in feather! It is indeed a well-finished and much to be desired specimen of the breed.

In the bunch of heads in the left hand corner of the plate, CAGE BIRDS' most excellent artist has shown us some of those very objectionable and yet so persisent failings which make their appearance amongst the members of even our best breeding studs.

"Flat on head." How many an otherwise good bird is spoilt by this failing! "Flat on head" and 'Browy" are two failings which often go together and indicate the presence remote or near of "Crest-bred" blood, a legacy of the days when there was such a rage for size. Both these failings are most objectionable, and are difficult to eradicate when once they become fixed in a strain; therefore, breeders should "out" any bird which has this defect. Round and full in the head should be a good exhibition Norwich.

"Pinched in front." This is another very common fault, and is often the result of breeding with birds that are of very high quality, and which are apt sometimes whilst producing fineness of feather to throw progeny which run fine and narrow in head. It is an objectionable feature, but yet is not so great a drawback to an exhibition bird as either of the faults first mentioned.

"Badly-marked head." This is more of a blemish than an actual fault, an eye-sore more than a deficiency, and is not a very serious handicap to a bird. In an otherwise first-class bird such marks, although unsightly, could not prevent the bird winning under a judge who considered type and quality as the chief points to be sought and obtained.

"Thin neck." This often results from breeders fining their stock down too much by double-yellowing to increase the depth of colour and quality of feather. It is a bad fault, and yet one not very difficult to correct and overcome.

"High on legs, drooping tail." Two bad faults. The first gives the bird a stilted, unnatural sort of pose, and prevents it getting across the perch like a good Norwich should, whilst the second completely spoils the appearance of a bird no matter how good it may be in other points. A badly-carried tail is a great eyesore.

"Big beak, thin in body, long wings and tail." A trio of great and most objectionable failings, and a bird possessing all three is absolutely useless to a fancier who is seeking to breed exhibition Norwich. The faults taken singly are bad, and ones which should be avoided at all costs. One and all they betoken an admixture of Lancashire blood somewhere or other in the past history of the strain. Individually or collectively, each of these failings should be avoided as you would avoid poison.

"Crosses wings, fish tailed." Failings these are, like the mis-marked head, more blemishes than faults, and a little careful attention in breeding, by the selection of short, cobby, natty stock hens will soon eradicate them. The upright pose of this bird, too, is altogether wrong, and is a serious fault caused as it is by the wrong placing of its legs.

"Thick at thighs." "A very useful bird but too thick behind," is an expression one often hears used at a show. The expression is rather vague, because it conveys a double meaning. For instance, a bird may be thick behind because it is badly shaped, and wrong in structural formation; the same fault may arise from the displacement of some of the internal organs owing to the bird being over-loaded with fat; or it may be "thick at thighs" because it lacks quality and the thickness is caused by an excess of feather. In the latter case it is a great and really serious fault.

Scale of Exhibition Points.

Reprinted from "Cage Birds Annual."

Colour—Deep, bright, rich, pure and level throughout.
Shape—Head round, full and neat: neck short and thick: body short and chubby, with wide back, well filled in, and deep, broad, full chest.
Feather—Soft and silky, with brilliancy and compactness.
Wings and Tail—Short, compact and good carriage.
Size—Well proportioned.
Beak—Short and stout (clear).
Legs—Well set back (also clear).
Feet—Perfect.
Condition—Health, cleanliness and sound feather. Streaked beak and marked legs not to be a disqualification, but count against the bird to its extent.
Length—Not to exceed 6½ inches.

QUERIES.

What Dove? (J.G.).—Your birds are Talpacoti Doves. Their value is about 10s. to 15s. a pair—not exactly common, yet certainly not rare. They will breed out-of-doors, and Canary and millet seed, with greenfood (lettuce, grass in flower, etc.), will amply meet their simple needs.

The Plains Parrot (W.W.).—I cannot give you a definite reply as to this, but if you watch the adverts. in CAGE BIRDS you should soon get what you want, as this and kindred species are almost always with us. A consignment should certainly be to hand soon, or an advert. in our columns should soon procure you a pair.

What Bird? (Stranger).—I am in doubt as to what this bird is; it may be an English Redstart; if so, you must ask our British Bird Expert (Mr. G. E. Weston) how to treat it. If not, I opine it is some species of Bulbul which I'm at a loss to name at present. Some good soft food mixture and plenty of ripe fruit will keep it fit and in condition; such seeds as it picks up will do it no harm.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Cinnamon Hen (Cheekie). — Inflammation of liver and spleen, terminating with apoplexy.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

More Trouble in Ireland (Another Straight 'Un).—We certainly cannot permit you (or anyone else, in fact), under a nom de plume, to make an allegation of disqualification against another fancier, and without even substantiating the allegations with particulars as to when and where the said disqualifications occurred. If you will forward us full particulars (shows, dates, judges, etc.) in support of your statements, then we will consider the publication of your letter.

A Society (C. S. Quick).—There is the Ilford Fanciers' Association, the secretary of which is Mr. E. Collins, 88, Henley-road, Ilford, Essex. Your other questions our Canary specialist is attending to.

Wallace's Canary Book (W.G.B.).—We can send you the cloth-bound part of this book dealing with details of management (including diseases), post free for 2s. 9d. The complete work is 5s. 6d., post free. It would be the latest edition, of course.

Paper (W. Stafford).—We are much obliged to you for sending us the paper for publication, and shall hope to print same in the near future.

Expelling a Member (A Member). — This seems to be purely a matter concerning the society and one of which an explanation should be obtainable at the meetings. If you are dissatisfied with the way in which the society is managed, cannot you get other members to support you in trying to alter things? If not, it seems to us your only course is to resign.

A C.B.U. Matter (W.O.).—Your information is quite correct; as yours is an open show, you must either take out a C.B.U. licence, or affiliate the society to the C.B.U., before you can obtain the support of the C.B.U. members

Through a Bird-room Window.

By the Rev. C. D. FARRAR.

The first youngster left the nest on Monday, July 7th, and was a fine, lusty chap. In colour he—for I think him a he—rather resembles the hen, but where I suppose he will some day have a yellow crown and chin, he now possesses a dove-coloured one, something like a Quaker Parrakeet; he has pink between the thighs and pinky coloured edging on the under side of his tail; the other part of his person is green, eyes black, feet blackish. When he first came out, I expect he jumped to the ground, as he certainly could not fly much, and seemed generally rather surprised with himself and the world at large. To-day (Saturday) he has learnt to fly fairly well, can take a seat beside his parent, and can even answer the cock bird in a voice very similar to his own.

While I think of it, my Parrakeets never came out on the same day, like Mr. Gedney's did, and they never range themselves in a line on the perch to be admired. Indeed, they had little or no idea of perching for some days.

No. 2 came out on Thursday, and resembled No. 1, but was a little finer in build, making me think that she was a hen. No. 3 came out the following week, and I have not yet made up my mind whether it is a cock or a hen.

I do not think there can be a prettier sight than this family of Barrabands, and the old birds seem as proud of their efforts as a young couple of their first baby. With regard to feeding, I always give the very plainest and simplest diet. I believe Parrakeets are like a boy that was at school with me at Lancing. He used to say (and didn't we chaff him unmercifully): "This plain diet and early rising does me a world of good." I believe Barrabands think the same.

Food for Babies.

My Barrabands have nothing but hemp and Canary seed. They like hemp themselves, but I think they have reared the babies entirely on Canary. They have also an unlimited supply of groundsel and flowering grass. The youngsters when they left the nest were about a third of the size of their parents. To-day (July 26th) they have grown famously, and the oldest is nearly as big as the hen.

Barrabands very seldom come into the market; so when they do, lose no time in securing them. It is years since I saw a hen advertised, though a year or two ago about three cocks came over. I don't know why it is, but Australian Parrakeets seem to come over in cycles. For years they will be rare, and then for a season or two they will be comparatively common. It was so with Redrumps for a time. They could not be bought for love or money; now they are fairly common again.

I hope it will interest my readers to peruse this article as much as it did me to write it; but unless they are of strong and vigorous constitution, I would advise them not to go in for the strain and anxiety of rearing a nest of Barrabands. My hair is appreciably whiter since they began nesting.

A Case for Tears.

The end of my story is very sad. A friend came over from York to see the birds, and was so taken with the young Parrakeets that he must buy them. He put them into a nice little indoor aviary in one of his attics; but thoughtlessly had the room painted while they were there. The window was kept shut, and the smell of the paint was too powerful, and all the poor young Barrabands died. Their poor bodies were stuffed by a local man, but he made the most appalling job of it, for these stuffed Barrabands bore no sort of likeness to the beautiful birds that only a few weeks before had cost me so much labour and joy. Sic transit gloria mundi.

Chapter XII.—THE PEKIN ROBIN.

Pekin Robins are among the loveliest birds imported into this country. They usually arrive about February or March, and can often be purchased for as low a price as 5s. a pair. I wont say they always are pairs; more generally than not they are two hens, as hens come over in vast preponderance. I have bought the Pekins as low as 12s. a dozen, but it was a dear bargain, as they had the disease I call "pink eye," for want of a better name, and they died off like flies in spite of all my care.

Some Difficulties.

Many who buy Pekin Robins have no idea how to feed them. They will, it is true, eat seed, but they are more than half insectivorous like our Hedge Accentors, to whom they show a great family likeness in their habits and mode of life.

Another difficulty that Pekins present, is that they are very soft-feathered birds, and after being a few days in a dealer's shop box cage, they present a really deplorable appearance—wings frayed out and tails like a stumpy paint brush. This comes of their habit of clinging to the bars of the cage. Personally, I do not think Pekins suitable to cage life at all, unless they are very tame.

Perfectly Hardy and Easy to Keep.

I have always found them perfectly hardy. Mine are kept in a big, outdoor aviary, and care nothing for the severest cold. The only sort of weather they object to is fog; but all birds do that, and so do some people! Pekins are the most gentle and inoffensive birds I know, and may be kept with perfect confidence in any company.

They are tremendous fellows to bathe, and in hot weather are in and out of the water all day; hence they are not fit for a room where you value your wall-paper.

I saw somewhere that it is not safe to put them in an aviary, as they steal eggs. I don't believe it one bit. I have had them in an aviary with nests all round them, and they never touched an egg or a young one. I have two pairs at present in one aviary. When eggs are taken, it is mice, not Pekins that are the culprits.

Millets, Mealworms and Maggots.

I find the best staple food for Pekins is a good brand of yolk of egg; they are very fond of white millet, which they swallow whole. They must have some insect food; they like mealworms better than anything else, and will eat small black "clocks"; big ones they can't swallow.

Of course, in a large aviary in the garden they catch a great many live things for themselves. They are fond of maggots and a decaying old hen is to them—if not to their owner—a joy for ever, or at any rate, so long as she holds together.

The cock birds sing rather prettily, but nothing to boast about; the hens do not sing, as often stated—they simply repeat a few bars as a call note. Talk about "scolding," but two Pekins can scold if you go near their nest, an angry Thrush is not in it.

The Sex Problem.

In breeding, of course, the great thing is to get a pair. The only sure way to distinguish the cock from the hen is by the top of his head, which is always a beautifully mossy green colour and his eye-markings which are primrose colour. The hen has a pale greyish crown and mouse-coloured eye patches.

Both birds have red on their wings and the white edging to the tail, which is stated by Dr. Greene to be characteristic of the cocks alone. Far more hens are imported than cocks.

Breeding Experiments.

It is not wise to look for any great breeding results from Pekins, under the most favourable conditions. In a large garden-aviary the best results will be attained. I utterly refuse to believe that Pekins' would nest in a cage. I saw an account of alleged nesting in a back number of the U.K.F.C.B.S. I say "alleged" for this reason, that the description of the young was utterly fallacious.

TWITTERINGS.

We note that the new Frome and District C.B.S. has decided to hold a members' nest-feathers show, on July 4th.

The annual show of the Cambridge C.B.S. on October 22nd and 23rd, will be held under C.B.U. rules, we are informed.

Carnarvon show report in the Mule or Hybrid class, writes Mr. J. Williams (Ruthin) should have read: 4th, vhc, and hc, J. Williams.

Kindly inform your readers that the Rochdale O.S. has removed back to its old club-rooms in York Place, Yorkshire Street, writes Mr. J. Butterworth, hon. sec.

The date of the Admiral Duncan O.S. (Nottingham) first feather show is fixed for July 4, writes Mr. Wm. Healey, the sec., and Mr. Robt. Rhodes will judge same.

Owing to the hon. sec. leaving the district, writes Mr. Enoch Tams, all letters intended for the Longton and District C.B.S. must be addressed to me at Church-street, Longton.

The judges elected for our show on Nov. 4 and 5, writes Mr. J. H. Ireland, sec. of the Morecambe C.B.S., are as follows:—Messrs. H. W. Battye, W. J. Ferguson, and C. Houlton.

We have altered the date of our first Feather Show from July 4th to July 18th, writes Mr. R. S. Black, secretary of the Darlington C. and B.B.F.A. Members will please note.

We note that the amalgamation of the City of Dundee and District N.M. and B.B.A. and the Dundee and Lochie C.B.S. is shortly to come under the consideration of the two societies.

Mr. F. J. Martin writes that through continued ill-health he has resigned his position of district secretary (12) to the C.B.U. Mr. Martin also asks us to mention that his address is now 34, Ingelow Road, Battersea.

All tickets and monies for the prize drawing in connection with the James Smith benefit, writes Mr. Wm. Woollett, secretary of the Choppington and Dis. C.B.S., must be in by May 23rd, the date of our next meeting.

We have secured the services of Mr. J. Boxson to judge the Canaries and Mr. R. J. Howe the British and Foreign birds and Mules at our show to be held on December 5th, writes Mr. S. A. Dicken, sec. of the Burton-on-Trent C.B.S.

At a committee meeting held on May 9th, writes Mr. Robert McDowdall, hon. secretary of the Newmilns O.A., it was decided that we hold our annual show on September 26th. We are looking forward to a successful exhibition.

Mr. W. Summers, secretary of the Wandsworth and Dis. F.S., writes that the meeting called for May 14th has had to be postponed to May 21st, owing to the society not being able to have the use of the Red Lion Rooms on that date.

The third annual show of the Kent County C.B.A. has been fixed for December 2nd and 3rd at Dover, writes Mr. George Sanderson, the secretary, and will be confined to the members of the association. The judge and hall will be announced later.

It is with great regret, writes that well-known lover of the Yorkshire Canary, Mr. R. Philpot, of Guildford, that I am this week compelled to offer the whole of my stock, cages, etc., for disposal through your columns, family reasons alone being the cause.

At the Great Horton O.S. meeting on May 9th it was decided not to hold an open first feather show this season, writes Mr. J. Holroyd, the sec. Several specials will be given at our members' show on June 13th. Mr. Wm. Blakey is the judge, and we hope to have a record entry.

Kindly thank Messrs. Waterman and A. J. Marley for their courtesy in replying to my query with regard to the removal of my birds, writes Mrs. Marley (Loughborough), and I also apologise to Mr. A. J. Marley for the bother he has been put to because I did not mention my district.

We have been fortunate, writes Mr. Chas. Irvine, sec. of the Ayr and Dis. C.B.S., in securing the services of Messrs. Allan Roberts (Thornliebank), as Canary judge, and Gavin Alston (Darvel) as Hybrid and British and Foreign bird judge at our first open show to be held on Nov. 7th.

I am sorry to have to ask you to alter the Warrington and Dis. Cage Bird Society's show date again, writes Mr. Jas. Emmett, the sec., because the Cage Bird Union won't let us hold our show on Nov. 27 and 28 as we clash with Sale. So we have to go back to Nov. 13 and 14 as first advertised.

The Tong and Dis. C.B.S. will hold a members' first feather show at their headquarters, Holme Lane Hotel, on June 20, writes Mr. J. Smith, the sec. Mr. Hodgson (Bradford) will officiate as judge. Trams from Bradford pass the door, and it is but 4 minutes' walk from Dudley Hill, G.N.R. station.

Mr. J. Butterworth informs us that the Rochdale Show will be held on Oct. 23rd and 24th, and will be remarkable for the fact that two of Rochdale's veterans will act as specialists on the Lancashires and Lizards—Messrs. R. Barrass and Levi Butterworth. This should ensure a record entry in these sections. The Yorkshires, Norwich, etc., will be taken by Mr. C. A. House.

Kindly notify that I have taken over the secretaryship of the City of Birmingham Cage Birds Society, writes Mr. J. H. de Maillet, 121, Somerville Road, Small Heath, Mr. Wilkins having resigned the position owing to pressure of business. We have fixed July 15th for members' next feather show, and Dec. 2nd and 3rd for the annual open show, and Mr. Roe (Derby) will judge both.

Cage Birds Charts:

How to Judge Exhibition Birds.

NO. 7: THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD CANARY.

In this issue No. 7 of the series of CAGE BIRDS CHARTS appears. It deals with the Norwich Canary, and the lover of this bird, and especially the beginner, has only to keep the chart in his birdroom to have always before him the ideal to look for and breed to, while the faults to be avoided can never escape his eye.

In due course many other favourite exhibition birds will be made the subject of one of CAGE BIRDS CHARTS.

The same great pains will be taken to ensure the completeness of every chart, and its accompanying letterpress, and the deft fingers of our artist will portray the excellencies and deficiencies of the birds with the same precision and clearness. The value of CAGE BIRDS latest feature to the novices and amateurs in our hobby will be obvious to all, and we ask our many kind friends to bring CAGE BIRDS CHARTS to the notice of everyone interested in Bird-keeping and breeding.

Impress upon them that they must on no account miss any one of the series to be issued in the near future, or they will miss a TRULY HELPFUL AND EDUCATIONAL feature never previously put before bird-keepers.

CAGE BIRDS CHARTS may be had beautifully printed on stiff art card, with eyelet holes, for hanging in the bird-room, price 3d. each, or any three for 7d., or any six for 1s., post free. The explanatory notes and scales of exhibition points are printed round the margin. No. 1, the Goldfinch, No. 2, the Yorkshire Canary, No. 3 The Bullfinch, No. 4, The Border Fancy, No. 5, The Hawfinch, and No. 6, The Lizard Canary, are now on sale, and No. 7 will be on sale early next week.
SEND YOUR ORDER AT ONCE.

Please state in your next issue, writes Mr. David Black, the hon. sec., that membership tickets for Glasgow Derby. Scotch F.A. can be had from me, at 2, Alexandria-terrace, Govan. I shall be pleased to supply any fancier within a five-mile radius of Glasgow Cross with a ticket on application.

Permission has been granted by the Earl of Eglinton for the members of the Glasgow and Western Counties N. C., M., B., and F.B.C. to visit Eglinton Castle and grounds, Kilwinning, on Saturday, 23rd May, writes Mr. J. H. Adam, the Sec. The train leaves St. Enoch's station at 3.5 p.m. A large turnout is requested.

We have just heard from the new manager of the "Napier," our present headquarters, write Messrs. Plumbridge and Carr, hon. secretaries National British Bird and Mule Club, that we cannot hold the lecture arranged for Monday next, and we have had notice to quit after our meeting on that day.

OBITUARY.

MR. W. RICHARDSON (Wallsend.)

It is with the deepest regret, writes Mr. James Johnston, hon. secretary Wallsend and Mid-Tyne C.B.A., that I have to record the demise of Mr. Wm. Richardson, of Wallsend-on-Tyne, after a long and painful illness. He was one of the organisers of our society, and took a great interest in all that concerned it; and at no time was he so busy as during our annual shows. He will be sadly missed by the Wallsend fanciers, for he was ever ready with a kindly word, and always willing to part with his experience, for the benefit of those "in the dark." I feel sure I am voicing the sentiments of all the fanciers of the North in extending to Mrs. Richardson and her son our sincere sympathy in their great loss. Mrs. Richardson is getting on in years and is bound to feel the parting very much, but we hope the giver of all things will help her to bear her burden with fortitude, and that life's path may be made as smooth for her as possible in her declining years.

A fine sample of tasteless pepper reaches us from Mr. J. Walsh, of Regent Street, Blackburn. It is very finely ground, so that it will incorporate readily with the soft-foods, and is of a particularly bright, rich colour, without any added oil or other matters. Quite pleasant to the taste, fanciers should find this season's pepper of the well-known Blackburn specialist just the thing to bring them success in the shape of the necessary deep, hot-coloured plumage in their birds.

We have elected Messrs. Wellings and J. Walsh as judges at our open show, to be held on Nov. 6 and 7, writes Mr. J. W. Marsden, sec. of the Blackburn and Dis. C.B.S. We have also fixed on Sunday, May 31, as the date for our annual ramble from Lower to Higher Hodden. We first "train" it to Whalley. We expect to have a good company of birdie men with us; all local fanciers are invited. We are expecting to have with us Mr. Altham, the eminent ornithologist of Bashall Hall, who has made a life-long study of British birds and their habits.

The first country ramble of the Dulwich Ornithological Society takes place on Sunday, May 17, when Mr. F. J. Lovesy will "captain" the party, write Messrs. Rogers and Mazzoni, the hon. secs. The main body assemble at Headquarters (The Herne, Forest Hill Road, S.E.) at 9.30 a.m., and depart from Honor Oak Park Station at 10 a.m. for Stoats Nest. Those unable to start from Honor Oak can proceed by train leaving Victoria at 9.30 a.m., or Clapham Junction at 9.40 a.m. The ramble is through the Coulsdon and Chipstead district, one of the most picturesque parts of Surrey, and where bird life is abundant. Tickets, including luncheon and tea (at "The Fox," Coulsdon Common), and return railway fare from Honor Oak Park, are 4s., and 3s. for those joining at Stoats Nest.

That well-known British bird enthusiast, Mr. W. Lowne, of Yarmouth, is to lecture before the L. and P.O.S. on Thursday next, May 21st, at the "Raglan," Aldersgate Street, E.C. Friends are cordially invited to what promises to be an exceptionally interesting evening. A commencement will be made at 8 p.m. prompt.

Owing to our late secretary, Mr. W. Nicholls, leaving the town, writes Mr. W. Lang, jun., 60, Alexandra Road, Lowestoft, I have been appointed secretary of the Lowestoft and Dis. C.B.S. We are holding our First Feather Show on June 11th, and our Annual (members') Show on October 29th. Our membership is open to a five-mile radius. New members are heartily welcomed to our monthly meetings, held first Monday in each month, at the "Fox and Hounds," London Road.

At the Crystal Palace Show, birds fed on Ramsden's Pure Peppers were awarded over 200 prizes and honours, including best in show (see show catalogue). The winners of the CAGE BIRDS contest were all colour fed on Ramsden's Peppers. What a record! This year Ramsden's "Tasteless" is better than ever, for it is ground finer; all the coarse, dry husk is sieved out, leaving a richly coloured fine pepper easily digested by the birds. This season, postage or carriage will be paid on all retail orders.—(Advt.)

The Macclesfield and Dis. C.B.S. is going strongly, writes Mr. H. Wallworth, the assistant secretary, and we are enlisting new members at our monthly meetings. The paper read on April 30th, on the Lancashire Canary, by Mr. W. Lee (chairman), was received with loud applause, and reflected great credit on its writer. At our meeting on May 28th we are to have a washing competition for novices, and it was whispered that Mr. Chas. Oliver (treasurer) is going to give us his ideas on the Norwich Plainhead, so we are anticipating another good time.

The report and year-book for 1907-8 of the National British Bird and Mule Club reach us from the hon. secs., Messrs. Plumbridge and Carr (2, Broad-street Station, London, E.C.), and make good reading for well-wishers of the society and lovers of the birds in whose interests it was founded. The financial position is now thoroughly sound, the roll of members an ever-increasing one, and the policy of the club progressive, so that the future looks very bright—a state of things upon which the joint secretaries and the other officials deserve congratulation. Keepers and lovers of British birds should send in their names to Messrs. Plumbridge and Carr, and help the club on in its work by becoming members. The subscription is only 5s. per annum.

The Yorkshire Union.

Delegates' meeting on Saturday, May 16th, at headquarters, Market Tavern, Godwin Street, Bradford, at 7 p.m. Business urgent and important.—J. Dean, sec.

A Correction.

In the article appearing last week concerning the Lizard Canary Chart, the printer made us say (third paragraph, line 11) that: "The legs and breast are also dark." "Breast," of course, should have been "beak."

At the Scottish National.

The judges elected for our next annual show, to be held December 31st, 1908, and January 1st, 1909, writes Mr. James Winter, secretary of the Scottish National C.B.S., are as follows: For Norwich Plainheads, Messrs. J. Trengove (Rishton) and J. McLay (Kirkintilloch); for Crests and Crestbreds, Mr. John Young (Rutherglen); for Scotch Fancies and Belgians, Messrs. R. Wright (Greenock), Jas. Watson (Glasgow), W. Rodger (Slateford), and J. Pringle (Selkirk); for Border Fancies, Messrs. Thos. Arnot (Hawick), J. S. Wilson (Workington), and A. Gilchrist (Coldstream); for Yorkshires, Greens, Cinnamons and Lizards, Mr. A. Hirst (Accrington); for Mules and British birds, Messrs. A. Cochrane (Edinburgh), F. A. Watt (Banff), and H. J. Fulljames (London), who also takes Foreign birds.

READERS WANTED AS REFEREES.

An Interesting Point Arises out of Our Recent Essay Competition.

AS we mentioned in our issue of May 2nd, when announcing the winners in the Essay Competition, the chief prize, that of an original Painting of birds, value Four Guineas, was not awarded. This was owing to a difference of opinion among the judges as to which was the best essay out of the winning efforts in the four sections of the Competition. As we also then stated, instead of calling in someone to give a casting vote, we considered the best way out of this difficulty was to devise a means whereby

Readers of "Cage Birds" shall be Referees.

Here is our plan: In our two last issues have appeared instalments of the winning articles in each of the four sections. In our issue of this week we print the concluding instalments of the winning Canary and Hybrid articles. We shall endeavour to complete the publication of the two remaining articles in the next issue, and in that issue a coupon will appear, which we ask all readers to fill up and return to us through the post. On this coupon readers may vote for the essay which they consider worthy of the Four Guinea painting as the best out of the winning quartette.

We anticipate, so keen has been the competition, that a very interesting difference of opinion as to which is the best article will be found to exist when the votes come to be cast up. Readers should get their friends, whether bird-lovers or not, to peruse the essays and give their opinion, as we feel that the endeavour to forecast the result cannot prove other than an agreeable pastime. So, readers, make sure you vote yourselves, and persuade your friends to join in also.

Who will be the Winner?

— For 1908 —

The Standard Guide to the Fancy,

IS

The Hit of the Season.

A charming new cover, many beautiful illustrations of winning birds printed on art paper, a lovely coloured plate for frontispiece, a complete revision of all the popular features, and the addition of strikingly useful new features, mark this 1908 issue.

The articles, too, have never been excelled, and both Canary, Hybrid, British and Foreign bird keepers have been specially catered for. The needs of the beginner have likewise been given the fullest consideration.

ILLUSTRATED IDEAS

Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some ideas useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird-room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

consists of a cork, with two pieces of quill pushed through it as depicted in the sketch. You then have your sprayer ready for use. You must blow through the horizontal tube in order to work it.—W. APPS.

No. 206.

A USEFUL LAMP FOR SOLDERING CAGE FRONTS.

Sent by H. Palfrey, 41, Scarsdale Road, Dronfield, Sheffield.

I enclose a sketch of a very useful little lamp which I use for soldering cage fronts. It is really a sewing-machine oil can. I half fill it with carbide, the same that cyclists use. I then put a tablespoonful and a half of water in it, screw the top on and then light it. It gives a very powerful light and there is no smoke in the flame to get on your work. The light lasts 15 minutes. I can solder a small cage-front in that time. I get a strip of solder, dip it in some powdered rosin and hold the front over the flame. I then touch the wire I want to solder with the solder-stick. It sticks immediately; in fact, is far better than the old-fashioned way—using a soldering iron. Of course, I have all my wires cut ready for use. When the light dies out you can refill it, and it will "go" for another fifteen minutes.—H. PALFREY.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention.

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds." 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:—

NOTE.—Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc. of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his question for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Not Well-balanced.

"Month-old Reader."—Your hen was evidently in a very forward condition and the cock backward, hence the reason for his submitting to be hen-pecked when mated. You ought to have fed him up a little in the first instance before he was mated; when the hen showed herself so keen on nesting you made a serious mistake in separating them again. Had you left them together the hen would quickly have ceased brow-beating the cock, and after beginning the nest, her calls would have brought the cock more forward, so that at least the second half of the clutch of eggs would probably have been fertilised. You do not say how long the cock had been removed before the hen laid, so I cannot pass any opinion respecting the fertility or otherwise of the eggs, though I personally should not expect anything from them. Let hen sit seven or eight days; then hold the eggs up in front of a strong light and look through them. If they appear quite clear and transparent throw them away and remove nest. Meantime you should be feeding up the cock, giving him a pinch of hemp every second day, and on alternate days a half-teaspoonful of egg food sprinkled over with gold of pleasure seed; and each day two leaves of dandelion. By the time you can test the eggs he should be in a much better condition for mating.

Young Dying.

"Anxious."—The fact that no less than three pairs of your birds have nested, laid eggs, and then refused to sit, points to there being something wrong with your general management. You would be well advised to invest in one of CAGE BIRDS' practical handbooks, and digest the contents, and see if you can discover where you go wrong. I can only advise you on general principles in the absence of detailed knowledge as to how you treat the birds. When the hens commence to sit feed on a mixture of three parts Canary to one part rape; give a tiny scrap of green food every third day, and once a week half a teaspoonful of egg food, or crumb of sponge cake. Do not give egg food oftener, nor any other extras in the way of food. After the first week hang on a bath for an hour every second day. When the young are due to hatch, give half a teaspoonful of egg food, and daily afterwards in very small quantities, so that the old birds clear up what is given each time; give a fresh supply two or three times daily. After third day give a small scrap of green food fresh twice a day—lettuce, chickweed, or young tops of groundsel—and also a bath daily. If the hen seems to get fagged, add for two or three successive nights as much Epsom salts to the drinking water as will cover a three-penny-piece, and change it for pure water again at mid-day on the morrow. With this as a general guide to management you should have no difficulty in rearing the young.

Sitting but Has Not Laid.

"Novice."—Should you happen to have a brood which are in urgent need of foster parents, and have not other foster parents, I would advise you to try giving them to this hen, and if she begin to feed them let her rear them as well. She might then go on nesting on her own account quite successfully. But if this plan is not feasible you should separate the pair, take away the nesting material, and feed the hen up for a fortnight or so. Give half a teaspoonful of egg-food daily, and mix with it one day a small pinch of inga, and the next a pinch of gold of pleasure seed. Give two leaves of dandelion daily, and in all other points continue to feed as you are now doing. In the drinking water give, for one day, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and for the rest of the fortnight twelve drops of chemical food every second day, and on the alternate days during the first week twenty drops of whiskey and a piece of extract of dandelion about the size of small grain of Indian corn (maize); well mix together. During second week discontinue the latter, and give instead three drops of tincture of steel. After this treatment mate her again to a vigorous cock as soon as she is ready.

A Mixture.

"Three-Weeks' Reader."—1. The bird you bought for a cock is probably a hen, which is the cause of its neither breeding nor singing. Another cause for its poor condition is that it is probably troubled with red-mite. Carefully examine cage to ascertain this, and eradicate the pests if any are found. Add a little quassia to the bath every three or four days. Feed as frequently advised in this column, and give twelve drops of chemical food in the water every second day for a week, and on the alternate days five drops of tincture of steel. If it is not then coming in song, I think you may safely take it for a hen. I am not sure what you mean by being "sore hacked on right leg." If it is sore footed, bathe the foot two or three times at intervals of a day in a strong solution of boric acid, dry carefully, and very slightly anoint with zinc ointment. Keep the cage floor clean, and covered with dry sand. Maw seed, which should be a small bluish-grey seed, is certainly not poisonous to birds. You may use it quite freely at the moulting season, when it is more serviceable than now. But if your bird is treated on the above lines and kept free from mites, it does not require this seed now. If given liberally it is apt to throw a bird into moult. 2. Certainly you should now return the cock to the hen, whose young are almost ready to leave the nest. Watch him when first returned, and if he appears to ill-treat the young after his first excitement, you must place them in a nursery cage, and hang them on the front of the breeder for the parents to finish off. 3 and 4. See British Bird columns for replies to these queries.

Altering Position of Nest.

C.S.O.—No, I do not consider it is advisable to place the nestpan lower down when the young are 10 to 14 days old. Many hens would resent such a liberty, and I do not think it would in any way minimise the risks of possible injury when the young are leaving the nest. On the contrary, I would strongly advise you to leave the nest severely alone after the young get to this age, and by going about your duties in a quiet, methodical manner, and avoiding all interference with the birds, keep the young in the nests as long as possible. Then there will be very little risk of injury to the young. The same remarks apply to adding additional perches. If I understand your sketch correctly, the nest pan is hung on one side of the cage instead of being on the back. In this position there would already be a perch in fairly close proximity, but assuming there is not, you might put in one from back to front at about the same height as the edge of the nest pan, and about two inches distant from it, if such a perch would not interfere with the usual perch. Or supposing the usual perch is in this position, but four or five inches away from the edge of nest pan, you might move it a little nearer, into the position already suggested. More than this I would not advise you to attempt.

Multum in Parvo.

H. R. Stone.—Several of your questions have been attended to by the Editor. Nothing less than one of CAGE BIRDS' handbooks could do full justice to your queries. 1. The time to put leg rings on young is when you give them a clean nest, that is, when they are about twelve or fourteen days old. If put on early always look a day or two later to see if any have slipped off. 2. A teaspoonful of egg food every second day is quite sufficient whilst birds are preparing to go to nest. To prevent soft-shelled eggs give plenty of cuttlefish and a shell sand containing lime matter. 3. The arrangement of flights and cages on the diagram seems all that could be desired. The size of single breeding cages should be 20 in. by 11 in. by 16 in. high; double ones, twice this length and the same height and depth. Height from floor to bottom of lowest cage about 18 in. Nail pieces of tin around legs of staging to prevent mice climbing. The height of top tier of cages depends upon the size of the room and the size and height of windows. Two tiers of cages are quite enough in a small room, with small windows, and consequently a poor top-light. In better-lit rooms three or four may be used. The top tier should not be so high as to be dismally lighted. 4. In the wired-off flights on your landings you might turn from thirty to forty birds whilst maturing or awaiting disposal. If kept very clean you might go up to fifty temporarily, but these numbers must not be kept as a permanent stock for them. 5. In the flights in the two rooms shown on your diagram you could keep your forty-five to fifty, or up to sixty at a pinch, but, as before, only temporarily.

A Troublesome Three.

Puzzled.—1. No, I cannot tell you why your hen refuses to feed her solitary chick, although she seems quite healthy, sits on it, and fed well last year, without knowing more about the way you feed and treat them. Cases of this kind will arise from time to time. As the hen allows you to hand-feed the young ones, and it is doing well, you cannot do better than continue to do so until you have a suitable pair of feeders to which you could transfer the youngster. Your best plan would have been to transfer it as soon as the hen stopped feeding. Some hens never seem to trouble much about a single chick, although excellent with a fair-sized brood. Perhaps yours is one of these. But, again, perhaps your feeding was in the fault. A bath on the fourth day, when she began to flag, a few grains of hemp, a piece of crisp, juicy lettuce, or tender young groundsel, would probably have kept her feeding. 2. Your flight will do excellently to run the young in whilst growing. Cover floor with saw-dust certainly, but give a supply of grit in shallow pans. 3. Your Yorkshire hen was either egg-bound, in which case she would have died next day if she had not laid, or she had had a severe chill. In the latter case you should have kept her warm, and given thirty drops of brandy and ten of glycerine in the water until the symptoms had passed. By the bye, you do not say whether she lived or died, got better or worse, laid an egg, or what.

Not Very Promising.

"Novice."—1. Your diet is not sufficiently nourishing for this time of year. As a staple food give a mixture of three parts Canary and one part rape, and in addition a teaspoonful of hemp every second day, and on the alternate days a teaspoonful of egg-food. For the next week add five drops of cod liver oil emulsion to the egg-food each time you give it. Give a little green-food daily—say, one leaf of dandelion and a small spray of chickweed or groundsel. In the drinking water give twelve drops of chemical food every second day for a week, and on alternate days four drops of tincture of steel. 2. Treat this cock the same, except that instead of giving a teaspoonful of hemp every second day you should give half a teaspoonful of hemp, and a half teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake with five drops of sherry mixed in it. Also substitute twenty drops of whiskey, ten of glycerine, and one of oil of eucalyptus for the chemical food in the water for the first week, and drop this, and give the chemical food as above during the following week. I am afraid neither of these birds will fertilise eggs yet. 3. If this hen is not feeding young, treat her same as advised for No. 2 cock. Also examine cages well for red-mite, as the condition of this hen is strongly suggestive of their presence. Altogether your birds seem out of condition generally, and you will not, I fear, meet with much success until they improve. You would do well to read up the notes on feeding and general management on our novices' page the last few weeks.

A Solitary Chick Forsaken.

"Ireland."—Your hen was getting anxious to mate again, and having the cock so near her was the cause of her allowing the young ones to die. When the cock had been removed, and he was at liberty, you should have tried returning him when the young one was from ten to twelve days old, and if he did not molest the young, or interfere in pulling the nest to pieces, you should have left them together, when, in all probability, the cock would have taken up the feeding of the young and prevented this calamity. When you saw the young was being neglected your best plan was to place it with a brood of another pair about the same age, who would have reared it with their own. Or you could easily have saved it by hand-feeding, seeing it was a fortnight old, and should not have required feeding another fortnight.

Built, but Does Not Lay.

J.R.—As your feeding errs on the side of generosity, it is most likely the case that your hen is over fat. I would advise you to remove the cock and treat her as follows for about a fortnight: Feed on a mixture of three parts Canary to one part summer rape as a staple, and give an unlimited supply of green-food—either chickweed, lettuce, groundsel, or watercress, but no dandelion. Every second day give a half teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake in which mix six drops of sherry, and on alternate days give a few grains of inga. In the drinking water give twenty drops of sherry, ten of glycerine, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every day for three days; then give it every second day for another week, and on the intervening days, six drops of aromatic sulphuric acid. Then for two or three days give four drops of tincture of steel in the water. As it is just possible that the fat condition of your hen may have caused her to suffer more than the usual degree of depression prior to egg laying, it may be necessary to add that if she should have laid her clutch of eggs before this reply appears, and commenced to sit, you must, of course, leave things alone, and let her go on sitting.

Nests, but Refuses to Lay.

W. J. Philo.—Feed hen on a staple of three parts Canary to one part rape, and in addition give half a teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake daily one day mixing with it a pinch of gold of pleasure seed, and the next a few grains of inga. Every second day give about half a teaspoonful of hemp seed, and every day two leaves of dandelion. In the drinking water, for one day only, give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and afterwards four drops of tincture of steel every second day for a week. Remove nest box and nesting material whilst the hen is under this treatment, and at the end of a week mate her with a lusty, vigorous, young cock, in full song and anxious to mate. When you see they are mated give hen a nest box and material, and let her make a fresh start.

Brevities.

Colour Feeding (J.N.).—There is still plenty of time to look around before you want to begin colour-feeding in earnest. Have no fear on the point, as you will not find our columns lacking in the necessary information when the proper time arrives. As you already know what kind of colour-feed to use, you may give the young Canaries that are now on seed a small quantity of red sweet pepper, not hot, twice a week. It will do no harm, but you must not expect to see any improvement in the colour until they moult. Mix half a teaspoonful of the pure colour food with five and a half teaspoonfuls of egg, or crumbs of sponge cake, mix thoroughly, and give a teaspoonful to each of the six birds.

Not Mating (F. Satchwell).—The hen Canary is clearly not in breeding condition. If she seems otherwise healthy stop egg-food and give instead a teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake daily with five drops of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed with it, and sprinkled with gold of pleasure seed every second day; on alternate days mix with it six drops of sherry, and sprinkle with inga. In the drinking water give five drops of tincture of steel every second day for a week, and on alternate days ten of chemical food. Discontinue watercress, and give three or four leaves of dandelion every day. If this does not soon bring hen into condition, I would advise you to discard her for this season, and mate the cock with another. The cock is in good breeding condition, and might do well with a hen equally forward.

Cock Thrashes Hen (Perplexed).—Do not worry over these domestic squabbles, which are more apparent than real. Some cocks are much more vigorous wooers than others, and yours is one of them. Give a nest pan and nesting material, if you have not already done so, and the birds will settle down amicably, and agree to let matters run smoothly. They appear to be doing quite satisfactorily. Give the hen that is not in condition a teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake with six drops of sherry in it every second day, and a pinch of inga on alternate days, and in the drinking water give twelve drops of chemical food every second day for a week, and on the intervening days five drops of tincture of steel. Give two leaves of dandelion each day.

Clogged Feet (Fat).—If the cages are of usual size, there may be something wrong with the feeding which causes the droppings to be abnormally moist or viscid. Do you add sugar to your egg food? If so, stop doing so. As you say nothing about feeding I can only advise you to consult other replies on this question. To remove the effects mix together dry sand and sawdust in equal proportions as a covering for the cage bottoms, and give the shell gravel in a tin by itself.

Relaxed Toe (J.F.W.).—The bird is probably a little weak and relaxed in condition generally. Many old birds exhibit precisely similar symptoms when a little run down. Give a small piece of bread and milk each day, squeezed nearly dry, and with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it. If it has access to a drinking vessel yet add one drop of tincture of steel to the water. Give a flattened oval-shaped perch five-eighths of an inch wide and half an inch thick, and the toe will probably soon begin to grip. To help it you might catch the bird, hold the foot for a minute in very warm water, take it out and immediately pop it into cold water for a minute, and repeat the operation once or twice, being careful to finish with the cold douche. Dry the foot, and rub it gently with a drop or two of whiskey or brandy.

Young Dying (Doubtful).—Your young birds died because the hen ceased feeding them. See reply to "Anxious" in this issue how to treat next brood, and in addition try adding a small teaspoonful of boric acid to the bath you give the hen after the next young are hatched. You might also find it useful to drop egg-food whilst the birds are going to nest, and substitute crumbled sponge cake. A handy foster parent would be useful to keep available in case of need next time.

Moulting Six Months (H. Gosnell).—Your bird is either kept where it is exposed to draughts, or is infested with red-mite which keeps it continually moulting. In addition to its usual seed diet give it a small teaspoonful of sponge cake crumbs every day, and mix with it every second day five drops of cod liver oil emulsion, and on the alternate days five drops of sherry. In the drinking water give twelve drops of chemical food every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days four drops of tincture of steel. Of course, you must remove either of the above-named probable causes before you can expect any remedy to do good.

Laid Only One Egg (Pat).—It is most likely that the wintry spell at the end of April is accountable for your hen's vagaries, especially as you think she is an old one. Let her sit on the egg seven or eight days, then examine it, by holding it up to a strong light, as illustrated in the book you have, and if it appears transparent, throw it away, remove the nest, and allow the hen to make a fresh start. If it appears a good one you may let her sit out her time and rear the young if hatched. By all means, as you wish to succeed, get another 1907 hen, in good condition, and mate the cock with her whilst hen No. 1 is sitting.

Clear Eggs ("Stormy Petrel").—The eggs you describe were infertile, which might have been caused by the recent terrible weather, or by the cock not being in good condition when mated. Your feeding seems very fair, except the staple of "mixed Canary seed," which may mean anything. As a staple give a mixture of three parts Canary to one part rape, and on alternate days between giving egg-food give a teaspoonful of hemp. If the birds are in good health now the weather is likely to be a little more tolerable. I think this will be sufficient to prevent a recurrence of clear eggs in the next clutch.

Identity and Mate (Peter).—Your bird is a cinnamon-marked, but whether a Norwich, Yorkshire, or Scotch Fancy, I cannot gather. If a chubby bird, with stoutish chest, and standing across perch, it is a Norwich; if a thin, slender, upstanding bird, it is a Yorkshire; if a slim bird, showing more or less of a semi-circle when it stands in position, the head drooping down and thrown forward, and the tail drawn forward underneath perch, it is a Scotch Fancy. In any case, mate with a clear bird of same variety showing a pink-coloured eye, and for preference bred from even-marked cinnamon marks. You call your bird a pale yellow. If the paleness is due to whitish-coloured tips on the web of the feathers it is a Buff, and the clear bird you mate it with should be a Yellow. If yours is really a Yellow, then you should mate it with a clear Buff.

Breed as They Like ("Aviary").—I should certainly not advise you to leave the parents of last year's broods and all their families together in the large aviary to breed as they like, assuming your aviary is large enough to accommodate a breeding stock of sixteen birds. You omit to mention its size, but given this as the number of your stock, I should strongly advise you to retain the ten hens, and procure four unrelated cocks to go in with them, and dispose of the six cocks you now have. Your cocks would be quite sufficient for you, and in the aviary you would need to provide not less than fifteen nesting places in order to prevent squabbles.

Assumes Egg-Binding (A. Brighouse).—Do not treat hen for egg-binding by any mechanical means on a mere assumption. By the time this appears the hen may have got over her difficulty, as the late bad weather has been the cause of many vagaries in egg laying which will doubtless disappear now, with this "summery" feeling in the air. But if she still seems out of sorts keep her fairly warm for a day or two, quite free from draughts or chills; put a drop of warm olive oil or castor oil on the vent, and hold the bird whilst it is absorbed, and in the drinking water give thirty drops of brandy and ten of glycerine each day until she is recovered. Give a few grains of inga each day, and a scrap of any green-food except dandelion. Glad to be of assistance to you.

Refusing to Sit ("Norwich").—In such a case as yours, you can do nothing beyond taking the step you have already done, viz.: Get a common hen, or pair, and start them breeding at the same time. When the eggs are laid you should then exchange them, giving the eggs of the valuable hen to the common hen to be hatched and reared; if the valuable hen appears to want to sit, give her the eggs of the common hen; then it will not matter much if she spoils them, as she probably will do.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

Hand-rearing Thrushes and Blackbirds.

Mavis.—It really seems as though few readers carry out the editorial request to look over back numbers ere sending in questions. The hand-rearing of Thrushes, etc., was very fully dealt with in our issue of May 2, to which you should refer. Here, however, is the information in brief:—Take the young when about ten to twelve days old—nest and all, if possible—and keep them cosy, say inside a wicker basket and on a bed of hay. At night throw a piece of flannel over the basket; keep it on during the day if cold. Feed every hour at first; about every two hours later on. For food, crush an Osborne biscuit, and beat half a hard-boiled egg up in a teacup, with a fork. Then mix the biscuit with the egg, and beat up very finely, and make it of a rather sloppy consistency with new milk when you are feeding it to the youngsters. This is best fed just slightly warmed. Always be perfectly sure it is fresh and sweet; it should be prepared fresh twice daily, if possible, during very sultry weather. A small flat piece of wood, with a suitably-shaped blunt end can be used to feed with; or a large blunted toothpick. As the youngsters get older, cut small mealworms in halves, dip them in milk, and pop them into their mouths; also any flies, smooth caterpillars, small grubs, etc., you can capture. It is quite a simple task to hand-rear Thrushes. The chief thing is to feed very often, and to give only a very little at a time. Keep the nestlings and their surroundings scrupulously clean, or they will not thrive. Occasionally mix a little small but gritty (not dusty) sand with the food, or a little powdered cuttlefish.

"Ornithological Inexactitudes."

E. Holmes. — Your friend's views are very curious, and, of course, quite erroneous. "Peggy" is a local name applied to the Whitethroat (Sylvia cinerea), which is quite a tiny bird compared with the average Nightingale. Whether the 'gale is termed "Peggy," in your neighbourhood I have no means of telling, but the fact remains that the White throat and the Nightingale are certainly different birds. They are not related, even, for the former is a true Warbler, whereas the latter is a member of the group of Thrush-like birds. The statement that the hen Robin is "nothing more than a common Hedge Sparrow," is, to put it bluntly, almost too absurd to merit notice being taken of it. Your friend, it seems to me, can never have seen a hen Robin, or he would not also say that they "do not have a red breast." I have many a time watched Robins building, sitting, rearing their broods, etc., and have never yet seen an adult hen without one. You can verify this fact for yourself next time you have a day out in the country, for Robins are plentiful and their nests far from difficult to locate — the "scolding" of the old birds is sufficient to "give it away," when young are being fed. The "other man," who stated that "no one could prove that the Cuckoo ever left England, because it had never been seen or heard in any other country," is an equally reliable purveyor of "ornithological inexactitudes." Our Cuckoo is well known to winter in Africa, India, etc.; it has a wide range, in fact, outside England.

Pairing Up.

W.H.—Your question is such a vague and general one that it is difficult to answer. The feeding of both Linnet, Goldfinch, and Bullfinch Canary couples has been fully dealt with by me in the last three issues of CAGE BIRDS. As regards the pairing, if you have a double breeding cage, run the wired slide down the centre, leaving the Finch on one side and the hen on the other. If the Finch is in condition, they will not take long to strike up an acquaintanceship. Probably he will commence to sing to her through the partition wires; also to feed her. These are the first signs of an "understanding." When you notice these things, put a few coarse pieces of material out of a nest-bag into the hen's compartment. If she commences to carry these about in her beak, you can hang in the nest-pan (or box), giving her at the same time a little more nesting material. Should she carry the latter into the nest-pan, and appear bent on nest building in earnest, hang the nest-bag up against the wires, or put it in the nesting rack, if you use those appliances. First thing next morning (the earlier the better) withdraw the centre partition, letting the Finch run with the hen. If you retire quickly and discreetly to the other side of the room, you will no doubt see the hen "call" to the Finch, and he, if really in breeding condition, is not likely to lose any time in doing the needful towards ensuring fertile eggs. Keep an eye on the Finch at first, until you learn his disposition. Some pull the nest about, and some will put their beaks through the eggs when laid. Such birds should be run with the hens only for an hour or two each morning (for a short time in the evening, too, if desired) being shut off during the day, and entirely (with a solid partition) as soon as the hen commences to sit. That is the whole story, in brief, and applies equally well to all Finches, besides Goldies. If wanting further information, try and put your questions more concisely.

Management of Blackcap.

Ornis.—Yes; the general feeding of the Blackcap should proceed on exactly the lines given in the reply to "Novice" last week. But the Blackcap, you must remember, is a great fruit-eater (like the Garden Warbler), and should always have some fruit on the menu, entirely mixed amongst the soft food, or hung up in the cage or wires if you like; banana, very ripe pear and apple, grated raw carrot, and boiled potato, are very good to moisten the daily soft-food supply; some of my birds, too, were very fond of finely minced green stuff. The great objection to "mashed" fruit is the tendency to quickly turn a nasty colour, and go bad. For other fruit to use the choice is very wide; strawberries, garden currants, raspberries, grapes, elderberries, blackberries, and the like, are all more or less greedily devoured, while there is but little fruit one can buy at a shop that they do not appreciate. A slice of a ripe peach is esteemed a great delicacy. Do not forget insect food; do not, too, overlook the bath, in which they take a great delight.

Trouble with Young Skylarks.

J. R.—Details of hand feeding I have given very fully recently; see also reply to "Mavis," this week. The procedure is practically the same for the majority of young birds; some fanciers seem to erroneously think that every species is reared from the nest in a different way. As the young Larks begin to get well feathered, they should have a little very finely minced greenstuff mixed with the food that is being fed to them, and a little summer rape which has been soaked in cold water until it has burst (begun to germinate). Change the water frequently, and drain the seed and dab it fairly dry on a cloth before mixing it amongst the soft-food. Give them the same mixture to peck over when they begin to fend for themselves, afterwards gradually adopting the menu advised "A Novice." Small blackbeetles and well-scoured gentles, are valuable food items. The most serious trouble one is faced with when hand-rearing Larks is the liability of their getting "cramp" in the legs. An experienced "old hand" with Larks will tell you at once that the youngsters are seized with "cramp" because they cannot run about on the grass when ready to leave the nest, as they always do when reared under natural conditions out in the fields. I believe there is a lot of truth in this, and should never attempt to hand rear Larks without making provision for a grass run. This can easily be accomplished, in a variety of ways, providing one can lay hands on the requisite clover turfs, or suitable grass turfs. If you get two of the cages known as "Bark-runners" (the longest size made) and place them together, door to door (both the latter open, of course), you have at once, an excellent "pen." Put the nest of Larks in one corner, and place the clover turfs all over the cage floors. The best plan, however, is to get a very long cage (it need only be a rough one, and can have a calico top) made, with doors at each end, and a drawer bottom made of thin sheet zinc. Fill the latter with wet sand, and lay the turfs on this—they will then keep fresh much longer, especially if sprinkled with a little water on top now and again. No doubt you can work the idea out to suit yourself. It is a very pretty sight indeed to see the youngsters come running up to be fed. Last of all, make the water you give them to drink the colour of light port wine with Parrish's Chemical Food. You won't be troubled by cramp then. But give intervals on plain water. Don't let them drink too much water at first.

Hand-rearing Starlings.

F. W. B.—You cannot with certainty sex young birds in the nest. You have to wait until they moult into adult plumage. It is generally best to take the whole nestful, as the youngsters keep warmer when all are together, and thrive better. If you only want one, and decide to leave the others, I should advise you to wait until they are getting just nicely feathered, and then select the most forward-looking, liveliest nestling. You will have no difficulty in hand-rearing the young Starling on the lines recommended by me for rearing young Thrushes, etc. You can certainly occasionally moisten the food with water instead of milk. You must, however, give it animal food of some kind, either mealworms or small garden worms (cut up to a suitable size), etc. Also you could scrape a little raw lean mutton amongst its food fairly frequently, or give a little grated dried liver. When it commences to feed itself, give a good insectivorous mixture designed for the coarse-feeding Softbills, and let it contain finely minced lettuce or other green-meat or vegetable ingredient in liberal quantity. The Starling is fond of a little scraped raw meat, hard-boiled egg, fruit, finely chopped green stuff, berries, worms, snails, beetles, wasp grub, gentles, and, in fact, most forms of suitable live food. You will have no difficulty in providing him with a good varied diet, on which he will live in health for a long period. Keep in a very large box-pattern cage, and clean it out frequently.

Feeding Young Mules & Hybrids.

Tryer.—Did you note the reply to "A. B. C.," last week? Give the hen, to feed with, canary and summer rape seeds, and lightly cracked hemp seed, with a little shelled sunflower and maw seeds. Offer seeding green foods, such as chickweed and shepherd's purse, freely—but strip off all coarse leaves. If you cannot get this, give young lettuce and watercress leaves—but not freely until the youngsters are three or four days old. She may also relish a little soaked rape. Don't give these things all at the same time, but offer them at various periods through the day—nothing like variety to induce hens to "pack" their babies. Egg-bread, made by well mixing two crushed Osborne biscuits (or equal quantity of stale bread crumbs) with the yolk of a hard-boiled (ten minutes) egg, must, of course, also be freely offered; mix in half the white, too, when the young are four or five days old. When the Mules commence to feed themselves it is a very mistaken policy to leave off soft food as "soon as possible." The egg should be gradually left out of their diet when they are three weeks old or so, but certainly not the soft food. Give bread and milk sop (or biscuit and milk), well sprinkled with maw seed, and with a good pinch of Plasmon powder mixed amongst it, freely each day. In addition offer canary and maw seeds, soaked summer rape, and lightly cracked hemp. A few crushed sunflower seeds should also be thrown in daily, increasing the quantity as the birds get older, and gradually dropping the hemp; at this stage also gradually discontinue the milk sop and soaked seed, giving occasional feeds only. If colour-feeding, give the sweet pepper in egg cake, letting this take the place, of course, of the milk sop. A few groats occasionally are relished, and a little coarse oatmeal; but the above "menu" is full enough for all practical purposes. Some fanciers, I know, will not give young birds green stuff after they have taken them away from their parents. But this I consider a huge mistake. I don't believe, mind you, in stuffing them with lettuce, watercress, and the like. What they want, and what is extremely beneficial to them, and conducive to their successful rearing, is a free supply of the "seeding green foods" if I may use the term, meaning the seeding heads of chickweed, shepherd's purse, grass, groundsel, plantain, and the like, especially the two first-named. But don't gather it off dusty roadsides; and strip off all large, coarse leaves.

Brevities.

In Cross Moult (W. H. S.).—Your best plan is to keep the bird in the warm kitchen, and cover the cage over at night. Let it have a little of the stimulating seeds (hemp and niger) frequently, also pinches of linseed, maw, and lettuce. On alternate days stir a small teaspoonful of Parrish's Chemical Food into its drinking water (two tablespoonfuls). It is bound to take a few weeks to pull through.

Thrush Ailing (A. Stout).—Probably he is not feeding correctly. Some vegetables should always be given amongst the soft food, and a fair supply of live food is also indispensable where perfect health is desired. Crush one chlorate of potash lozenge with a small teaspoonful of Epsom salts, and dissolve as much as will just cover a shilling in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water. Give this for one day, then repeat after a day's interval on plain water.

Wild Seeds (Hardbill).—I fail to see any very substantial difference, but of the two samples I should choose No. 2. To be really suitable for Goldfinches, however, a sprinkling of thistle, dandelion and sesame seeds should be added; gold of pleasure has been added to both samples.

Mates (Three-weeks Reader). — A yellow-green hen Canary, of Norwich type would make as suitable a mate as any for a cock Bullfinch. Put cock Goldfinches with the hen Linnet and hen Redpoll, and a hen Siskin or medium-sized hen Bullfinch with the cock Redpoll. These matings would be likely to produce exhibition Hybrids of value if successful.

Taking and Rearing Young Thrushes (Boy).—If you will kindly refer to our issue of May 2, you will find half-a-column of information on the matters you mention. It is, of course, impossible to repeat the same information week after week; note reply to "Mavis."

Linnet in Moult (W. Newell).—Follow advice given "W. H. S." this week. Variations of temperature (especially if marked) are well known to throw captive birds into "cross moults." Your Linnet will no doubt sing again as well as ever once he has got over the trouble thoroughly.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

Breeding Cutthroats.

G. Jackson.—This is a fairly simple matter if in an outdoor aviary, and not difficult if in a cage, providing it is one not smaller than the ordinary double breeder. As regards dietary, Canary, white and spray millet will suffice to keep adult birds fit and healthy. Of course, that is, with the other necessities such as green-food, grit and water. When they have young to feed, keep a saucer of good and clean ants' cocoons in their cage or aviary, so that they can have continuous access to same. I am always interested in these pleasing little birds, as they were the first Foreigners I bred in captivity, and my experience teaches me they are late breeders, apparently fritter away the early summer, and then bring off a couple of broods in the autumn. If you can procure herbage or sprays from rose and fruit trees (infested with green-fly or other plant lice), you will find this a great help in keeping birds fit. If they don't take to the ants' cocoons, then you must give a little of some good soft food mixture, made just crumbly moist when they are feeding young. Either a cocoa-nut husk or square box with a small hole in front for entrance, will do well as a nesting receptacle, while hay and long grass will be all they will require as building material.

Collection of Tanagers.

Tanager.—My previous reply is based upon the fact of there being a sound shelter shed attached to aviary for birds to use as night shelter, and in severe weather, and also upon their not being overcrowded. In a moderate-sized aviary I have kept the Scarlet, Blue and the Maroon together with other birds. You will have to watch your opportunity as to procuring them, and you had better keep them in cages for a short time till they pick up, at any rate partially, before turning them into the aviary. The following would make a fine series: The Scarlet, Maroon, Palm, Blue, Archbishop, White-capped, Orange-billed Saltator, and Magpie. I have not yet tested the genius Calliste out of doors yet, though I'm of the opinion they would do well. I cannot advise the mixing of hang nests with them. I always make a practice of keeping these birds separate—that is, only one species of Hangnest in each enclosure, though several of same kind may be kept together. Your birds should be out of doors by end of June at latest to ensure their being thoroughly fit by the time the winter is on them.

Plum-headed Parrakeet.

M.D.R.—(1) Keep up a mixture of Canary, millet, hemp, oats and dari as its staple diet—till you see it is eating freely of the seed mixture; continue to give a little of the rice it is accustomed to. Also tempt it with ripe fruit and a piece of plain biscuit, all of which are wholesome and usually readily taken. At no distant time you'll find it will forsake the boiled food and subsist almost entirely on the seed mixture with a little ripe fruit and green stuff, etc. (2) Plumheads have a chattering sort of whistle and a moderate scream, but they are certainly not talkers, though, as is common with all species of Parrots and Parrakeets, you at times come across one that learns to articulate a few words. (3) Pennants are gorgeous birds, yet not intelligent, i.e., this is not a talking species, neither is it a very noisy one, but for beauty of plumage there are few, if any, Parrakeets that surpass it. They are simply gorgeous in the outdoor aviary. A single pet would make a nice pet. Always glad to help readers.

Treating Young Grey Parrot.

A Constant Reader.—You have quite a young bird, and I could have advised you with greater confidence if you had informed me how you had been feeding, etc. You had better keep a little boiled maize in its cage (this only keeps fresh one day, and you must see no sour bits are left about, and that food vessels are cleansed daily), also keep a tin of the following seed mixture in its cage, and when it is eating freely of it, gradually wean it from the boiled maize: Canary, millet, wheat, oats, dari, and hemp seeds. To vary the diet, give ripe fruit, plain biscuit, nuts, and keep a piece of clean cuttlefish hanging in cage. Make its drinking water the colour of pale port with Parrish's Chemical Food, and do not leave it in cage, but offer it three or four times daily, and let it satisfy its thirst. If, as I think, it is a very young bird, it will cease to squeak as it grows older. You could try giving when it calls out a little piece of plain biscuit that has been rapidly dipped in water, just damp, not saturated. Avoid doing anything in the proximity of its cage calculated to scare or alarm it, and it will soon become quieter. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food, or you'll soon make it ill.

A Feather-plucking Amazon.

A.J.H.—From the details you supply I cannot give you the bird's age; this is always difficult without seeing the bird. It is a Blue-fronted Amazon in adult plumage. It is rather difficult for me to advise you, as you give me no hint as to how you've been treating your bird. Give it a teaspoonful of Diamond's Magnesia in its drinking water every other day for a week, and then for a month make the drinking water the colour of pale port with Parrish's Chemical Food. Wash or spray its nostrils with diluted glyco-thymoline till the running ceases. Diet: A seed mixture of Canary, wheat, oats, dari, maize, hemp, and sunflower seeds, well mix and keep a supply continuously in the cage. You can also give so as to vary the diet, ripe fruit, plain biscuit, nuts, and a little boiled potato (dry), or raw carrot. You must also keep up a supply of cuttlefish and gritty sand in its cage. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table slops, nor any kind of animal food whatever. Now the weather is warmer you can safely spray the parts it is in the habit of plucking with quassia solution, taking care to keep the bird out of draught till it is dry.

Moustache Parrakeets.

Grimston.—The several special species of Alexandrine Parrakeets are those to which the term Moustache is applied. The term is used in a very loose manner, making it very difficult to identify species from the popular name. Personally, I always consider this term to be most applicable to the Javan Parrakeet, and this is the species I believe your bird to be. I have seen it kept in company with Rosellas, etc., with success, and if you have a true pair they should breed. At the same time, I must warn you that where one aviculturist succeeds in keeping and breeding Parrakeets together in one enclosure, others fail. There is so much individualism in Parrakeets that a great deal depends on the individual birds, and this can only be ascertained by watching. This close observation must be almost constant when nesting begins, as birds quite amiable at other times become absolutely ferocious in the breeding season, and this characteristic is not merely applicable to Parrots and Parrakeets, but to almost all kinds of birds. I do not suppose they will attempt to breed this year, and this should leave them time to get accustomed to each other if you procure at once.

Grey Parrot with Sore Mouth.

F A—I am glad to note the bird is so much better. Continue to wipe out the mouth with the chlorate of potash and glycerine till the tongue is quite free, as regards the corner of the mouth. If there is any humour, lance this as soon as it appears ripe; cleanse it by gentle pressure and a little warm water; then anoint it with a little spermaceti ointment. I was afraid at the time it was a case of ulcerated mouth, and the outside growth the result of the inside irritation. However, I am of the opinion that a complete cure will be effected if you persevere. You must keep its bowels freely moving while this is going on—a teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia, in its drinking water will suffice, if given occasionally as required. I shall be interested in hearing a little later of the bird's progress.

Brevities.

Books on Foreign Birds (Query).—D. Greene's "Favourite Foreign Birds," 2s. 6d. or 3s. 6d., and "Popular Parrakeets," 1s., both obtainable from the Editor of this paper, you would find of great assistance. There will also appear almost at once from my pen a small booklet entitled "Foreign Birds for Beginners," due notice of which will be given in our pages.

Budgerigar Ailing (A.P.H.).—For the present take out the ailing bird, and cage separately till fit again, and put up the one pair for breeding. Give the ailing bird three or four drops of tasteless castor oil from the end of a quill; give it a good wash in quassia solution, and for a month at least well colour what little water it drinks with Parrish's Chemical Food. If you can, get it to eat a dry crust of household bread daily with six of eight drops of the chemical food on it. Give as much grass in the ear as it will eat, also Canary, white and spray millet, and a few oats. Unless constitutionally weak it should soon improve. Put two husks in aviary, and a pair of the birds; they require no nesting material. Leave to themselves, and in a few weeks they should begin to nest.

Cockatoo Ailing (T. W. Shailes).—The powder is not an artificial condiment, but quite natural, and is present wherever a bird is really fit. Your bird is in poor condition, though apparently healthy, and your diet is very wrong. Do not give table scraps, milk, tea, coffee, or slops of any kind of animal food. Diet: Seed mixture—Canary seed, oats, wheat, dari, hemp, maize, and sunflower seed; well mix, and always keep a tin in its cage. The following will enable you to vary diet: Ripe fruit, stale crust of household bread, and plain biscuits (dry), boiled potatoes, cabbage stalks (without gravy), nuts, greenfood (such as lettuce, green peas, etc., as in season). Of cuttlefish, water, and grit keep up continuous supplies. Make drinking water just saline for one day with Epsom salts; follow this by making the drinking water the colour of pale port. Continue for a month at least. This treatment should bring bird again into condition, when the plumage powder will reappear. Now the warm weather is here, lightly spray the bird twice a week, but keep it out of draughts till dry.

Budgerigars Eggbound (Budgie).—In the ordinary way your birds would have done well, as your treatment is really admirable, the only thing lacking being grass in flower (seeding grain); a leaf or two of dandelion will do no harm, but I doubt if they will eat. A little lettuce, if they will eat it, may also be given. The late cold weather, coming just at the time your birds were on the lay, is the cause of your loss. The worst of the weather must now be past. Procure another couple of hens, and you are almost certain to have better luck. I note you use red millet; white millet is much more preferable. Other than this, I can suggest no improvement on the manner in which you are treating birds.

Paradise Whydah (J.L.B.).—This bird only wears the long, caudal plumes for about six months in each year, and unless broken off by its being kept in too small a cage before coming into your possession, your birds' plumes will soon begin to show, and will then be shed again at the autumn moult. It was a mistake to pull the tail feathers; this has not helped matters—possibly retarded them a little. Judging from the colouration of the plumage, you certainly have a cock bird, the hen being practically a plain brown Bunting sort of bird, with darker striations. Supply white and spray millet, also Canary seed, one or two mealworms or other insects daily, greenfood, grit, and cuttlefish, together with plenty of clean water for drinking and bathing. The tail should soon appear and if the cage supplies reasonable space for exercise the bird should do well.

What Parrot? (E. Denner).—Your bird is a blue-fronted Amazon, and ranks next to the African Gray for talking capacity. It should certainly make quite a talented talker and mimic—that is, judging by the details you give. Keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation, and also teach by constant repetition any special words or short phrases you wish it to learn. Give usual seed mixture (see other replies), and supply plain biscuits, nuts, ripe fruit, and greenfood, not altogether, but so as to vary diet. A continuous supply of grit, cuttlefish, and water must be kept up. Do not give table scraps, tea, coffee, or milk slops, nor any kind of animal food. The bird should continue to do well.

Grey Parrot Ailing (Nervine).—Your seed mixture will answer very well, but any of the advertisers in our columns, under "Foods" will supply dari and sunflower seeds. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, or any kind of animal food. Continue ripe fruit; also give nuts (shelled walnuts are best), and plain biscuit. Keep a piece of cuttlefish in cage, and let the bird satisfy its thirst three or four times a day. For one day only put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in drinking water. Repeat this after an interval of two days. If there is any exudation from its nostrils, spray or wash these with diluted glyco-thymoline. After giving last dose of magnesia, make drinking water the colour of port wine with Parrish's Chemical Food. If there is no improvement in about a fortnight, repeat query, with full particulars.

Breeding Budgerigars (G.V.M.).—The fittings for Budgerigars are very simple. First all glass must be covered on the inside with 1in. mesh wire netting; then hang up against rafters, at least double the number of husks you have pairs of birds, line the walls with twiggy branches (pea or bean sticks answer well), leave a sash in the centre of front to open, say one third of the whole space. I should advise a small wire netting lobby being made just inside door, as this will not only enable you to get in and out without birds dashing over your head, but also enable you to leave door open in extremely hot weather, the birds safe from cats, etc. You have quite for six breeding pairs, leaving room for the young till you are ready to dispose of them. Your dietary is airight, but the youngster was hatched and reared during the winter months, and, as is frequently the case, it is a weakling, and will never be any good. In fact, the kindest thing to do is to kill it in some painless way. Hope you'll have a successful season.

Talking Greys (Anxious).—As a rule, the Grey Parrot is the most fluent talker of all the Parrot tribe, but there are exceptions—birds which only utter a word or so occasionally. Neither is there any fixed age when they begin to talk, certainly before they are two years old as a rule. Keep where it will hear plenty of conversation, and pet them as much as possible. Talk to it, and teach it by constant repetition a few words or short phrases, keeping at one till it is learned, before beginning another. As to food treatment see other replies in this Issue.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WEATHER NO OBJECT.

SIR,—I though perhaps the following would prove interesting to your many readers. A hen Canary was sitting on four eggs. The first egg was laid on April 9th. She was off her eggs for twelve minutes on April 19th, but to my surprise they hatched out all right on April 24th. They were in an outdoor aviary (and the chicks are still), and the wind was N. and N.E.—very cold, indeed. Is this a record, considering the weather?

A NEW SOCIETY FOR CAMBORNE AND DISTRICT.

SIR.—A meeting of fanciers was held at Camborne on Friday, May 8th, when it was decided to form a new society to be called "The Camborne Cage Bird Fanciers' Association." The members hope to hold a grand open show at about the end of November next. I was elected secretary, with a strong committee of local fanciers.

SWEATING HENS.

SIR,—If I may be allowed to write anything on this subject, I would say sweating is due to the weakly constitution of the hen and that the extra luxuries she has eaten have produced a form of indigestion. I do not believe in any medicine acting as a cure; if the luxuries are stopped the complaint will go. Too much egg in the soft food will make sweaters; so, in my opinion, will any, or all, green leaves. No wild bird that breeds with Canaries ever feeds its young on green leaves, but it does on half ripe seeds. Green leaves are a poor substitute for seeds. The leaves and roots of groundsel will, I consider, kill young Canaries. Sometimes hand-feeding her young for a few days will assist the hen in getting over her complaint; or, again, the nest-box and nest with young can be placed on the bottom of the cage. The cock will most likely feed the young and some will even brood over them at night. If the hen persists in sitting on the young when at the bottom of cage, arrange the nest-box under a perch so that it is uncomfortable for her to do so.

THE WINNING YELLOW CREST-BRED AT THE LATE PALACE SHOW

SIR, — When reporting the late Crystal Palace show, your reporter said, re my winning Yellow-Green Crest-bred hen, that some doubted her colour, but that he himself considered her an undoubted yellow hen, and a good one of her sort. A contemporary reported this bird as a Buff cock, slightly colour-fed. I am pleased to tell you that yours was the correct report, as I had made arrangements when she commenced nesting last week for a few prominent fanciers to come and see her sitting on eggs. She built a grand nest, and on Thursday she was slightly mopey, showing signs of egg binding. I commenced in the afternoon to try to get the egg away, and by night she was easier, so that I expected her to be alright next morning. I was in the bird-room early on the Friday morning, and you can imagine my consternation to find her sitting dead in the nest. On dissecting her, I found an abnormal shell-less egg, with a further three eggs in different stages with shells. I kept her and showed her to the members of the Kirkintilloch and District Cage Bird Club on Saturday night, where general regret was expressed at my loss. I had this consolation, that it was nothing to what it would have been to Mr. Slade had he not have let me have her back, and had this happened to him. I am in hopes of still breeding a better this year, as I have close on twenty youngsters, and two nests to hatch, out of my first round, and I did not pair up till the middle of April.

JOHN MCLAY.

THE BORDER FANCY CANARY CLUB AND ITS JUDGES.

SIR,—Seemingly Mr. Lambie thinks his insinuations, etc., have upset me. If so, he is wide of the mark. I may tell him that I am as cool and calm as a Thrush upon the top of a tree in the midst of a storm of wind and rain. Your readers have not had any of the latter, but have been treated to a lot of "wind" from a certain quarter! Mr. Lambie denies that he said that I could neither write well nor think justly, yet in his next sentence fully corroborates me in stating so. This is by no means the first time he has contradicted himself, but seeing that I know him personally, I had some regard for his feelings, and wished to let him see that I had no intention to hurt them. For this reason I did not tell him at first, as I now do, that it was nothing short of presumption for him to interfere with anything concerning the club, seeing that he is not a member of it. What caused him to do so I leave to himself to explain. I will ask him to let your readers know also how many shows received the club's patronage last season, how many variety shows were judged by members of the club where the patronage was not given, and, lastly, at how many "mixed" shows were the Border Fancy classes judged by gentlemen who were not members of the club? After he has told me, I will make it clear to him that what he terms my "prophecies," would have proved true, if the members had been restricted to two shows, as I at first had reason to think this rule meant. He has put the saddle on the wrong horse when he states that I was seeking a "cheap advertisement for the club judges." I have already told him that I act as mouthpiece for no one; and if he means this as a personal remark, I can tell him that if he looks through your paper he will see that I pay for my own advertisements. I have never made any remarks to hurt any fancier outside the club, though this seems to have been Mr. Lambie's point all along, without the least rhyme or reason, as he ought to be fully aware that the two shows he mentions are both held under the club rules, and therefore no judge other than one of its members would be engaged. The remainder of his letter is, to use a Scotch expression, nothing but some of his "cauld kail" warmed up again. He makes quite as bad a show as the servant girl, whose mistress told her to take a flat iron and place it at her feet as a bed warmer on a cold and frosty night. Asking her the next morning how it had succeeded, her mistress was astonished to receive the answer that she thought it a little warmer, towards morning, but that she could have warmed it in less time at the fire!

LINNET MULES HATCHED IN FEBRUARY.

SIR,—Some of your readers may be interested to hear that I had a nest of Linnet-Mules in February last. Two I reared until they were five weeks old and the other one is alive now. I shall be only too pleased to show it to anyone wishing to see it. My address is Forester's Arms, Latimer Road, Notting Hill.

THE CAGE BIRD UNION AND CLASHING OF SHOWS.

SIR,—Referring to the letter in last week's issue re clashing of shows, if "Fair Play" will write me direct, I shall be pleased to send him list of show dates already fixed in the district in which his society is situated; though it is probable I have already supplied the Secretary with this, when informing him they could not have the license on account of clashing with another show. Of course, if any society deliberately (as in "Fair Play's" case) chooses a date to clash with another show in their district, they cannot blame the Union for acting upon Union rules, and, further, doing their best to prevent two shows being injured by a loss of entries through both being held on the same date.

GEO. W. F. LYTHGOE, Sec. C.B.U.

SIR,—Your correspondent "Fair Play," seems to suggest that the C.B.U. should hold the whip hand over societies, and even suggests drawing the dates for shows. Does he mean "raffling" the dates off? A good idea for the Union to raise funds. Why should the C.B.U. draw dates for each Society and each society meekly submit to the date allotted to them? The C.B.U. cannot claim the right to do so. Why should societies bend the knee to this usurping crowd? The C.B.U. is a burden to the Fancy, and why do not secretaries stick up for their members? If they do not, there will soon be no members of societies. The only members you can persuade to join societies now are young beginners; old ones have more sense. The young ones you have to obtain under false pretences. For instance, if you canvass a breeder to become a member, almost the first question he asks is: "How will it benefit me?" Well, if you tell that breeder by becoming a member he can only show at half the shows in the country, does it stand to sense that he will join? Therefore, you have to say something else, and leave him to find out the pleasures and great benefits afterwards. Then look who expects twopence per member! The C.B.U. may well accumulate such vast funds, and Societies have to feed this fund whether they can pay their way or not. I received a letter from the C.B.U. Secretary on May 1st containing receipt for our affiliation fee sent March 17th, also asking for a list of our members. This letter I read at our meeting. I was informed distinctly by three members that if I forwarded their names they would resign as members of our society; but I respect our members too much to give them away, unless I am instructed to do so by my Committee, and then, of course, being only an hon. secretary, I must submit. I can hear of nothing the C.B.U. are doing. Some fanciers say the C.B.U. are "beat," if so, why not own to it and let societies keep their fees? The C.B.U. seem to have no use for them.

AN APPEAL TO THE FANCIERS OF BARNSLEY AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—Will you allow me to make an appeal to the fanciers in Barnsley to come forward and assist us in bringing the Barnsley and District Cage Bird Society to the front, so that it may be as popular as when it held its shows under the Yorkshire Union Rules? There are some of the old fanciers waiting to see how we are going to carry the society on; but let me appeal to them in all good fellowship, and say that "hanging on behind" will not help us to make the Society a success. We have every reason to believe that there are a fair number of young men in the district who are trying their hands at breeding Canaries, and it is only through the Fancy papers that we can hope to reach some of these. Perhaps a few words as to how we stand will not be out of place. We have for our president Mr. W. H. Lindley, of Wombwell, well known as a keen fancier and as a judge of birds; as vice-president we have Mr. W. Rapson. Both gentlemen are prepared to give all novices who join us the benefit of their long experience. The following are the working committee:—Messrs. F. Race (Barnsley), J. Barnes (Cudworth), W. Smith and T. Thorpe (Lower Barugh), and J. Taylor (Dodworth). The officers are well scattered in the district, and with the help which your paper can give us, we hope to work up to as high a level as in days gone by.

THE REDSTART AS A CAGE PET.

SIR,—The Redstart makes both a good show bird and a nice cage bird, and when taken young from the nest and hand-reared, becomes a very lovable pet. It is a showy bird when in full plumage, and is continually in motion, jerking its tail from side to side and bowing its head in a most graceful and becoming way—which causes a fancier much pleasure and amusement. In most localities it is known as the Firetail, because of the colour of its tail. The birds are not overnumerous, and so very few nests are found in this district. Most years I have heard of several; two of these were in holes in an old wall, and the others in holes of trees. As there may be some of your readers not acquainted with the eggs of this bird, I will briefly describe them. The clutch varies from 4 to 6 in number, but mostly 5. Only in one instance have I found a nest with 6 eggs in it. The eggs are like the Hedge Sparrow's, but paler in colour, and not so large. The nest is made of dried grass, small roots, leaves, wool, with horse-hair and sometimes a few feathers as lining. These birds are very apt to forsake their nests if visited too much, or interfered with at all. If the young are taken when they are from 10 to 14 days old, and hand-reared, they do make most fascinating cage birds. They can most easily be hand-reared on a good soft-food mixture, made into a nice, soft paste, so that it can be easily put into their mouths from a feeding stick. Some years ago I had a nest of 5 of these birds. As I had no soft-food by me, I at once made some of my own, which consisted of yolk of egg and bread crumbs, house-fly, ants' eggs, and small worms cut into pieces, together with some small pieces of sheep's heart. I also gave them pieces of mealworms. I successfully brought up the whole five, which I gave to a friend. I raised the five, but when they could pick-up, they began to pluck one another, and so became nearly nude. I had the greatest difficulty in getting these to live, but they did live, and they became good birds. So I should advise anyone who goes in for hand-rearing these birds, or any insectivorous ones, to part them off at once when they can feed themselves, and to keep them as clean as possible, as their feet and feathers are very liable to become clogged up with dirt. They should also have a bath daily, for they dearly love a bath; it also helps to keep their plumage in good order. When they are able to feed themselves, any good stock mixture will suit them, but it should be varied by some live food such as flies, spiders, beetles, small worms, and ripe fruit (they are very fond of various kinds of ripe fruit). The song of this bird is not so good as that of either the Nightingale or the Blackcap, but it is a very pleasant little song and helps to give variety to the fancier's "orchestra." There may be some of your readers who will be able to get a nest for hand-rearing, and these few notes may be of use to him. It is not advisable when hand-feeding to over-cram any young birds, especially when they are quite young; a little and often will bring them on much better, than 3 or 4 "good gorges" a day. A great thing is to feed soon after daylight, and that I know is a great consideration with some people; only fancy getting out of bed three or four times before breakfast to give some paltry bird's food, but I can assure your readers I have done it many and many a time, and I hope to do it again when I can get suitable birds. It is as well to impress upon any young fanciers who keep these birds and also the Nightingale, the necessity of giving plenty of egg-food (both yolk and white), as this is a great help. This must be given, besides plenty of insect food.

SOME BREEDING EXPERIENCES.

SIR,—I am a sound lover of birds of all kinds, and I have now kept them for about six years; the longer I keep them the greater the my love toward them. Mine is not an extra good room, nor even an attic or anything that is expensive, as I cannot afford it at present. I have two cock birds and two hens (all Norwich), and it has been pleasing to watch them this year during the pairing and hatching operations. The male bird no doubt is the best of his own house. When I first paired them up the hen seemed to be the mistress of the situation, as the cock bird was almost afraid of her; she chased him all over the "shop." The male bird was full of song, and the hen flopped all over the cage. Then there seemed to be more calmness with the two. I was feeding on white seed first with cuttle-fish, and following CAGE BIRDS closely I changed the diet for the one of mixed seeds, with a little apple and chickweed. I only once gave egg-food during the breeding season, but I thought the birds looked lazy. I paired up rather soon in the second week of March; but it was grand to watch them. I had bought some nesting material and put it in the cage, and one would have thought that the male bird was the hen to look at him building the nest. He used the nesting not only for the nest, but he spread it all over the cage bottom, the hen just "looking" at him. One might have expected eggs from them very shortly; but it did not come off till May morning when the first egg was laid. It was a very large one. I caught the bird and gave it a little castor oil in its beak and vent on the night before it laid. It has laid two smaller eggs since, and I know they will prove good and full eggs. I watched the proceedings and I know the hen is a good mother judging from last year's work. The cock is singing "mad" just at the time of writing. I do not believe in giving too much dandelion. I have been a three years' breeder, but have never kept a great lot of birds, only two or three pairs, and my birds seemed to be lazy and heavy after taking of dandelion. The best thing to do I think before pairing up, is to clean the cage spick and span. Give the birds you are going to mate up a dose of Epsom salts to thoroughly cleanse them. Mate up when they are in condition. Give cuttlefish bone, apple, watercress and chickweed.

A BIRD LOVER.

SIR,—Having been a reader of CAGE BIRDS since its commencement, I would like to state that I have had many valuable hints and have read many good discussions which have been of the greatest help to me. I thought I would like to tell your readers of my experience. My shed is about 8 ft. by 4 ft. by 7 ft. high, and is built with corrugated iron sheets lined inside with thin boards. Half of the top is of glass; the shed is whitewashed inside and bricked back and ends, with a sloping top. No doubt some will think it is small, but I have no space for a larger one. I have room enough for eight two-compartment breeding cages. For the moulting season I took cages out and wired half of shed off, using small mesh. I let all birds fly together, Canaries (cocks and hens) and Linnets, and they all came through a splendid moult. I only lost one bird during the winter out of 25. In February I took flight down and singled off those birds I was going to breed with—eight hens and five cocks. Those that I saw wanted to nest I paired up at the beginning of March, with the result that there are now 13 on sticks and two still in the nest I had one nest of Linnet Mules. So I don't think either the late winds or snowstorms have done much harm to my birds as four more are sitting.

FIGHTING "BOB."

SIR,—As a friend and I were taking a walk along a country road on Sunday, May 10th, a pair of birds flew out of a hedge a few yards before us. We thought they were young birds and we ran after them. I succeeded in catching one of them, which turned out to be an old cock Robin. It was in a very exhausted state as if it had been in a hard fight. I took it home but it died the same night. E. A NEW SOCIETY FOR KIRKSTALL, LEEDS.

SIR.—A meeting of Kirkstall Fanciers was held at the Abbey Inn, Kirkstall, the other day. Mr. Chew was voted to the chair. On Mr. Chew's proposition, seconded by Mr. Hulton, it was decided to form a Society. The name was agreed on as Kirkstall and District Cage Bird Society. Mr. Chew was appointed chairman, Mr. Hutton secretary, and Mr. Whitley treasurer. The subscription is to be 6d. entrance fee, and 1d. per week. Our next meeting will be held at the Abbey Inn, Kirkstall, on Monday, May 18th, at 8 o'clock prompt. It is hoped that all fanciers will attend to try and make the Society a success. W. HUTTON, Hon. Sec.

AN EXTRAORDINARY CASE OF EGG-LAYING.

SIR,—I would like to give publicity to this case, as I think it rather extraordinary. A friend of mine asked me to look at his birds one Sunday. He had a hen that had laid nine eggs. She laid three on three mornings, missed a morning, and laid three again; then she missed two mornings and laid another three, making nine eggs in the twelve days. Some people would think there were two hens together, but I can prove that this was not the case. My friend asked me three weeks since to pair him his birds for breeding, and this pair includes a young hen that he bred last year with a buff cock two years old. I looked at the eggs and could only find one clear one, the birds being just as I left them. I may say that the breeding season about here has commenced rather badly I think, owing to the really "shocking" weather we are having.

A DULWICH AND PECKHAM MATTER.

SIR,—I can assure Mr. F. Gain that the Dulwich and Peckham Society contains (like his) a lot of "jolly good fellows," and has many friends and only a few enemies. Now the concert he and Mr. Rogers lost so much money over, he clearly told the Committee, was for the benefit of the loss on the unfortunate show run by Mr. Woolhouse. But was there a loss, according to the show balance sheet? I fancy very small, if any. At the time of the concert I don't think even Mr. W. knew himself definitely. Like Mr. Gain, it grieves me to see one society trying its hardest to exterminate a very powerful rival. Let the D. and P. C.B.S. alone; time alone will show, and work will tell, what position we shall proudly hold in the cage bird fancy. Still second to none is the hope of

E. S. LUGG.

SIR,—"Tit Larks" suggestion that the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. should drop the word Dulwich to suit the Dulwich O.S. (and not the fanciers), does not appear to be such an innocent one as he would have us think. I am glad to say it "has" caused consternation in our ranks, and I think "Tit Lark" has done the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. a good turn, for instead of throwing dust in the eyes of fanciers to make them believe we have moved away from Dulwich, it will cause them to open their eyes a bit. He writes about dropping a bomb amongst a certain section who, "he" thinks, have an "imaginary grievance." We only wish it was imaginary! I can tell "Tit Lark" we have a very big grievance, which must soon come out before your readers. Then he goes on to ask: Why so much bitterness of feeling? My answer to that is, Ask the Dulwich O.S. Your correspondent next runs on to say that my statement in your issue of the 25th contained several inaccuracies, which I deny. I stated, in reply to Tit Lark, when he said the D.O.S. officials were mostly all Dulwichites, that this was false, and I still say it is if the report of the inaugural meeting to start a club in opposition to the Dulwich and Peckham (which was called by the two or three dissatisfied officials, as Mr. J. Robson puts it) was true. In their report (which appeared in the Fancy Press) there were no less than 14 gentlemen's names as officials who do not reside in Dulwich. But one has to take their reports with a grain of salt, when such a gentleman as Mr. J. Robson writes and states he is not now, and never has consented to be, a vice-president of the Dulwich O.S. Again, on April 11th there appeared in the Fancy Press a statement that Mr. T. Boydon, the well-known breeder and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead, had been made a vice-president of the D.O.S. Mr. Boydon wishes me to state that he is not a vice-president and not a member, and, further, that he does not intend to be. He was asked if he would become one by one of their officials, but would not give his consent; so whoever proposed and seconded him had no authority to do so. Also on the same date a Mr. Hyman, of Peckham, received a post-card (which is in my possession) stating he was unanimously elected a member, and this was also in the Fancy Press. He, too, wishes me to state he gave no one permission to propose or second him. So you see, "Tit Lark," there are lots of inaccuracies about the Dulwich O.S. I am also surprised at "Tit Lark" asking me if I am aware that the secretaries, chairman, and other officials he mentions reside in Dulwich. I am quite well aware where they reside, after sitting on committee with some of them for four years, on what he calls their "own doorstep." "Tit Lark" states that amongst the officials of the D.O.S. are the founders of the D. and P.C.B.S. To be accurate he should have said "some of the founders," for on looking up the report of the meeting in 1904, which was called to form the D. and P.C.B.S., I find there are still some of them belonging to the old clubs, and some who do not belong to either society. I take it all who were at that first meeting called to form the society are "its founders." Once more I sign myself as one who is not afraid of his name—

W. J. CRANFIELD.

DANDELION AND YOUNG BIRDS.

SIR.—I have been feeding my birds this year on lettuce and water-cress for green food, and have been fairly successful. On Sunday, being out in the country, I gathered some fine dandelion roots from a wood-side—beautiful roots, and full of flower, with tender young leaves, 8 to 10 inches long. I fed the birds with same at breakfast to-day, Monday, May 11, and at dinner-time found one nest of four (10 days old) dying in agony, whilst one or two in other nests look sickly. Cages were all cleaned yesterday, utensils washed, egg food fresh. What killed or poisoned them? They seemed to be lying dead, with green in their crops. Does wood dandelion contain too much juice, which is too strong for the young? Should I have got the short field dandelion? F.H.S.

SUMMER MIGRANTS IN GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

SIR,—On April 26th, I walked round a locality, which I will call A, where most of the Warblers and other small insectivorous birds are usually to be found soon after their arrival in this county, and the only migratory birds I could discover were the Sand Martin, and a Chiff-chaff. On Monday morning I went ont early to another favourite locality, which I will call B, and very soon I noticed a Tree Pipit singing as usual, and a fine male Redstart. The same evening, going to A, I found about 50 Swallows and Sand-martins, two Redstarts, and several Tree-pipits. Tuesday morning I visited B and found three or four pairs of Whinchats, three pairs of Wheatears, and several Common Whitethroats. In the evening I went to A and found one Sedge Warbler and three Yellow Wagtails. Wednesday morning I went to A and saw and heard the Nightingale, the Cuckoo, and the Lesser Whitethroat. In the evening I went to B and saw about three dozen Yellow Wagtails (as they come to roost regularly every night, till they pair up), several Sedge Warblers, the Common Sand-piper, and the Landrail. The river Severn, having overflowed its banks, flooding several hundreds of acres during the night, I could not get round there dryshod. I hope to resume my journeys on Monday and find the Reed and Marsh Warblers, Red-backed Shrike and House Martin. I have seen the Swift to-day.

"AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS AND CAGES"
Is the title of

It is written by that well-known fancier, Mr. H. Norman ("Cage Birds" Artist-in-Chief) who has illustrated it with a wealth of helpful drawings. It also contains 10 lovely full-page photographic plates.

It must be on every bird-lover's book-shelf

who desires to thoroughly understand the proper Building, Fitting and Management of Aviaries, Bird-rooms and Cages.

THE GOLDEN ORIOLE IN CAPTIVITY.

SIR,—As the Golden Oriole is now an accepted show bird on the N.B.B. and M.C. list, I have ventured to send the following account of one in captivity, which recently appeared in "Country Life." The writer, "B. De Dedem," says: "I possess a Golden Oriole, who will be three years old in June next. As far as I know, it is the only specimen of an Oriole brought up in captivity. Nowhere have I been able to obtain any information about this bird, and at the Zoological Gardens, when I applied, I was told that they keep no specimens of these birds because of the difficulties inherent to bringing them up and the special care they require. The Oriole in my possession was taken out of the nest in the Department of the Correge (France), where some of these birds are to be found, although in small numbers, during the summer months, before they emigrate back to their country, Africa. The Oriole is very shy and reserved, each family living apart. They do not gather in bands. The one I have was brought up on the yellow of a hard egg, ants' eggs and little crickets caught in the gardens or meadows. When a year old the bird caught a chill in midwinter, when I was in Paris, and began to waste away. I was in great fear of losing it, when it was suggested to me to give it quinine, the bird suffering evidently from fever. I did so, giving for a few days a very small dose rolled in a crumb of bread, and soon it began to recover. The food it takes now is the pate Duquesne, a mixture which is given to pheasants and similar birds in winter. Apart from that it gets bread and fresh fruit. Its favourite fruit is the banana, for which it shows a predilection during the winter months, and on which its kind live in Africa, so I am told. In summer, in the country, it gets some live crickets, when to be found, and ants' eggs. Although the Oriole is very quick in killing wasps when they enter its cage, it does not eat these insects. The Oriole is a very clean bird, and rejoices in a bath. When in summer a shower falls, and the bird is put out on the balcony in its big cage, the first thing it does is to open its wings to let the raindrops penetrate its plumage. Then, like a clown, clinging by its feet to the stick, it slowly turns somersaults to receive the raindrops on its chest and lower parts of the body. At present my Oriole has a gold and green plumage and ruby eyes. I expect it to change its colour after three years of age into a black and golden plumage. Its song consists in various melodious notes, some in a very high key, and an imitation of the call of the Goldfinch, who is its companion in another cage on the same table. I should be glad to learn the experience of somebody else having a caged Oriole, this bird being so little known as yet."

BIRD CATCHING.

SIR,—Seeing "Constant Reader's" answer to "Anxious," in your issue of May 9th, I should like to give my experience in catching Bullfinches, as it may be of use to some of the readers of CAGE BIRDS, who, like myself, have not the chance of watching their traps continually. I do not use spring nets for several reasons. In the first place, I cannot watch them, and should a bird get in, a stray cat or dog is likely to come along when it is not wanted. In the second place, there are several disadvantages. In some cases they are very useful. I always use a trap cage of the type that was illustrated in CAGE BIRDS a few weeks back, by a kind reader; but he did not give the size of the cage, and I find a small trap cage is of no use for catching Bullfinches with. The size I use is 16 inches high, 12 inches long, and 10 inches wide. I tried a small trap with no success whatever; I found that the Bullfinches could stand on the top of the cage and pick all the bait without going in at all. A Bullfinch will clear everything at 4½ inches from his perches. For that reason I made a larger trap, and this makes them enter for the bait. I always use privet berries, for I find they cannot resist them, once they have tasted them. As to Bullfinches dying, I have had better luck with them than with Linnets. Here I may say I am not in the land of plenty (of Bullfinches), for I have only seen one pair since the close season; but I managed to catch fifteen (10 cocks and 5 hens) this winter, and I do not think I missed catching one that I heard calling. However, of the 15 three died (one cock and two hens), but I must say I had to nurse some of them, or I might have lost more. I remember catching one, one frosty morning, at daybreak, and of course he had had nothing to eat. I put him in a small call-cage I had by me, and gave him some seed to eat. But no; he was sulky, and would not eat. So at dinner-time I took him home, put him in with a hen Bullie and left him till night. When I went to him after dark he was sitting in the bottom of the cage as big as two ought to be. I took him out, put him in another cage and brought him into a strong light. Of course that woke him up a bit, although he was not very lively. But I found as soon as I put my hand near the cage he opened his mouth at me. I took a bunch of privet berries, and as soon as he opened his mouth, I put a privet berry in, and, of course, he shut it quickly, pinched the berry and tasted it. That started him for a berry or two. Then he would pop his head under his wing again. I kept on at him for an hour or more, and got two or three bunches of berries into him. The result was, next morning he fed off the privets alright, and in about three weeks I got 1s. 3d. for him. But this threw him into a cross moult. In once again thanking "Constant Reader" for his interesting letters in CAGE BIRDS, I will ask him to give us a small drawing of the nets he mentioned as being made "on the come-and-go principle," as I have never before heard of them. I now have a pair of clap nets. AN AMATEUR.

The Noisy Greenshank.

Among the migrants visiting our shores to breed is the rare Greenshank. It closely resembles the Redshank in structure and habits, nesting upon the swampy moors and in other suitable spots. It arrives in April and May, and during the latter part of the month makes its scanty nest of coarse vegetation. It is simply a hollow in the ground upon some dry spot, among its swampy surroundings. The eggs are buff in colour, boldly blotched and spotted, generally upon the larger end with dark brown. The Greenshank is even more noisy and anxious than its ally when its breeding haunts are invaded by man, flying wildly about and calling loudly

Dealing with Anxious Hens.

The most trying and difficult cases to deal with are those in which the hen begins to show an anxious desire to start nesting again when the first brood is only about a fortnight old. Fortunately the removal of the cock reduces the proportion of these cases, or, at least, that is my impression; but it does not remove them altogether. The best way to deal with such cases if the hens are noticed freshening early is to endeavour to keep them backward by giving a mild aperient in the water about every second night and changing it at breakfast time next morning to give cooling and fresh green food. A spray of young chickweed, a young leaf of lettuce gathered when about the size of a crown-piece, or a young tender tuft of the blooming heads of ground-sel, gathered fresh two or three times a day, will be much better for keeping the hen cool, and also for keeping her to the task of feeding, than a great bunch given once each day.

If none of these little items of management seem to succeed in keeping her back from nesting then there is nothing else to be done but to introduce the cock. But do not take this course until it is quite clear that the hen is bent on nesting and is going to lay, in all probability, whether the cock is returned or not.

What to do with the Young.

Of course, at this age the young cannot leave the nest, and will not do so in the most favourable circumstances for some days. Therefore a new nest box should be given which may be hung beside the old one, and when the cock is put in he must be carefully watched for a time to see how he is going to treat the young. He may possibly after a scrimmage with the hen settle down very quietly and begin to feed the young as well as if he had not been absent from them. Then if the hen also treats them kindly things will go smoothly. But the probability is that when a hen is very keen on nesting at this stage she has already begun to pluck the sprouting quills from the backs of the young, and is also bent on having the feathers that should clothe her young with which to make her second nest.

When this occurs and the cock seems none too kindly disposed towards them, it is about time for the fancier to look around for a pair of feeders to take to the brood. We have known a kind of wire dome to be placed over a brood in these circumstances, so that the parents could feed the young but not have full scope for their vices, and also the nest and young kept in a nursery hung on the cage front by day and returned to the proper position in the cage each night. But a pair of reliable feeders are by far the best, the easiest, and the safest way out of the difficulty.

Mating for Mules.

When one is about trying for Mules the first mating of the Finch is in nearly all cases the second brood of the season for the hen. The first brood is, or should be, one of pure Canaries, and on the principle of killing two birds with one stone it is always advisable for this mating to be with a related cock, so that the Mule-breeder, even whilst breeding a stock of Mules each year, may, at the same time, be slowly but surely improving his strain of hens and gradually perfecting them for breeding the coveted light Mules.

This will be a work of years, but the results are fairly well assured provided one sticks to his guns and perseveres with one good strain of hens. The fancier who fails and throws up Mule-breeding in disgust after years of unsuccessful attempts to breed a light specimen is he who fails to persevere with the same strain of hens. His disappointment after a few years' in-breeding gains the victory, and he throws them up and tries another strain, thus throwing away his former experience and beginning again practically from his original starting point.

But this is not the mating. The first brood of Canaries are, of course, reared by the hen alone, the cock having been removed as soon as she commenced to sit. Now as soon as the young are a few days old the Finch that is to be the second mate should be hung on the front of the cage if a single breeder, or placed in the second compartment with the wire slide in, if a double breeder is used, and then treated exactly as pointed out for introducing a cock Canary for the second round. But with the difference that in the case of a Finch the Canary should, if possible, remain alone until the young are out of the nest and ready to take the place of the cock either in the separate compartment of the breeder or the nursery cage, as the case may be.

Mating for Second Broods.

In cases where the cock has been taken away from the hen whilst the first brood was being hatched and reared, it very often becomes a difficult question for the young beginner to know when he may safely be returned to her in readiness for the second round. As the birds themselves vary so strikingly in individual temperament it is not an easy matter for anyone to suggest the best course for every particular case. To do so necessitates a certain amount of knowledge of the individual's characteristics, which is only to be gained by those having the personal management of the birds.

If the hen is a really good nurse and feeds well, and refrains from plucking, the best course in a general way is to allow her to remain alone with the young until they leave the nest and are quite safe enough to be shut off by themselves in the empty end of double-breeding cage, with the wire slide separating them from the hen, or, in the event of both ends of the breeder having hens with broods, or of single breeders being used, in a nursery cage hung on the front of the breeder. The hen will then continue to feed them through the wires when they call to her, and there is a fair chance of the cock also, if a kindly disposed one, following the hen's example when he is placed in the cage with her, and taking up a share of the feeding of the young.

True, this may be considered the ideal conditions, which do not turn up so often as the fancier would like to see them, any more than the ideal specimen as per standard requirements. To do this may seem needless waste of time to the beginner, who is all impatience to see another brood on the way, but in nearly every case it will be most economical in every way, besides assuring the safety of the first brood against maltreatment by either parent.

Of Prime Importance Now.

We have been tempted to enter so fully into these details just now because the importance of the subject is of the very greatest moment at this time when young birds will be leaving the nest in great numbers, and this is the most dangerous period of their lives for getting permanent injuries to the feet, and in all save perhaps a very small minority of cases which may be congenital, they are due to faulty and improper perches, and, therefore, are totally preventable. Do not have the perches placed too closely together for large varieties, and, above all, no matter what variety it may be, avoid having perches placed one above another in such a position that the birds have to hesitate and "take their measure," so to speak, before venturing on the jump, or the chances are that some day after indulging in a bit of horseplay and chasing each other about, one or more of the birds will suddenly cease its play and sit with one foot drawn up amongst its feathers. Such a bird should have particular notice taken of the condition of its claws for the next few days, as it is extremely likely to have one or more of its claws crippled and curled underneath the rest. As soon as this is noticed to be the case the bird should be caught and the toe gently massaged with warm olive oil, and then placed in its proper position, or as nearly so as circumstances will permit, and retained there by such appliances as we have already described.

Seeds and their Uses.

Having been questioned on several occasions lately about the kinds of seeds for feeding cage birds, and the best times to use them to the best advantage, the present time may be opportune for devoting a few notes to the subject for the especial benefit of the novice and tyro in bird-keeping. These notes will be written from the purely practical point of view of the ordinary, everyday fancier who uses the seeds as a more or less staple portion of the food of his birds, and we will, therefore, utterly ignore all such technical points as chemical analysis and theoretical "feeding values." Doubtless many conclusions arrived at will not, or may not, appear "right according to Cocker" in the view of the skilled laboratory expert, but there will at least be the satisfaction of knowing that the conclusions have been the outcome of practical usage, and have stood the test of many years of constant use in the hands of thousands of fanciers of all grades of knowledge and experience.

Canary Seed.

This may well be given first place, as it is, if not actually the most important, certainly one of the most important items in the bird keeper's larder. It is often sub-divided into about half a dozen varieties, and there are not wanting experts who profess to distinguish one from another and to give the place of its origin, from an examination of its external appearances. As a matter of fact, for all practical purposes Canary seed, whether it be grown in Spain, South America, or our own sunless England, is—well, just Canary seed. Given a good, fair-sized, clean, bright and sweet-flavoured seed, free from dirt, mustiness, and badly ripened grains, that is all the fancier need look for. To him the place of its birth and growth is, or may be, of supreme indifference.

For all varieties of Canaries it should form a staple article of diet all the year round, and should form something like a third part to a half part of the total bulk of their food. For nearly all seed-eating birds it should form a tangible and regular portion of diet, whilst for most of the more exclusive seed-eating foreign birds it should form about one-half of the bulk, the other half consisting of millet.

White Millet.

As Canary is the backbone of the Canary-keeper's larder so is millet the most important item in the food supply of foreign seed-eaters. This also is sub-divided into several varieties, but in this case it is with greater reason that the division is made as the seed varies considerably, not only in size and colour, but in food value. The dari, so common in poultry and pigeon mixtures, is in reality a species of millet, whilst the Indian millet, which is perhaps the other extreme with which bird fanciers are familiar, is scarcely larger than rape seed. The only varieties we need mention here are white, red, Indian, and spray millet.

The white millet is by far the most commonly used, and is preferred by the birds. If given an unlimited supply of this seed many foreign birds will refuse to touch any other, and live and thrive, and rear their young solely upon it, so that although it is popularly supposed to be of poor feeding value, it must certainly meet the simple requirements of these birds. However that may be, a mixture of equal parts of this seed and Canary will form a very good staple food for the majority of seed-eating foreign birds, and this may be varied from time to time by adding red or Indian millet to the extent of a third part of the bulk. These varying mixtures—varied only by way of a change for the birds—should form the staple all-the-year-round diet of the birds mentioned.

A COLUMN FOR FANCIERS.

Appended are brief particulars of some of "Cage Birds" SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS for keepers and lovers of birds, with post free prices.

"THE HYGIENE OF BIRD-KEEPING." - 1/1.
By W. Geo. Creswell M.D.
A most useful manual, thoroughly treating of modern hygiene in bird-keeping, by the most eminent living authority on the subject.

"SEPTIC FEVER OR CANARY PLAGUE." - 7d.
By R. H. Clarke, M.D.,
A very useful booklet concerning this dread disease. It is the only one published, and should be found in every bird-lover's library. Dr. Clarke has given the subject very special study.

"THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD CANARY." 1½d
By J. H. Payne.
A Lecture reprinted from Cage Birds, delivered by this leading judge and expert before the London and Provincial Ornithological Society, and pronounced by all experts to be a most valuable pamphlet concerning the breeding of the variety.

BREEDING CAGE LABELS, 1d. doz., 7 doz. 6d
A boon to all breeders. Neatly printed in sets of twelve, on perforated gummed paper. They can be torn off, and affixed to the breeding cage in a moment, and prevent all confusion. Useful alike to both small and large breeders of birds.

CARD BREEDING REGISTERS, 1d. each, 4 for 3d., 9 for 6d.
For hanging up in the birdroom. Printed on suitable stiff card, they are ruled to hold a complete record of the breeding results of six pairs of birds; invaluable for future reference, to ensure that knowledge of one's stock essential to accurate breeding.

LIVE BIRD LABELS, 24, 3d.; 50, 6d.; 100, 1/-.
For use when despatching live birds on journeys by rail, or to the shows, etc. Printed in red ink and gummed on back. The simplest, neatest, and best on the market.

NOTE PAPER & POSTCARDS, 250 for 2/-; 500 for 2/6.
Until further notice we have decided to supply below cost price artistic Memorandum Forms and stout postcards, with name, address, twelve words of particulars, and blocks of any special variety of bird at half cost for cash. Carriage paid to any address in the U.K. Our latest style of note-head and postcard has been universally admired, and we will gladly send specimens to anyone enclosing stamped addressed envelope.

BLOCKS OF BIRDS, 1/6 each, 5 for 6/-, or 9 for 10/-.
For inserting in advertisements and for printing memorandums blocks of all kinds of birds at above low prices can be supplied. Larger blocks to order at cheapest possible rates. These dainty little blocks immensely enhance the appearance of note paper, postcards, and advertisements.

PICTURE POSTCARDS, 1d. each; set of six, 6d.
The most delightful and appropriate postcards of Canaries, British Birds, and Hybrids on the market, executed in colours by Mr. H. Norman. Ideal for Fanciers' correspondence. All represent exact and correct show types and have accompanying descriptions. State which bird or birds are required, or whether a mixed selection is preferred.
The latest set is entitled, "Pairs Matched for Breeding"; very educational art postcards. Price 3d. set of 8.

ORNAMENTAL PLATES, 1/- & 1/6 each.
The following coloured plates of cage Birds can be obtained mounted on stiff card and gelatined. This process makes them washable and gives them the handsome appearance and all the durability of framed plates under glass:—Bullfinch, Blackbird and Robin, Border Fancy Canary, Bullfinch Hybrids, Cinnamon Canary, Cinnamon Marked Yorkshires, Foreign Finches, Goldfinch and Bullfinch, Hybrids (popular), Lancashire and Lizards, Mules (popular), Norwich (Yellow), Parrakeets, Yorkshires. Price 1s. each. Crests, Desirable Aliens (Foreign Birds), Larks and Pipits, Norwich (Blaze of Colour), Wagtails and Stonechat. Price 1s. 6d. each.
Also a padded plate of KINGFISHER having all the appearance of a hand painting executed on ivory. A most charming ornament for brackets, occasional tables, etc. Price 1s. All are post free.
Why spend large sums on decorating the house with other pictures?

CAGE BIRDS CHARTS.

No. 7.—THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD CANARY: ITS EXHIBITION POINTS AND FAILINGS.

(Notes on this Drawing by Mr. C. A. House will be found on page 473.)

Mule and Hybrid Breeding.

Domestic Duties.

When the hen has gone to nest and laid her third egg part the Goldie from her altogether; he seldom feeds either hen or young, but is more likely to molest and worry her. The Linnet and Greenfinch are often just the opposite, and very attentive to the hens if left with them. The best results, however, are obtained when the hen is allowed to rear the young by herself. The young will appear in good time, and require to be treated the same as young Canaries, although they seem to take more feeding and grow much more quickly. As a rule they leave the nest at about three weeks, and should be weaned on to plain Canary seed by the time they are six weeks old. A little hemp and teazle occasionally ought to keep them in good condition until they moult, when, if you intend to show, you must colour-feed either Mules or Hybrids if you want to stand any chance of getting a "card."

About Goldfinches.

If breeding Dark Goldfinch Mules, the best kind of Finch to use is the Siberian, as rich coloured and as large as possible, with a good blaze. You must not expect to get good Mules from small dull-coloured Finches—here, as in other respects, class will tell, and you will find that the faults in your Finch will appear in the young much easier than the good points which you are trying to obtain. The Siberian and Russian Finches (the former is the larger bird) will require treating in precisely the same manner as your British Goldie, with the exception that they should not have quite as large proportion of hemp for their daily food. Sunflower seed may be given in moderation, say, every other day, and is a very valuable adjunct to their diet if the shells are lightly cracked to enable them to get at the kernel within.

A good deal of discussion seems to go on among devotees of the hobby about the superior qualities of the Cheveral, Peafhroat or Pied Finches, an dthe increased possibility of breeding light or clear mules by using a Goldfinch possessed of one or the other of these peculiar markings. The Cheveral is distinguished by a white band dividing the blaze under the lower mandible into two portions, and the Peathroat by a white spot under the beak about the size of a grain of hemp seed. It is now generally understood that none of these characteristics have any influence in producing the coveted object, and the same may be said of Albino or Pied Finches of any species, the peculiar colouration being a freak of nature, which is not reproduced in the young even when breeding with a pair of abnormal coloured birds.

If you have the right strain of Canary hens to work with you may look for the same proportions of light Mules from your Black-legged Finch as you will be likely to get by using either a thrice house-moulted, or Cheveral, or Peathroat Finch. Of course, there is an advantage to be obtained by using a house-moulted bird for Mule breeding, but it is not in the light feather producing direction, but because they come into breeding condition sooner than the wild Black-legged Finch, who has naturally been somewhat hampered with the change of diet when brought into confinement.

The Canary-Bullfinch Hybrid.

The Canary-Bullfinch Hybrid will be acknowledged by all to be one of the triumphs of the art. This cross it was for for many years thought to be impossible to produce. All doubt is set at rest, however, and one may see this rare and beautiful Hybrid at almost any show of note.

We have not any authentic case of the Bullfinch-Canary having been bred; that is, the father of the Mules being a Bullfinch cock. Many fanciers try their luck each season with this cross and up to the present time, I believe I am correct in saying that all these attempts have been failures, though I must confess that I see no reason why it should not be accomplished.

When breeding with a hen Finch a large roomy cage or aviary is desirable, although we do hear occasionally of breeders being successful who have had their Hybrid pair up in an "ordinary two-compartment breeding cage," the slide in the middle having been withdrawn and so letting them have possession of the full length of the cage. See that the perches are low down, as Bullie hens in particular will often build a fair nest, but will not lay therein—the majority of them seem to drop their eggs from the perch. On this account it is advisable to have a thick layer of sawdust and bran mixed, or fine chaff quite an inch and a half deep all over the bottom of the cage.

What to Aim at.

The Canary cock which you intend to run with the Bully hen should be a large yellow green, nice and cobby and without any light ticks or feathers. What you want to aim at is to breed a nice dark well-marked Hybrid showing the parentage of both species distinctly and free from any light splashes or uneven ticks which, if present, will spoil the appearance of the Hybrid. I think you will agree with this.

This cross is generally nicely pencilled on the back and should show the marking of the Bullfinch distinctly on the head.

The Greenfinch-Bullfinch is another very fine combination of types and sometimes resembles the Canary-Bullie cross very strikingly. In this case a good way to distinguish between the two is by the absence of pencilling on the back of the former.

Some Difficult but Popular Crosses.

The Redpoll-Bullfinch is considered by many to be one of the most difficult crosses to produce and for a long time it was thought to be an impossible one. It has been bred, however, during the past year and it appeared at one or two of the shows.

The Goldie-Bullie is another popular Hybrid, and many will be trying for this cross next season, inspired perhaps by the stormer (said to have been bred from foreign Finches), which has made its appearance and has won in such grand style for one of the most prominent fanciers this past season or two.

The Linnet-Bullie is another very beautiful cross; the breast colours of the parents often seem to be put to shame beside the delicate tint on the waistcoat of their young Hybrid.

Bullie and Greenie Hens as Feeders.

The Bullfinch hen, although she will often sit, seldom rears her young successfully in confinement and on this account the fancier ought always to have a fair number of feeding hens for testing the eggs as they are laid. On the other hand the Greenfinch hen is often a splendid feeder and will make some Canary hens blush, though I think they have a tendency to give the young too much hard seed from the crop before it has had time to turn milky, and this mode of feeding sometimes upsets the stomach of the chicks when they are very small.

On this account they should have a watchful eye kept upon their style of feeding. Supply your Bullie hens with young shoots off fruit trees bearing buds; shoots of rose tree, if covered with green fly or blight, are always acceptable, the insects being a valuable diet for the young of all the Finches, helping, as it does, to make their rearing in confinement a success.

Many delightful Hybrids may be produced, such as Linnet-Greenfinch, Goldfinch-Greenfinch, Goldfinch-Siskin, Redpoll-Siskin, Siskin-Linnet, Greenfinch-Linnet, etc.; and when writing or speaking of any of these crosses the female parent is always mentioned last.

You may try for many of these crosses and if not successful at first it is no use your throwing up the sponge. One good Hybrid is a good season's work if it turns out to be a first-class show specimen.

Essentials to Success.

In your Hybrids as well as your Mules you must always aim at size. If you can get foreign Finches you stand a better chance of getting large birds, as some of the foreigners at any rate are much larger than our native Finches of the same species.

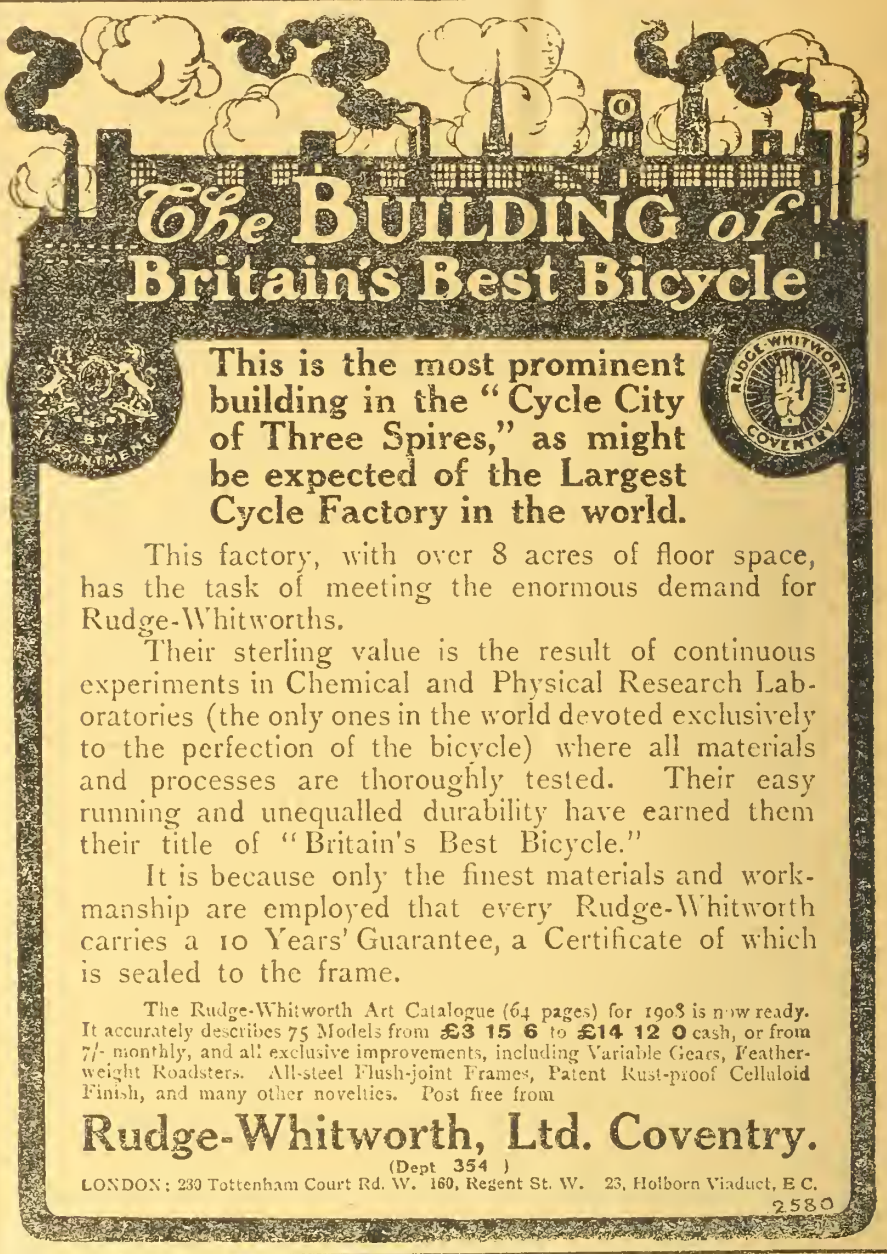
See that your hen Finches have a good stock of nesting material always hanging near them, and try and get it as near as possible like that they use naturally when breeding in a wild state. A good way to study this is by going to the local museum and studying the nests of the birds you are attempting to breed with.

Favoured Homes.

In an aviary a few old Thrushes' or Blackbirds' nests stuck about are often quickly tenanted and lined in a surprisingly short time. The old-fashioned, wooden nest-box, screened with twigs and branches, is also a favourite site.

The Chaffinch-Canary and Canary-Chaffinch crosses have been repeatedly tried without success; the only occasion when the Chaffinch will cross successfully is when paired to a Bramblefinch hen, or the Bramblefinch cock paired to a Chaffinch hen. This is a cross which must be tried for in an aviary.

In conclusion I may say that Hybrid-breeders never had a better chance of success than they have at the present day, as by subscribing to and reading the premier journal, CAGE BIRDS, week by week, they increase their knowledge from a reliable source, and can thus obtain from experts who have made this hobby their life-long study, the necessary advice for the successful keeping and breeding in either cage or aviary of all the species of birds which have been proved suitable subjects for confinement.



This is the most prominent building in the "Cycle City of Three Spires," as might be expected of the Largest Cycle Factory in the world.

This factory, with over 8 acres of floor space, has the task of meeting the enormous demand for Rudge-Whitworths.

Their sterling value is the result of continuous experiments in Chemical and Physical Research Laboratories (the only ones in the world devoted exclusively to the perfection of the bicycle) where all materials and processes are thoroughly tested. Their easy running and unequalled durability have earned them their title of "Britain's Best Bicycle."

It is because only the finest materials and workmanship are employed that every Rudge-Whitworth carries a 10 Years' Guarantee, a Certificate of which is sealed to the frame.

The Rudge-Whitworth Art Catalogue (64 pages) for 1908 is now ready. It accurately describes 75 Models from £3 15 6 to £14 12 0 cash, or from 7/- monthly, and all exclusive improvements, including Variable Gears, Feather-weight Roadsters. All-steel Flush-joint Frames, Patent Rust-proof Celluloid Finish, and many other novelties. Post free from

THE YOUNG NATURALIST.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given each week for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age, and must state from where stories are taken.

Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

*The Lark is Up.

The Lark is up—I hear him sing.
See how he mounts upon the wing!
And with a voice so loud and strong,
Pours forth to Heaven his thrilling song.

I listened to his early hymn,
While yet the dawning light was dim,
And bent my head for very shame
That from my heart no music came.

Oh shame! to let a little bird
Thus get the start and first be heard!
Come, then, and let us tune our throats,
And join its song with grateful notes.

—Sent by Gladys High (aged 9), 48, Church Road, Leyton, Essex.

A Strange Nesting Place.

The Wagtail usually builds its nest in a shrubbery; but not long ago one adventurous pair built theirs on a small piece of framework underneath a third-class smoking carriage. Four young birds were hatched and reared under these exceptional circumstances.—Sent by H. South (aged 13), 43, Bedford Road, Ilford, Essex.

The Sprightly Little Robin.

It is said that when the Robin perches high, it is a sign of fine weather. The sprightly manner, full dark eye, and sidelong turn of the head in this bird give it an air of sagacity and inquisitiveness, which together with its confidence has gained its friends. The nest is frequently placed on a bank, in a hole of a wall, or by roots of trees, and in concealed places. If the nest is not hidden by the foliage the birds contrive an artificial covering of dry leaves; and when the female leaves her eggs, she sometimes covers them in the same manner so that the strewing of leaves, mentioned in the old ballad of "The Babes in the Wood," is true to the habits of the Robin.—Sent by John Stewart (aged 13), 55, Princess Street, Nelson, Lancashire.

*Our Knowing Canary.

I have a Canary which was the wildest bird I have ever seen; but in a few months it became very tame and friendly, and now we always keep its cage door open. It knows us all and will always tell us if it has been neglected in any way. If it wants water it will fly on my head and then to the jug or basin; if seed, it will fly to the seed box. It knows where everything belonging to it is kept. —Sent by E. Miller (aged 12), 1, Waverley Street, Stockton-on-Tees.

Canaries : Their Management & Exhibition.

By J. B. WATERMAN (Dulwich).

This is the Essay awarded FIRST PRIZE in "Cage Birds" Competition in Section One. Readers should note the announcement concerning this Competition which appears on page 475 this week.

The Period of Incubation.

When the nest is complete, look out for eggs. As these are laid, they should be taken away and placed on a little bran in a box, returning them on the evening the third is deposited. Prior to putting the eggs back the nest should be given a good dusting of some powerful insect powder. As each egg is removed, it should be replaced by a dummy, these eggs being, of course, taken out of the nest when the "simon pures" are returned.

The period of incubation is usually fourteen days, but if the weather be warm, and the hen has sat closely, young birds may be expected in thirteen days. While the hen is sitting, give only the best Spanish Canary seed, as this treatment sometimes prevents the hen going to nest again too soon after hatching her brood. If no chicks are out on the thirteenth day (they will soon let you know if they are about by their "cheep, cheep"), give the old birds overnight a supply of egg-food and hemp seed, so that they may commence feeding their family (if any) at break of day; for birds are very early risers.

The hemp seed should be given whole, as this keeps the hen longer off the nest, and reduces the risk of sweating to a minimum. Give no green food whatever till the young birds are three days old, when a small supply may be offered with, of course, egg-food, three times a day, and a good supply of hemp, Canary, and rape.

Attending the Young.

At a month old the young birds may be safely removed to do for themselves, and they should be given a supply of egg-food and a little hemp and Canary (crushed). The quantity of soft food should be gradually reduced as the youngsters grow older, and they should be on hard seed by the time they are from six to seven weeks old, dispensing altogether with egg-food.

Birds are liable at this age to be attacked by stomach troubles, when they become puffed out like a ball of wood; if this occurs they should be taken off hard seed and put on a diet of bread and milk until better, when seed can again be resumed.

Some fanciers object to giving young birds water to drink, but I think it is cruel to keep them without it. I always give my young birds water, but I put into each drinkerful ten drops of Fellows' Syrup of Hypophosphites, and instead of my birds getting inflammation they have always grown rapidly and vigorously. This little "tip" about the syrup was given me by one of the most successful Yorkshire breeders and I can recommend it with every confidence.

If exhibition stock is being bred, Canary marking-rings should be used. These can be affixed to the bird's legs as soon as they are taken from their parent. The rings are numbered consecutively and each number should be carefully entered in a pedigree book (such as the stock-book, which may be obtained from the office of CAGE BIRDS) together with the description of the birds bred from. By this means it is always easy to trace exactly how the birds are bred.

Preparing Exhibition Birds.

At eight weeks old the best and most promising-looking of the youngsters should be placed separately in a nice roomy cage to be moulted and colour-fed. This latter should at first be given weak every day, gradually increasing the strength as the moult proceeds, till nearly the end, when the strength can be again reduced; and when a nice even colour has been procured, the colour-food can be discontinued altogether. It is advisable, however, if the birds are shown much, to give a teaspoonful of the food occasionally, as they are liable to lose a flight or tail feather in transit.

While on colour-food the birds would, of course, have a good supply of their ordinary seed, the owner, not forgetting a liberal quantity of linseed, and the aforementioned gold of pleasure, as these will put a nice sheen and finishing touch on the plumage.

The birds must also have access to plenty of clean water, a bath being hung on the outside of the cage on every bright morning. Never allow birds to bathe after mid-day, as they do not then get sufficiently dry before roosting time.

Birds will not require to be hand-washed till after the first few shows, and all information as to this very delicate operation will be found clearly described in "House's Canary Manual." The birds should occasionally be run into show cages for an hour or so, and if they are spoken to kindly and coaxed perserveringly, they will not be attacked with "stage fright" when being handled by judges at the shows.

Some Show Matters.

Before sending the birds to an exhibition, let the show cages be spotlessly clean with the bottoms nicely covered with Canary Seed. Pack the birds carefully in boxes or hampers, and not in brown or other paper, as this gives the show officials an enormous amount of extra work and sometimes these flimsy wrappers cannot be found at the end of the show, and then there is nothing in which to wrap up the birds for the return journey.

Also never forget to send water-tins, care being taken that these do not leak, as if they do the bird is likely to be without water for many hours. I have known water-tins sent completely riddled with holes, and new pots are not always available on the spur of the moment. Fanciers will see the importance of this point. Always send exhibits off early, so as to ensure their arrival at the show in good time, as nothing is more annoying than to see one's cage bearing the card, "too late for competition," especially after the expenditure of much time and trouble in getting the birds into the "pink."

If the birds fail to receive judicial notice at the first exhibition, they are sent to never lose heart or think ill of the judge, but make up your mind to try and do better next time, and if exhibiting is done in this happy spirit the coveted "First and Special" is sure to be gained in the end. When this is achieved attention can be directed to some of the valuable cups and kindred trophies given by the specialist societies, and should success attend your efforts here the highest ambition of a Fancier will have been reached. Never sit down and say, I shall never win this, that, or the other. Many of the men who are famous in the Fancy to-day commenced in a very humble way, and this fact should act as an incentive to the beginner to go and do likewise.

To revert for a moment to the bird-room: care must be taken, especially during the breeding and moulting seasons, to rigidly keep down the red mite, for once that scourge gets the upper hand—good-bye to success.

The cages should be washed thoroughly in warm water (not boiling, as this causes the wood to warp) into which some carbolic fluid has been put. When they are dry, the following lotion should be well rubbed into the crevices with a small brush:—Equal parts spirits of wine and turpentine, into which a piece of camphor and soda the size of a walnut has been dissolved. This will quickly give all vermin its quietus.

The Moulting Period.

Never let the birds go to nest after the beginning of July, as they will then have ample time in which to recuperate in readiness for the moult. This trying ordeal commences with the old birds towards the end of July and continues till September and sometimes longer if the birds are a bit below par. If the birds are intended for exhibition they will, of course, have to be colour-fed in the same way as the young ones, a start being made with the food before the birds commence to drop any feathers, so as to get it well into the blood before the new plumage commences to grow.

The birds during this period must be kept very quiet, and the food should be of a nourishing character. They should also have a liberal supply of nasturtium flowers, as these are not only an excellent tonic, but are full of colouring matter which is easily assimilated by the birds.

The bath must also be given frequently, a few quassia chips being previously immersed in the water. When they are well on with the moult, a small piece of carrot can be offered as this will tighten up the feathers. Should the sun be very powerful, the direct rays must be kept from the birds by a curtain, but I am no believer in the system of placing the birds in semi-darkness adopted by some fanciers, as I think plenty of good, fresh air is most essential to the birds' welfare at this trying period.

Help from Societies.

Should the moult be successfully got through the birds will be ready for the show bench, and the same rules will apply to them as to the young stock aforementioned. It is advisable that the beginner should join a local cage bird society, and also the specialist club, which caters for the particular variety of bird he has taken up with. He can then attend the lectures and demonstrations provided from time to time, which will be found very instructive and useful; in addition he will be able to take an occasional "feeler" with his birds in the members' classes at his club's shows, with a view to the open exhibitions.

I have perhaps dealt with this subject a little more exhaustively than I originally intended, but I think that, if the instructions I have endeavoured to give are carefully followed out, and with the assistance of CAGE BIRDS every week, the beginner will soon find himself making his mark on the show bench.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

In the Month of May.

Of all the months of the year May is perhaps the most enchanting. To the nature-lover every hour is full of pleasure and enjoyment; the rich green turf, the fresh young leaves in the hedgerows, the budding elms, and the abundance of wild flowers, together with the music of the birds—these make open-air life all that one can desire. So rich in incidents and happenings of wild life are the fields and woods that hours spent indoors appear like hours wasted. Nearly all the migrants are with us. The voice of the Cuckoo can be heard on every side. The Swallows have returned to their old homes, and so active and full of life do they appear to be that one can almost fancy their home-coming is a birdy merry-making and that they are as pleased and delighted at being once again in the summer haunts, as we humans are to see them. Every bird one sees now is worthy of extra attention, for so fast do fresh arrivals crowd upon each other that during the day one may note several strangers not seen since last autumn. The Flycatcher, Nightjar, and Shrike bring up the rear of the feathered army. These will be with us during the month. The two former are generally plentiful in this district, nearly every lane and country road having it's dozen or so of Flycatchers darting into the open and returning with graceful fluttering of wings, while the soft churring of the Nightjar can be heard in the wooded valley of Chipstead, where the old road, bordered upon either side by fir and other plantations, is well known to nature-lovers. There the Nightingale nests in security, and the smaller Warblers are plentiful. Such beauty places are becoming rarer, but there are still a few left in old England. Fortunately for us, wild birds are not easily driven from well-known haunts.

Do Birds Reason?

The flocks of Starlings, odd parties of Wagtails and Pipits which frequent the sheep folds, will allow the shepherd to get quite close to them, in many cases simply hopping out of his way; but if a stranger to the fold happens to go with him in his daily round the birds act quite differently. They evidently know the difference, and are at once suspicious, and will keep well away from both of them. The same thing can be seen when Rooks and Gulls are following the plough. Although it is doubtful if birds can count, they see some difference in the objects before them, and are consequently nervous about getting too close. I have heard a farmer remark that he firmly believed the Rooks on his farm knew when Sunday came round, as he could get very near them on that day. The shot gun was left at home in the rack.

The Number of Eggs Birds Lay.

As far as we know there appears to be no definite law why some species lay more eggs than others. Take, for instance, two of our larger birds of the woodlands and common—the Jay and the Nightjar. The former bird will lay from five to seven eggs in a clutch, and the latter two eggs only, which appear to be sufficient to keep up the race of Nightjars. The larger clutch is no more than enough to prevent the Jay from becoming extinct. Both birds are subject to considerable persecution, and it is doubtful whether, if both species were left entirely to themselves, either would increase much faster than the other. We can only presume that the number of each species is just sufficient to keep up the correct balance of nature, although man has so interfered with bird life that it has enabled some species to considerably overrun their allotted numbers; others (mostly birds of prey) have been reduced much lower than Nature designed. For this interference we are plagued with too many of some of the less desirable birds.

To Protect Wildfowling.

We have received a booklet containing the rules of "The Wildfowlers' Association of Great Britain and Ireland." The objects of the association are, among others, "To uphold and protect the rights of wild-fowlers of all classes; to suppress jealous shooting, to encourage an interest in wildfowl ornithology, and to assist students of the subject." We also notice with pleasure that "attempts will be made to beneficially regulate the close and open seasons for wildfowl." This will naturally be of great benefit to the members of the association, for without proper protection in the way of a close season during nesting the number of wildfowl would soon become considerably less, but it will also allow strange fowl the opportunity to settle, at least for a period, upon the marshes and seashore without being at once bagged by the indiscriminate shooter. The members of the association will no doubt jealously guard their rights, suppress poaching and poachers, and so prevent the loafer from destroying everything living that comes within range.

ALWAYS USE OUR

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Unerossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6 according to size.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

RINGS The Oldest Ring Maker in The World.
My 1908 improved rings are now ready, also my Pedigree Books. These rings are the finest ever put on a bird's leg. All the numbers are embossed, and not same as all other makes, stamped in; therefore cannot fill up with dirt; all edges are neatly rounded. They are not cheap flimsy rings that birds can nip to the leg and cause inflammation, as many a good bird has been lost through cheap rings. Prices as before, 6d. per dozen, 5/- per gross. Pedigree Books, 6d. each. Agents apply at once; enclose stamp for terms.

SANDIFORD'S FAMOUS ROYAL RED COLOUR FEEDS.

READ THIS. Mr. E. Godley, Rishton, May 11th, 1908.—I may say your colour feed was extra last season, and I won more prizes than ever before which was 117 Firsts, 93 Seconds, 84 Thirds, 50 Fourths, 126 Specials.

My colour was marvellous. Send me ½ cwt. Royal Red at once.

At Crystal Palace Show, 1908. Every 1st prize winner, including championship diploma in open Norwich classes, were moulted on Royal Red. Every 1st, 2nd, and 3rd prize winner, including championship diploma in Cinnamon section, were moulted on Royal Red. These are the classes where you can't win without colour. Mr. J. F. Bishop, Nottingham, writes, May 6th, 1908: "I have much pleasure in stating all my birds have been moulted on your Royal Red feed at the Crystal Palace Show, 1908. I won three champion classes in Norwich, including five specials for the best Norwich in the show, also many other prizes at Nottingham, Derby, Ilkeston, Wellingboro, etc." Mr. E. Baker, Cowes, May, 1908, writes: "Your Royal Red feed worked wonders again last season, as all will know with my winnings, which included three firsts at last Palace Show." Mr. J. C. Barnes, Sheffield, writes: "February, 1908.—Sir,—For the benefit of the fancy I have great pleasure in informing you of the wonderful depth of colour I got in my birds last season by using your Royal Red. They came out exceedingly hot and beautifully bright, and not in the least bricky. At Sheffield Show, Nov. 8th-9th, I won silver challenge cup (making three years in succession), silver medal for hottest bird, special for best Buff cock, special for best hen, eight firsts, nine seconds, five thirds, and other honours. For last 10 years I have used no other feed, and I have great pleasure in recommending its use to all who are ambitious of procuring the highest colour at lowest cost." All Mr. Godley's noted winning Cinnamons, also all Mr. Dormer's Cinnamons, were moulted solely on Royal Red. Mr. J. Wilcock, Eccleshill, writes: "May 7th, 1908.—Sir,—Just a few lines to let you know all my birds have done extra well on your Royal Red feed. I was third for the great Yorkshire challenge cup, second for the Cinnamon-marked trophy, and third Shackleton trophy, and winner of L. and P.O.S. Cup, London; also won 50 specials, 62 firsts, 59 seconds, 51 thirds, 35 fourths, beside 100 other prizes, and second for Yorkshire Club specials. I think this speaks extra well for the grand bright rich colour I got, which pleases our judges so well. Send me half-cwt. at once." Have scores more, but above should prove enough to satisfy you or anyone that there is only one colour feed on this earth—that's Sandiford's Royal Red. Prices Royal Red, 1 lb. 2/-, 2 lb. 3/3, 5 lb. 7/6; 14 lb. 17/-. Hot Natal, 2/- lb., 2lb. 3/8. All carriage paid. Wholesalers and agents write for terms.

When Quails were Numerous.

The following interesting item is taken from an old book:—Quails are still numerous in the East and Northern Africa, but we seldom hear of such flights as must have been common at the time mentioned. Near Constantinople in the autumn the sun is often nearly obscured by the prodigious flights of Quails, which alight on the coast of the Black Sea, near the Bosphorus, and are caught by means of nets spread on high poles planted along the cliffs some yards from its edge, against which the birds, exhausted by their passage over the sea, strike themselves and fall. In October, 1829, the Sultan sent orders to one of his Admirals to catch four hundred dozen. In three days they were collected and brought to him alive in small cages.

Judges, Messrs. Summers and Chadwick. Also on May 17th, when 38 birds sang in heats. The Lancashire birds sang again. 1st, Bentley; 2nd, Stead; 3rd, Hardcastle; 4th, shared between Wigfield and Clegg. Judges, Messrs. Hinson, Crane, and Mawson.—T. Summers, Hon. Sec.

BLACKBURN.

The Blackburn Linnet S.A. held their members' annual singing contest at club headquarters, Old Red Lion, Smig Brook, on May 9th, when 25 birds competed for seven prizes. 1st, Rostron; 2nd, Dobson; 3rd, W. B. Bentley; 4th, D. Bentley; 5th, Fender; 6th, Marsden; and 7th, Hayhurst. We hope all Linnet fanciers will not forget the great All-England singing contest on June 6th.—R. Hayhurst, Sec.

DURHAM.

Linnet Contest, held at Burton Hall, Gilesgate, on May 16, when 62 birds were entered for the five prizes given. This is the largest entry ever known in the county. Most of the champions were present:—1, 2, Fuller (Sacriston); 3, Mills; 4, Brady (Brandon); 5, Marchant. Book-keeper, Mr. W. Fairless; timekeeper, Mr. J. Stout. Judge, Mr. Geo. Reed (Brandon).

CLUB REPORTS.

WOLVERHAMPTON AND DIS. C.B.S.

Meeting held at Swan and Peacock Hotel on May 12th. A good number of Fanciers were present to hear Mr. Turpin's lecture on the Roller Canary. This was listened to with great interest, and the discussion that followed will, no doubt, prove a great help to many of the Roller Fanciers present. The meeting was brought to a close by a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Turpin.—F. Howes.

PARTICK AND DISTRICT C.B.C.

Monthly meeting held in Joiners' Hall, on May 14th, a fair attendance of members being present. Mr. Burnett gave a very interesting and instructive lecture on "Colour Feeding and the Rearing of of Young Canaries and Mules, etc.," which was very closely followed. A few questions were asked, and were answered to the satisfaction of everyone present. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Burnett brought a very interesting meeting to a close.—J. Henderson, Secretary.

W. OF SCOTLAND N.M.B. & F.B.A.

Usual monthly meeting held on May 2nd in the Templars' Hall, Ingram Street, Glasgow, Mr. T. A. Boyd (President) in the chair. It was agreed to have a first feather show on the first Saturday in July, the judges to be appointed at the next meeting. The ramble has been postponed till a later date, owing to the former date being booked by another party. Intending new members should enrol now to enable them to compete for the medals, etc., at the first feather show. The secretary will supply all information on receipt of a post-card.—Geo. Smart, Secretary, Carmyle, Glasgow.

POPLAR AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

A special meeting was held on 15th May. The chair was taken by Mr. T. G. Hunt. Two new members were enrolled, and the rules of the society were finally decided on. I hope to have manual ready within the next fortnight or so. Members please note. The following officers were elected:—Vice-chairman, Mr. J. T. Hammond; auditors, Messrs. H. Priseman and H. Cole; and Mr. J. E. Mitchell was elected on committee. Our shows will be held as follows: Young stock, early in July (date to be announced later); judge, Mr. C. A. House. Annual show, November 14th; judge, Mr. J. Robson. Our chairman, Mr. T. G. Hunt, has kindly promised to present the society with a cup to be won by the bird with most points at the above shows.—H. W. Cook, Secretary.

GREEN CANARY ASSOCIATION.

At monthly meeting held April 23rd at Oldham Hall, Renshaw-street, Liverpool, Mr. Metcalfe presiding, a long discussion took place on the advisability of having a rule book to carry in pocket, which might also do as a pence-card. The secretary was instructed to get together all rules, etc., that had been passed since the rules were last printed and place them before the next meeting, when the matter will be further gone into. It was also decided that as the cost of summoning the members for certain special meetings was so great, in future all members, and the business to be brought forward, be put through the Fancy Press. Will members please make a note of this. The next meeting will be held on May 28th at Oldham Hall at 8 o'clock. The business will be the selection of judge and schedule for young show, the resignation of chairman, and other important matters. If any member wishes to give a special for young show, or to bring forward anything in connection with the show, or other business, and is not able to attend the meeting, will he communicate with the secretary. Letters will have every attention.—S. Hadwin, Sec.

PENZANCE AND DISTRICT F.A.

The annual meeting was held at the Rechabite Hall on May 13th. The balance-sheet showed receipts of £79 15s. 10d. (including a balance from last year of £2 13s. 10d.), and an expenditure of £73 4s. 10d., leaving a balance in hand of £6 11s. 10d. The following elections took place:—Chairman, Mr. W. J. Kelynack; vice-chairman, Mr. Ernest Michell; hon. treasurer, Mr. Geo. H. Hall; hon. secretary, Mr. J. Pearce Sampson, 4, Parade Street, Penzance; hon. auditor, Mr. T. H. L. Perry; Cage Bird Committee, Messrs. W. C. Bodinnar, D. Williams, A. Taylor, W. H. Batten, F. Richards, J. H. Bounden, J. Carne, R. Gendall, and S. O. Watkins; President, P. T. Chirgwin, Esq.; vice-presidents, The Mayor (A. K. Barnett, Esq.), Sir Clifford J. Coty, Bart., M.P., Alderman J. H. Tonking, Councillors J. Fuzzy and J. V. Thomas, Col. Cornish, Major Harvey, D.S.O., and Messrs. W. H. Coulson, D. Howell, E. A. Saunders, J. P. Milton, S. G. Bazeley, C. E. Venning, W. Badgery, jun., E. Hall, and W. Colenso, jun. The tenth show will be held on November 27th at the Central Hall. Mr. J. North (Reading) was appointed cage bird judge. The cage bird circular of "Alteration of Rules" was approved of. The election of new members (open membership) closed the meeting.—J. Pearce Sampson, Hon. Sec.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE C.B.S.

Meeting held May 7th, when Mr. Currah presided. The schedule for annual show was drawn up. It was decided to add extra classes (over last year) to almost all sections. In the Norwich section two classes were added for natural-coloured birds. It was arranged to have four classes for pairs for breeding purposes, viz., Norwich, Crests, Yorkshires, and Borders, as the members thought it was hardly fair for all varieties to compete in one class. A class was added to the Cinnamon and the British Finch sections for novices (open). In the Yorkshire section Mr. Crawhall, who is always to the fore, guaranteed four classes for cinnamon marks. In the event of receiving the patronage of the Yorkshire Canary clubs we will have about 20 classes for Yorkshires. The arranging of the Border fancy classes was left with the committee pending answers from Border Fancy clubs. Another class was added to the Foreign bird section, making four classes. As a considerable amount of trouble arises in members' classes through cocks being shown in hen classes, it was decided to strike out all the hen classes. The novice members' classes will be the same as last year. The following were elected members:—Messrs. J. Wood, W. Prior, Curry, Bell, Caisby, T. Anderson, C. Rowley, T. Tomlinson, W. T. Turner, and M. Atkinson. After the business, the novices were given the opportunity of asking questions. The question of hens not feeding their young caused a deal of discussion. Mr. Currah said that up till the present he had been most fortunate, not having lost a young one. He attributed this to using Spratt's puppy (dog) biscuits in place of bread, or other biscuits, with his egg food. Mr. Macdonald stated that he was having a lively time, as his hens would not feed a bit; he had managed to save a good few by hand feeding. A member asked for a cure for moving diarrhœa. The following remedies were recommended: milk sop and maw seed, lime water, charcoal, chalk, and cold tea.—Curry and Hutchinson, Secs.

PAISLEY AND DIS. O.S.

A general meeting was held at 2, St. James-street, on May 15th, Mr. Wm. Urquhart presiding. The chief item was the consideration of the balance-sheet for 1907. After a little discussion it was passed. Office-bearers in connection with our next show were elected. The prize list was approved of. After due consideration we altered the date of our show to the 10th October. Fanciers please note the alteration.—John Kelly, Sec.

YORK C.B.S.

Usual monthly meeting held on May 11th at headquarters, All Saints' Schoolroom. The chair was occupied by Mr. T. Wright. There were about 20 members present. It was decided that our membership radius be extended to 15 miles of the City of York. The chairman had 40 questions all bearing on birdie matters. These he placed in a hat. Each member was asked to draw out two questions, and give an answer to each of them. This caused a lot of discussion, which was most instructive and interesting to both old and young fanciers. The meeting was one of the best we have had this year.—A. Wand, Hon. Sec.

BELGRAVE & DISTRICT F. & F.S.

A very interesting and instructive lecture was given by Mr. W. Shepherd at our meeting held on May 12th, entitled "From the Nestbox to the Show Bench." Mr. Shepherd dealt ably with the pairing of birds and with the method of dealing with the parent birds until the commencement of the young birds' exhibition life, and was at great pains in explaining everything connected with this period. The novice could quite understand and grasp every point, so explicit was the lecturer. At the close he was inundated with questions, and answered each and all in the most concise manner. The lecture was greatly enjoyed, and there was a good attendance. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Shepherd brought a very pleasant evening to a close.—W. H. Riley, Secretary.

PENDLETON AND SALFORD O.S.

Meeting held at Chapel-street Congregational Hall on May 11th, when a creditable number of members attended. Mr. W. A. Bladon, of Manchester, gave a very interesting lecture on the Cinnamon Canary, dealing very ably with the breeding and showing of same. The lecturer brought with him a few plates of the cinnamon, which included one of his birds, which won at the Palace of 1898, and which was selected as a model by the Cinnamon Canary Club. At the close of his lecture, Mr. Bladon had a good number of questions put to him, which he handled in a masterly way. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Bladon brought a most enjoyable evening to a close. We are having a country ramble on May the 30th, and fanciers are invited to accompany us. New members may join at our next meeting, and will be in time to show at our first feather show on June 27th.—W. Jackson, Hon. Sec.

SOUTHALL F.S.

Annual meeting held on May 13th, Mr. J. W. Smales presiding. The balance-sheet was adopted. It showed an income of £112 5s. 9d., and balance to the good of 4s. 1d. Mr. A. W. Dance proposed, and Mr. B. Butler seconded, "That all sections, except poultry, be dropped." A good deal of discussion for and against ensued, and on a vote being taken, the resolution was lost. Mr. R. W. Baxter was again elected president, and the following were elected vice-presidents:—Dr. Sinagar and Messrs. G. Gosney, W. J. Smales, B. Butler, B. G. and P. Hanson, H. J. Norman, Reginald Brown, and E. L. Stroud, and the Rev. F. Roberts; hon. auctioneer, B. G. Hanson; chairman, J. R. Higgins; treasurer, W. Carter; hon. sec., A. Smith, Featherstone-road Schools, Southall; committee, J. Timberlake, A. and H. Allwork, E. J. Lingwood, G. Brant, A. E. Argyle, T. Hocken, and F. J. Brooks. The Chairman then handed the silver cup to Mrs. Higgins, who had made most points at the monthly shows during the year. It was decided to hold monthly shows the second Wednesday in each month, cups to be given to the member making most points with any one variety during the season. Fanciers wishing to join the society should apply to the hon. sec.—A. Smith.

HAYLE AND DISTRICT F.A.

A meeting was held at the Institute on May 11th, Mr. Roskron presiding over a good attendance. It was decided to hold a First Feather Show and Judging Competition on the morning of August 3rd, and Mr. Sherman, sen. (Redruth) was asked to judge. The members reported on the first round of breeding, which had proved a failure generally. Mr. Kemp was the most successful, with nine pairs and twenty-three young ones. Mr. Oatey, sen., came next with sixteen youngsters. All Mr. Kemp's young birds were on the sticks. Mr. Sherman, sen., gave a washing exhibition, and read a paper on preparing birds for the show bench. In his remarks Mr. Sherman said it always gave him great pleasure to come amongst such a jovial lot of fanciers. He had during the afternoon visited some of their bird rooms, and he wished to congratulate the members on the stock he had seen, especially the Yorkshires. Whilst the members had made rapid strides in the quality of the birds (and he thought some would be found amongst the winners during the coming show season), he would ask the novice to pay attention to the washing, for unless a bird was staged well it stood a poor chance of winning to-day in keen competition, and many a good bird had been passed on account of its condition. Mr. Sherman then washed three birds, great interest being taken in the process by the younger members. Mr. Cock, cage bird sec., in moving a vote of thanks, said they were pleased to have Messrs. Sherman, sen., and jun., with them that evening, and he hoped that at no distant date they would have them again. Mr. Sherman, in reply, said if he had done or said anything to benefit any member it more than repaid him; when convenient he should be pleased to come again.—W. Paull, Hon. Sec.

MARKINCH O.S.

A committee meeting was held recently, and after a discussion it was agreed to have three judges for the cage bird section of our show to be held on November 7th, instead of two, as formerly. The following judges were elected, and have accepted the invitation to judge:—Messrs. W. D. Hogg (Oakley), for Scotch Fancies; John Adams (Dundee), for Border Fancies and Norwich; and George Marlin (Hamilton), for British and Foreign birds.—GEORGE MITCHELL, Sec.

PRESTON O.S.

Monthly meeting held on May 11th, Mr. Lewis presiding, in the absence of the chairman, Mr. C. Blackhurst, M.R.C.V.S. Messrs. W. Gabbott and P. Brade were elected members, bringing the total membership up to 52. A ramble was arranged for May 24th, when the members will go by train to Longridge from Deepdale, and walk by way of Partick Pike and Chipping down the Valley of the Brock. The secretary then exhibited and described the remaining portion of the collection of birds' eggs, beginning with those of the Harlequin Duck to the end of the British species, the Puffin. The collection, which numbers many thousands of specimens, is particularly rich in variety and in abnormalities, those of the Gulls, Terns, and Plovers being most remarkable. Amongst the varieties were eggs (taken in Great Britain) of the Great Bustard, Bittern, Red-necked Phalarope, etc., the two former species being collected in the early part of the last century. A vote of thanks to the secretary concluded the meeting.—W. HY. HEATHCOTE, Sec.

GREENWICH & DEPTFORD C.B.S.

On May 14, a largely attended meeting was held. Mr. Meades (chairman) presiding. Mr. J. Robson gave us a lecture on the "General Management of the Norwich Plainhead." He pointed out that, to be a successful exhibitor, one must get type, size, quality of feather and colour. Unfortunately a few judges gave first place to large birds with plenty of colour, but which lacked type. He dealt minutely with the question of pairing with a view to improving the stock; the introduction of colour from the Green Canary; the result of successive double-buffing and double-yellowing. All these things were useful in producing the show bird, if used in moderation, but if in excess, would tend the other way. He invited questions, which were soon "fired" at him, and which Mr. Robson answered in a helpful manner. A hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer, to which he suitably responded, brought a successful and pleasant evening to a close.—F. W. Hamer, hon. sec.

YORKSHIRE CANARY CLUB.

The annual general meeting was held on May 9th at the Market Tavern, Godwin-street, Bradford, when there was only a moderate attendance. Mr. D. Sunderland occupied the chair. The balance-sheet was adopted, and showed a balance in hand of £1 13s. 11½d. The chairman then gave the result of scrutiny of the voting for officers for 1908-9, which was as follows:—Chairman, Mr. W. H. Shackleton; vice-chairman, Mr. F. Armstrong; secretary and treasurer, Mr. John Greaves; assistant-secretary, Mr. H. Sutcliffe; auditors, Messrs. R. W. Alderson and T. Clegg; committee (outside Yorkshire), Messrs. A. Ambler, G. W. Cuthbertson, A. Hirst, A. E. Pattrick, and J. W. Ramsden; (inside Yorkshire), Messrs. J. E. Brotherton, J. Bailey, H. W. Battye, W. A. Cowgill, W. Crabtree, S. Dean, R. Halliday, R. Sutcliffe, J Wilcock, and M. Broadley. Seventy-nine papers were sent in, and all voted with one exception—a paper returned through the post through being misdirected. Mr. Mundell was elected on the committee, but having previously expressed his desire to be free from office, there was no alternative but to declare his nomination and election void. Mr. Sunderland resigned his position as committeeman, he being desirous of lessening the number of his engagements. Mr. F. Hammond was elected assistant-secretary. He also declined to take office, being of the opinion that that office should be held by some young and rising fancier, who, in the event of the secretary at any time wishing to retire, would be willing (and by the experience gained, well qualified) to at once step into the more responsible office of secretary. Mr. Shackleton then took the chair. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the retiring officers, and also to the subscribers and donors to the special prize fund. The secretary, in giving a short report, said they commenced the year with a deficit of £2 6s. By the generosity of the late treasurer (Mr. Mundell) the club was now relieved of that liability, and were enabled to start with a clean sheet. The number of members paying their subscriptions was 153, as against 166 in the previous year; still, he was glad to state that they finished the year with a small balance in hand. Up to the present time 13 new members had joined, and he hoped before the season closed they would be able to add considerably to that number. The committee had been very regular in their attendance when called upon. He was also pleased to say that they had gone through the season without a single complaint being laid to the charge of any member of the club. In conclusion he said he desired to thank all who had contributed to the special prize fund, notably Messrs. Mundell, Brotherton, Bailey and Swanger, R. P. Broome, J. W. Ramsden, and J. Sandiford. With the generous aid of these and others during the last season the club was able to offer for competition amongst its members trophies and special prizes to the value of £57 9s. A notice of motion by Mr. A. Spencer (Nelson), "That the Y.C.C. form a fund to be called a 'Protection Fund,' to aid its members by law to recover from railway companies the full value of birds lost in transit, etc.," was, after some discussion, left to be dealt with in committee. Mr. Carl's offer of £3, to be competed for (at all shows where the club's patronage is given) by amateurs—members who have not won more than three first prizes in open competition previous to current season—was gratefully accepted, as were also the offers of Messrs. J. W. Ramsden and R. P. Broome to repeat their last season's gifts. The meeting closed with a hearty vote of thanks to the chairman.—JOHN GREAVES, Hon. Sec.

This is truly a grand list for our first one, there being still a large number of replies yet to be received in answer to our post-cards. We will be much obliged if fanciers will send them in at their very earliest convenience. The time allowed for joining the association expires at the end of this month, when subscriptions must also have been paid. Our next and last list will appear in CAGE BIRDS the first week in June. See Club Notices for date of next meeting.—J. R. Meikle, hon. secretary and treasurer, 51, Lothian Road, Edinburgh.

AIRDRIE AND COATBRIDGE C.B.S

Monthly meeting held in Royal Hotel, Airdrie, on May 7th, when Mr. Clark, in the absence of Mr. Fairley (president), took the chair. It was agreed to add three classes to the Norwich section, and one to the Scotch fancy sections of the annual show, and it was also agreed to increase the prize money. Six new members were enrolled. Judges for the club show were nominated. The meeting was brought to a close by a vote of thanks to the chairman.—ARCH. MURDOCH, Secretary.

SCOTTISH NORWICH PLAINHEAD CANARY CLUB.

Committee Meeting, held at 142, High Street, Edinburgh, on May 16, Mr. Winter, President, in the Chair. A letter was read from the secretary, of the English Plainhead Club, agreeing to the contest taking place in Scotland this year, and it was decided to take a vote of the club membership as to which of the following three societies' shows, viz., Glasgow and West of Scotland, Aberdeen, and the Scottish National. The club show and patronage was left over in the meantime, to allow of further applications being received. Will secretaries please note that all applications for club patronage must be made by June 30. During next show season there will be competed for, in addition to other prizes, a handsome piece of plate, value £2; given by the President, Mr. Winter. Novice Members will also be well catered for, Mr. Aitchison, Edinburgh, offering a cash special of 2/s. for most points gained in Novice Classes. Members please note that subscriptions are now due. Any fanciers wishing to join the club can have full particulars from the secretary.—F. Brown, 97, Petershill Road, Glasgow.

YORKSHIRE UNION OF C.B.S.

Winter Shows and their Judges.

A meeting of the council was held at the Market Tavern, Bradford, on May 16th. Mr. John Greaves, the president, occupied the chair. Before the business of the evening commenced a most pleasing duty was performed by the chairman in presenting to Mr. F. Hammond, the late secretary, with a splendid gold medal of the value of £2, as a token of the great esteem in which he is held by fanciers generally throughout the union. Mr. Hammond responded, his remarks receiving loud applause. Business transacted: Re-appointment of Mr. H. H. Towers as treasurer; appointment of Messrs. Hammond and Hill as scrutineers of ballot for next year; carried that the annual subscription be 8d. per member as before; that the number of novice medals be increased to 16 (12 for Yorkshires and 4s. for Norwich sections respectively), and that tenders for handbooks and rules be asked for. The following gentlemen were elected:—As sub-committee: Messrs. R. Halliday, F. Hammond. R. Sutcliffe, W. H. Shackleton, W. Crabtree, T. Ogden, E. W. Johnson. "That we accept Messrs. J. W. Ramsden's and F. Carl's generous offer of specials, etc., and that the best thanks be forwarded to the respective donors"; "That December 25th and 26th be left vacant in regard to shows, and also February 6th, the date of Palace show," were both carried. The judges for the open winter shows were balloted for, the following being the result, subject, of course, to the appointed gentlemen not having prior engagements on the same dates:—

LONG EATON AND DIST. C.B.S.

Meeting held May 9th, there being a moderate attendance of members. Mr. H. Hay (vice-chairman) occupied the chair. Mr. W. R. Hexter was elected delegate to the Cage Bird Union. The Society has arranged to take a brake party to Bredon on June 27th, and all members and friends wishing to join are requested to give their names in to the secretaries by June 6th. Three more silver cups have been offered for competition at the next members' show, this making seven in all, to be won three times, not necessarily in succession. The Society is in a strong position as regards finance, silver cups, and gold medals. The silver cup to be given by Mr. Councillor E. Wallis is for the best young Grizzle Crest; that by F. R. Claye, Esq., J.P., is for the best young Buff dark Crest; and that by Mr. T. C. Guttridge is for the best young Border Fancy. Three more new members were elected: Messrs. E. Fox and W. B. Smith (Long Eaton) and N. Chamberlain (Stapleford).—TURNER AND BARKER, Hon. Secs.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

A well-attended meeting took place at headquarters on May 11th, with Mr. A. C. Burn in the chair. Mrs. M. Clark was elected a member, and Mr. F. King nominated. A report of the Executive Council of the C.B.U., submitted to the meeting of delegates on February 22nd at Manchester, and a list of suggestions for confirmation were read by the secretary, the same being confirmed with the exception of two items in the balance-sheet, which further information was required upon. The schedule for the young bird show on July 4th was drawn up, consisting of 27 classes for Canaries, two Hybrids, 12 British, and two Foreign, and special prizes were announced for the same from Messrs. L. Daintry, P. Taviner, W. Shepherd, and W. Prance. Details of the summer outing on Saturday, May 30th, in conjunction with the N.B.B. and M.C. were announced. An egg-food competition then took place. Upon a vote, Messrs. A. Lazarus and T. Monger were declared the winners. The chairman presented them with a silver and bronze medal respectively. At the close a member demonstrated the art of making an egg cake.—VICTOR WYNN, Hon. Sec.

THE SHOWS.

PORTMADOC.

Held at The Park, Portmadoc, on May 14th. The cage bird section turned out a grand success, much in advance of last year, and attracted much admiration from the visitors. There was a nice attendance, and everything passed off well, the arrangements being very creditable to the hard-working secretary, Mr. R. G. Humphreys, and his band of able assistants, including Mr. Williams and other stewards. There were eight classes, which accounted for over 70 exhibit. Mr. Harrison made the awards, and we heard no grumbling.

NORWICH: 1, 2, 3, W. Winnard, grand clear yellows, ablaze with colour, 1st scores in head and chest, 2nd close up, 3rd very nice variegated buff; vhc, Evan S. Jones, buff variegated, trifle too long, good one otherwise. CREST: 1, 2, E. S. Jones, 1st grand buff, good body, smart crest; 2nd large variegated, also very nice crest; 3, W. H. Jones, a good exhibit. YORKS. BUFF: 1, W. H. Jones, excellent variegated, nice head, good wings and carriage; 2, Forbes; 3, E. Robyns Owen, rather smaller, but both of good carriage, well drawn and typical. YELLOW: 1, W. H. Jones, clear good body, head and neck, stands well, wins; 2, Owen Bros., clear, very stylish and neat; 3, Forbes, another nice specimen. CAN. A.O.V.: 1 (no name), large buff crest-bred, good body and plenty of head feather; 2, W. H. Jones, very nice yellow Lancashire hen; 3, Forbes, good cinnamon Norwich, grand colour; vhc, Winnard, very taking clear-capped Lizard. HYBRID: 1, Winnard, lovely Goldfinch-Bullfinch, grand colour and condition; 2, Price Williams, nice Canary-Goldfinch, rich-coloured blaze, good size and condition; 3, W. H. Jones, real good Greenfinch-Canary; vhc, Jackson, nice Linnet-Canary. GOLDFINCH: 1, Owen Bros., grand all-round Finch, trifle uneven in under-blaze, otherwise a tip-top bird; 2, E. Robyns Owen, even better body colour, blaze smaller, in lovely condition; 3, Jackson, grand expansive blaze, but not so rich as two above, very good in other points. Best class in show; several splendid exhibits cardless. BRIT. HARDBILL: 1, Forbes, splendid Hawfinch, good bib and colour, in exquisite condition; 2, Davies, Yellowhammer, fine colour and condition; 3, Winnard, Bullfinch, good cap and breast colour, trifle unsteady. SOFTBILL: 1, 2, Hughes, 1st good Blackbird; 2nd, excellent Thrush, both very steady and splendid condition; 3, Davies, Blackbird, with white on head. FOREIGN: 1, Mrs. Owen, nice Blue-fronted Amazon; 2, 3, Williams, two excellent birds.

Books Every Bird Keeper and Breeder must have.

By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to-date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

House's Canary Manual - - - - Post free, 1/2

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price.

Cage Birds 1908 Annual - - - - post free, 7d.

The Standard Guide to the Cage Bird Hobby is a title bestowed upon the ANNUAL years ago. And the 1908 edition merits it more than any previous volume. Revised and brought up-to-date from cover to cover, with a lovely coloured plate and many full-page art illustrations, and crammed with valuable articles and unique and helpful features, it is the finest value for money ever offered lovers of birds. Canary, British, Hybrid and Foreign bird enthusiasts alike will find it a Complete Guide to the Fancy.

The Stock Book (Our invaluable "Breeding Room Register.") - - - post free, 7d.

A well-known fancier has said of it:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." This book is one no breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred—keep account of their strong and weak points. It contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages, and many invaluable "Hints for Emergencies."

OUTINGS.

GREAT HARWOOD & DIST. C.B.S.

The annual ramble took place on May 10th, when a good muster of members and friends journeyed to Hurst Green. Starting from Town Gate at 8 a.m. we went by way of Clinckham, past Bradley Hall Farm on to Billington, through Langho, crossing the Ribble at Dinckley. Here we found bird life at its height. The following birds' nests were discovered: Blackbird, Thrush, Redstart, Hedge Sparrow, Water Hen, Snipe, and Peewit. Arriving at Hurst Green at about one o'clock, we paid a visit to Mr. Holden, who showed us his aviary containing a few Yorkshires with young. We then made our way to Mr. and Mrs. Ormerad's, where dinner was served; we did not leave until we had completely satisfied the inner man. We then paid a visit to Stonyhurst College, via Winckley Hall, Hacking Boat, and across Whalley Nab. We arrived home at 6 p.m., thoroughly tired, but well satisfied with our day's outing.—Geo. Waddington, Sec.

LONDON SOCIETIES' SUCCESSFUL COMBINED RAMBLE.

The Dulwich and Peckham and Lewisham and District societies' joint country ramble took place on May 10th. It proved an unqualified success. The party numbered about fifty, and included the following:—Messrs. E. S. Lugg, R. J. Pretty, R. P. Broome, H. E. Tringham, W. Hodson, J. B. Waterman, H. J. Waterman, A. Cunningham, A. Cunningham, jun., Robson, Cranfield, Richardson, Johnson, C. Long, C. J. Doughty, W. Barnes, Cole, Silverthorn, Warley, F. White, Phillips, Jordon, Steed, Causton, W. Pallett, Stevens, Bellenger, C. H. Lee, Silvester, West, P. Causton, Edwards, Meredith, Botting, Pearce, Ogle, Connorton, and Draxler. The morning opened dull, but long before midday the sun asserted himself, and shone brilliantly for the remainder of the day. The ramblers left New Cross at 9.10 a.m., and arrived at Redhill, Surrey, at 9.55. They at once proceeded to the headquarters of the Redhill and Reigate F.S., where they received a hearty welcome from the local fanciers, headed by the genial Mr. F. J. Green (of Lancashire fame), who had kindly undertaken to act as guide. The ramblers were here joined by the following members of the local society:—Messrs. Bacon (hon. secretary), Whitmore, Stanford, Hannett, Lawrence, Crowsier, Crisp, Badock, Bignall, and Mr. Green's two sons.

At length a start was made for Dorking. The route taken was by way of Batt's Hill, Wray Common, Queen's Park, and The Beeches; then along the hills to Boxhill, where a halt was made. What a glorious panorama presented itself here! The eminence commands an extensive view of the South Downs of Sussex away to the hills of Hertfordshire, London, and the Valley of the Thames being included in the purview. Some handsome villa residences adorn the slopes, and at its foot are the woods of Holmdale where, according to local tradition, red deer roamed wild in the middle of the seventeenth century, and where the ancient barrows called Castles mark the retreat of the Britons before the Saxons. The surrounding woods abound in bird life, and provided the party with much useful ornithological data. Skylarks were particularly plentiful, and as one listened to their joyous outpourings as they soared into the sunlit sky one became enchanted. No wonder the song of this splendid musician has captivated the poets. Occasionally the plaintive notes of the Cuckoo were heard, whilst the woods echoed with the lusty song of Blackbirds and Thrushes.

At the foot of the hill the party were met by brakes and landaus, and driven to Dorking, where full justice was done to a splendid lunch served in capital style by Mr. Spencer, of the Three Tuns Hotel. Mr. Robson presided at the subsequent proceedings and in a brief speech warmly thanked Mr. Green and the local fanciers for the hearty manner in which they had received the party and for having shown them so many things of interest in their beautiful district. Mr. Green, in reply, said he and his colleagues felt delighted that the visitors had so much enjoyed the outing, and hoped they would come again to the district. Friend Barnes, who had kept the company in roars of laughter en route by his dry humour, of course "got at it again." He and Mr. Bacon were excellent mirth-makers, and would run each other very closely in a fight for "first and special." Everybody regretted that inexorable duty called Mr. Bacon away early, but he joined the party again later in the evening at Redhill.

Before leaving Dorking the party visited many places of interest in the quaint and picturesque old town. The town contains a grand old church, and in the chancel are the tombs of many notable people. The Roman road runs under the churchyard. Many Roman coins have been found in the neighbourhood, including silver coins of Tiberius and Antonius. A start was made late in the evening for Redhill, where the ramblers entrained at 10.35. The local fanciers, headed by Messrs. Green and Bacon, assembled on the platform and sang "Auld Lang Syne" as the train steamed out of the station, the London party meantime waving their adieux from the carriage windows. En route notes were exchanged, and it was found that the following birds had been seen or heard: Nightingale, Song Thrush, Missel Thrush, Blackbird, Starling, Magpie, Wood Pigeon, Cliff-Chaff, Yellowhammer, Cuckoo, Bullfinch, Wren, Willow Wren, Whinchat, Goldfinch, Redpoll, Blue Tit, Cole Tit, Swallow, Yellow Bunting, Grey Wagtail, Linnet, Chaffinch, Whitethroat, Greenfinch, Hedge Sparrow, and Robin. Owing to the arctic weather experiences of early May many nests of dead young birds were seen, while some birds were only just beginning to build. The party arrived at New Cross station shortly after 11 o'clock. This ended a most enjoyable and memorable day.

DULWICH O.S.

The Society went for their first country ramble on May 17. The arrangements were in the hands of Mr. W. J. Lovesy, who conducted the following party:—Messrs. F. Gain, G. F. Woolhouse, S. J. Kent, A. E. Rogers, P. Humphreys, W. Edmonds, W. Goodwin, F. Waterman, W. Brooks, E. Foster, R. Bruty, J. Woolly, R. Pocock, C. Cooper, G. W. Saunders, P. Garlick, W. Butt, J. Portcous, W. Taylor, C. Weiner, W. Rees, F. Daniells, Watson, J. Smith, and T. Marks. We went through the Chipstead Valley and Coulsdon districts, among the most picturesque parts of Surrey. The party entrained for "Stoat's Nest," from which place the ramble commenced. The country was teeming with bird life, nests were encountered on almost every hand, mostly containing eggs, although a few contained young. Chief amongst the species of birds seen were the Yellowhammer, Wagtail, Chaffinch, Greenfinch, Hedge Accentor, Wren, Plover, Thrush, Blackbird, and Linnet. The weather was really glorious, which put the party in high spirits. A halt was made at the half-way house, "The White Hart," where the party was photographed by Mr. Lovesy. After this ordeal the journey recommenced through dales and woods, in which the notes of the Cuckoo were continually heard. On reaching "Ye Old Fox," Coulsdon Common, an excellent repast was enjoyed, to which full justice was done. Mr. Pain, who presided, "toasted" the Society, in a few well-chosen words, paying a tribute to the services of Messrs. Woolhouse and Rogers. Mr. Woolhouse, who occupied the vice-chair, announced that Mr. Foster had contributed 10s. to the £15 15s. Cup Fund as an appreciation of the day's outing. This was quickly followed by subscriptions from Messrs. Daniells and Humphreys and the rest of the company, £2 2s. being realised—which only leaves a debt of £1. The party separated into groups in the afternoon and enjoyed themselves in various ways. After tea a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Lovesy for the splendid arrangements which had been so admirably carried out; also to the host and hostess for the capital catering. A return to Stoat's Nest was made at about 7 p.m. through a few miles of lovely country. Honor Oak Park was reached just before ten and the final dispersion took place at "Ye Old Herne," everyone going home tired but happy, after a most enjoyable and never-to-be-forgotten day.—Rogers and Mazzoni, hon. secs.

Management of Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries.

By THOMAS SMITH.

Attending the Young.

The rearing of young causes anxiety to the owner, they being liable to all the ills flesh is heir to from the time they are hatched; they are therefore the object of special care.

During the first eight days the young should be glanced at three times a day. If they are lying crossed over each other, and are plump and healthy looking, it may be taken that all is well. They should be well feathered at about the age of fourteen days, and at about that time they are frequently a source of temptation for hens to pluck the nice clean feathers out of them. This is most disastrous to Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries, not only retarding their growth, but completely spoiling their appearance for months; so that it is impossible to tell until after the feathers have grown again, what they will turn out to be, whether show birds, or only ordinary specimens.

Every fancier is anxious to know how the young will turn out, and naturally does not want to wait until it passes through the moult. To have a true estimate of a bird that has been plucked, the second growth has to be removed during the moult to ensure all the feathers coming as near as possible to their natural condition; otherwise, the appearance will be ragged, and it will be spoilt for competition.

Plucking and Cleanliness.

Young when badly plucked are apt to get a chill. Nursery cages of two descriptions should be available in every bird-room. First, a small cage (with a nest in it) into which birds that have not left the nest may be put; the construction should be such as to have the young so near the breeding cage that they can be easily fed through the wires. The second should be larger and should have one perch at least to enable the young that have left the nest to take to the perch. Birds that have reached that stage move about freely and quickly, and go to the dividing wires the moment the parents or foster parents indicate that they are ready to supply their wants.

Egg food should be within the nursery cage, the most suitable plan being near to the perch. This provision will teach the young to pick. It is generally the case that young, kept separately in a nursery cage, learn to do for themselves earlier than those left in the breeding cage.

There are various ways of precluding the possibility of plucking, such as fixing building material at the end of the cage opposite the nest, etc. Every effort should be made to do away with this possibility, as complete and finished plumage is of the greatest importance to birds of position.

The droppings sometimes clog up the vent of young birds, both before and after leaving the nest, and attention ought to be paid to this, so that this contingency may be avoided. Some young birds run about the bottom of the cage, and their feet become embedded in the refuse. When this happens, the bird should be caught, and its feet washed carefully in lukewarm water. The perches should be kept scrupulously clean, too, either by having them washed, or scraped.

Diet for Young.

Diet is the rock upon which many young birds get wrecked. The egg-food for the first fortnight after they commence to do for themselves, should be precisely the same as that given to the parents. After that the biscuit should be increased gradually, till they take to the seed.

At the age of five weeks they should be supplied with crushed hemp among the Canary and rape seed; this leads them on to the seeds, and by the time they are about six weeks old they will be well on to the seed and able to do for themselves.

When the young are five weeks old an excellent substitute for egg-food is raw oatmeal with rape seed mixed, giving in the wires every morning a piece of loaf bread (the crust), which should be soaked for half-an-hour in scalded milk, with a little lime water added. The bread should be removed two hours after it is supplied, before getting sour.

To guard against a breaking down, a good plan is to supply each young bird with as much biscuit and egg mixture as will lie on a sixpence. Then when a bird softens, through having continued the egg in this way, it will fall back upon it very readily, whereas, when the egg is completely discontinued, in some cases, a sickly subject will not look at it, and may pine away. Healthy young usually can take the seed freely when about six weeks old; care should, however, be taken not to endanger the life by removing soft food too early.

May.

Where birds are in condition by the beginning of May, the breeding operations should be in full swing. Hens should be busy rolling about the nest, or patiently sitting on eggs, giving every indication of prosperity. Fanciers not infrequently count their chickens before they are hatched, and quite as often receive a set back. On the sixth or seventh day, when the eggs are examined, there may come the bitter disappointment of clear eggs, followed by no hope for young birds. This experience produces a pang, but the fancier who has to pass that way should remember that in former years, while sharp easterly and north-easterly winds prevailed, and in consequence of these winds, other fanciers had a similar failure.

It is wise to allow the hen to sit on the eggs her full time, if for no other reason than in the hope of genial weather coming. But she should not be allowed to sit beyond the ordinary time of incubation; to allow her to do so would be a waste of time on the fancier's part, and of strength on the part of the hen.

The cold easterly winds are responsible for a large percentage of clear eggs, even in rooms where artificial heat is used. No fancier should lose heart over having useless eggs in the first run, but should resume egg-food, and supply fresh dandelion leaves, which, as a rule, are in excellent condition in May.

Green Food for May.

Fanciers resident in towns can usually find time to have a stroll in the by-ways, where greenfood can be procured. The safest green-foods are dandelion and chickweed. From the leaves of the former until the heads are in season, the fluff should be clipped, in order to give the birds ready access to the green seed which they are very fond of.

I like to come across a fancier carrying an armful of dandelion heads or chickweed; this is a sign of industry. The industrious man who looks after the birds himself is the fancier to succeed. I have seldom known birds left in the care of deputies to be a success. In many such cases the wrong kind of person is put in charge. Nobody but a born fancier is likely to be a success. The fancier whose better half (or any other lady member of his household) takes an interest in the aviary, is indeed blessed. In his absence at business he has an easy mind.

How to Deal with Eggs.

I am decidedly in favour of the eggs being removed as they are laid, and of their being put back on the evening on which the third egg is deposited. This brings all the young out together, and in addition obviates the risk of getting the eggs broken, which may happen through the cock bird picking them, the hen rolling about in the nest before she fairly settles down, and in various other ways.

The eggs should be put safely away in bran or in sifted sawdust. Care should be taken not to mix the eggs, as when that is done, it is impossible to say which pair the young may be descended from. I have known instances where common and fancy eggs have been mixed in the laying aside, and to save the loss of the higher class young, all the fertile eggs had to be hatched and reared, and it was only on the birds taking to the perch that it could be determined which pairs they were from.

The joint ramble of the Windhill and Bradford West Cage Bird Societies will take place on May 30th to Ilkley, writes Mr. H. Clegg, sec. of the latter society. The time and place of meeting will be announced later.

Cage Birds Charts.

No. 8 of "Cage Birds Charts" is now in course of preparation. It will be published in our issue of next week, and readers should make certain they on no account miss it.

Mr. J. C. Barnes has been engaged to judge at the open show of the Potteries and D.s. C.B.A. on October 22nd, writes Mr. J. Simcock, the sec., and Mr. F. Bate, of Stoke-on-Trent, the inter-club young stock show on July 11th.

The Metropolitan C.B.A. have resolved to hold their First Feather Show on June 25th, writes Mr. A. J. Head, the hon. sec., also an open annual show (limited to the Metropolitan area), the date of which will be announced later.

We learn that a new society has been formed at Ferryhill, the membership radius being four miles. The secretary is Mr. R. A. Binks, and his address 27, West Street, Ferryhill. Fanciers in this district are invited to join, and should send their names along to Mr. Binks at once.

Kindly thank all who applied for my rack and cages, as I had far too many inquiries to be able to answer them all, writes Mr. W. Whitehead (Shaw Oldham). Those who did not receive a reply will please accept this explanation.

I have had replies from all parts of the country in answer to my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. J. A. Dodd (Swindon). Kindly thank for me all those who, not enclosing a stamp for reply, have not therefore heard from me.

The Stockton-on-Tees and District C.B.S. have engaged Mr. T. Dixon (Bedlington Station) to judge Canaries, and Mr. R. J. Howe (Wellingboro'), for British and Foreign Birds, at their open show to be held November 7th, writes Mr. J. W. Lowes, the hon. sec.

All interested in cage-birds are invited to attend our next meeting in Good Templars Hall, New Bridge Street, on May 30th, at 7.30, when Mr. Doolan will lecture on Colour-Feeding, writes Mr. Chas. Irvine, sec. of the Ayr and District C.B.S.

Kindly note that I have been elected sec. of the Leeds Roller Canary Club in place of Mr. C. Towes, who has resigned owing to business pressure, writes Mr. Thomas Carter, 3, Euston Mount, Elland Road, Leeds. We have fixed our open show for December 12th.

A lecture on the Breeding, Rearing, and Colour-Feeding of Canaries will be given by Mr. A. Wellings at the Blue Bell, Horsemarket Street, on May 28th, at 7.45, writes Mr. Jas. Emmett, sec. of the Warrington and District C.B.S. All fanciers in the district are cordially invited.

The Oldham and District C.B.S. have decided to hold their first feather show on June 20th, at their headquarters, the Textile Dining Rooms, writes Mr. F. Steeple, the hon. sec., and Mr. Alex Donnelly, of Pendleton, will judge. They have also decided to hold their hack-end show in the rooms attached to the Globe Inn, Huddersfield Road, on October 10th, when Mr. W. Bowyer, of Leek, will be the judge.

The Darrel O.S. have decided to hold their open show of Cage-Birds, Poultry, Pigeons, etc., on November 7th, writes Mr. Jas. Robertson, junr., the sec. Will secretaries of local societies whose fixtures are likely to clash with ours kindly communicate with me?

At the Penzance and D.s. F.A. annual meeting held on May 13, the balance sheet showed a balance in hand of £6 11s. 10d., writes Mr. J. Pearce Sampson, hon. sec. It was decided that we hold our tenth show on November 27th, when Mr. J. North (Reading), will judge cage birds.

We have secured the services of Messrs. R. Rhodes, W. Vardy, and Chas. Houlton as judges at our annual show to be held on October 31st and November 2nd, writes Mr. Thos. Smith, sec. of the Ilkeston and District O.S. We are under the C.B.U. rules and are hoping for a great success.

At the last meeting of the National British Bird and Mule Club, the untimely death of Mr. Albert Rettich was referred to in sympathetic terms, and a letter of condolence will be sent to Miss Rettich. As a result of the sad accident detailed in our issue of May 9, our British birds have lost a true friend.

The Crewe and District O.S. and The Potteries and District C.B.A. have decided to again hold the Inter-Club shows which proved so successful last year, writes Mr. J. C. Heaton, sec. of the former society. The first takes place on June 20th at Crewe, when Mr. C. Houlton (St. Helens), will judge.

The date of our First Feather Show has been fixed for Saturday, July 11th, when the judge will be Mr. T. Edwards, of Burnley, writes Mr. W. Hy. Heathcote, sec. of the Preston O.S. The judges appointed for the open show on November 13th and 14th are Dr. Herd and Messrs. Parker Robinson and W. Mundell.

We have had the pleasure of inspecting the new medal of the Cinnamon Canary Club, specially designed and supplied by Messrs. Fattorini, the well-known Bradford firm of silversmiths. It is really a beautiful specimen of their art, very chaste and appropriate in design, and it gives great satisfaction to the club.

We are sorry to learn that Mr. C. T. Maxwell, so well known as an exhibitor of British and Foreign Birds, has had the misfortune to lose the exceptionally rare Wall Creeper which was one of the chief attractions of Metropolitan shows last season. It died after a very brief illness, and just as it was coming into full spring plumage. We expect, however, our Brixton friend will not be long in finding a fresh inmate for the vacant cage.

Through our late show clashing with so many others, writes Mr. W. Howe, sec. of the Wellingboro' and District C.B.S., we have decided to hold our coming exhibition on September 30th and October 1st. We are hoping to have a fine entry this time to help us clear off the loss on the last one through double expense. Mr. R. J. Howe has been engaged to judge the British bird classes, but we have not yet decided on the judge for the Canary classes.

Will friends who intend joining the N.B.B. and M.C. in the annual ramble on Saturday, May 30th, write Messrs. Plumbridge and Carr, the hon. secs., note that the train to Oxshott starts at 9.35 a.m. for the early party, and at 1.37 p.m. to Claygate for the afternoon party, both from Waterloo (connection at Clapham Junction). Names of those desirous of going with us should be sent to us by this Saturday, May 23, to 2, Broad Street Station, London, Kindly mention that through a misunderstanding with West Bromwich C.B.S., the Inter-Club Nest Feather Show between that society and the Wolverhampton and District C.B.S. will not take place, writes Mr. F. Howes, sec. of the latter society. West Bromwich have now decided not to hold an inter-club show. I should, therefore, be glad to hear from the secretary of any other society in the neighbourhood whose members would like to hold an inter-club show with our society. I shall be pleased to give them particulars as to the working of same.

I have removed from Kidderminster to 78, Leopold Street, Highgate. Birmingham, writes Mr. J. Jeffery. This week-end I took a stroll in the old haunts of the Nightingale, and in spite of the cold, wet weather we have recently experienced, I found some of the 'gales had their full complement of eggs (viz., 5), and had commenced to sit. I was very much surprised, as I fully expected them to be at least a week later. This looks like our having young 'gales about the 3rd of June, which compares favourably with the season before last, when the young appeared very early.

The annual country ramble of the London and Counties O.A. has been arranged for Sunday, May 31st to Great Missenden, Bucks. There will be two sections, and the first party will proceed from Baker Street (Metropolitan Railway) by the 10 o'clock train to Great Missenden, when a circular walk will be taken, arriving at the Red Lion Hotel at 2.15 for a hot lunch. The second party will leave Marylebone (Great Central Railway) at 2.15, and will be met at Great Missenden about 3.20, when a further walk will be taken until about 6 o'clock, when tea will be provided. Great Missenden is situated in one of the prettiest parts of Buckinghamshire and renowned for bird life as well as splendid scenery. Ladies are invited to participate in the afternoon walk. Return trains at 7.45 or 8.56 p.m. The whole day, including fare, hot lunch, and tea, will be 5s. 6d., and the half day, including fare and tea, 2s. 9d. Those desirous of joining either party are invited to communicate with the hon. sec., Mr. R. J. Pretty, 6, Old Burlington Street, W.

THE POULTRY PRESS, LTD.

We invite the close attention of all readers of CAGE BIRDS who may happen to have a little spare cash available for investment to the advertisement of preference shares in the POULTRY PRESS, LTD., which advertisement appears on the back page of this number. A splendid opportunity is therein given to any fancier desirous of actively participating in the financial welfare of this popular poultry journal, and of furthering the progressive and educational work initiated in its bright informing columns.

This is an issue of 4,000 preference shares of £1 each, 1,250 of which have already been applied for by the directors, their friends, and employees. The shares carry a cumulative preferential dividend of 6 per cent., guaranteed for the first two years by Messrs. Watmough and Carl, and, subject to the payment of a 10 per cent. dividend to the holders of ordinary shares, these preference shares will carry a further possible non-cumulative dividend of 5 per cent., making a total possible 11 per cent. in all.

Of the ultimate exceeding prosperity of the company there can be little question. It has now fortunately resolved itself into merely a matter of time and money. All the forces that make for success are at hand, ready and waiting to be concentrated and directed towards the goal. It will depend solely upon fanciers as to whether the desired degree of prosperity will be reached sooner than the promoters anticipate, and into the hands of the Fancy may safely be placed the future destinies of "The Poultry World."

The subscription list will open on Tuesday next, May 26, and applications for prospectus, etc., should be sent at once to Mr. Avis, the secretary of the company, at the company's offices, 154. Fleet Street, London, E.C.

I think CAGE BIRDS a splendid pennyworth, writes Mr. D. Flockhart (Bonnyrigg, Midlothian). No bird fancier should be without it, as it is full of the best information that can be had. I wish it continued success.

At the Troon and Loans P.P. and C.B.S. show, to be held on Aug. 29, writes Mr. John Ferguson, the Sec., there will be 20 classes provided for cage birds, and that well-known Edinburgh fancier, Mr. Jas. F. Dewar, will judge.

I have resigned the secretaryship of the City of Birmingham C.B.S., writes Mr. H. C. Wilkins. Mr. J. H. de Maillet, 121, Somerville Road, Small Heath, Birmingham, has been appointed to that office, and all communications on behalf of the society should in future be addressed to him

We intend holding an open cage bird show on Nov. 19, writes Mr. A. E. Bishop, Hon. Sec. of the Worcester and District C.B.S. It will be our first show, and should prove a great success, seeing we have secured the services of Mr. J. H. Payne as judge. Seven classes have already been guaranteed by members.

We are going to have an open show again this year, which we hope will be a financial success, writes Mr. F. W. Hamer, sec. of the Greenwich and Deptford C.B.S. We have fixed on October 8th and 9th, and the show will be held under C.B.U. rules. Mr. J. Robson has been engaged to judge. A members' young stock show will be held on Thursday, July 9th.

The N.B.B. and M.C. Patronage.

Will secretaries when making application for our support kindly give names of judges, number of classes in each section, and the date of their show? By doing so they will save time and unnecessary correspondence.—PLUMBRIDGE and CARR, hon. secs., National British Bird and Mule Club.

The Rat Crusade.

The result of the recent experiments with Danysz Virus at Earl Soham, near Framlingham, in Suffolk, is thus described by Canon Abbay:—"A very great number of rats and mice have been destroyed, and I feel satisfied that in a small area, such as that occupied by a village like ours, the rats can easily be exterminated. About 1,000 tubes of Danysz Virus were used. Apparently all the rats, and nearly all the mice have disappeared. I think it has been a complete success, and I hope other parishes, and in time the country, will follow our example."

A Nest at the "Feathers."

Owing to a change of management at the "Napier," the National British Bird and Mule Club has had to vacate that hostelry, which had been its headquarters for over a decade. A fresh nest has been made at the "Feathers," Great Chapel Street, Westminster (near the site of the old Aquarium), and the members commence to sit at the next meeting night, the last Thursday in June—the original night of meeting having been reverted to. We understand that the room to be occupied is a very cosy and suitable one, with a private entrance from the street.

(For Key to Judges' Initials see No. 331.)

I have taken your paper now for some months, and find it very interesting, writes Mr. E. Brewer (Birstall). I wish CAGE BIRDS every success. Accept my thanks for the last advertisement which I inserted, and by which I made a satisfactory exchange.

In the course of our last meeting, writes Q.M.-Sergt. A. Cant, secretary of the Hamilton (Cadzow Oaks) O.S., it transpired that some of our members are having a lucky breeding season, two Greenie Bullies and Linnet Mules being reported.

I was pleased to see the drawing of my young Buff in a recent issue of CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. R. P. Broome (Sutton). She took the cup for the best cage bird in show at Epsom and Ewell show; 2nd, Oakham, only time out. My birds are only just starting this year, the very cold weather no doubt keeping them back.

I sold all my cages through my advertisement in your splendid paper, CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. C. W. Baines (Manchester). I had a post card by 5.30 o'clock on Friday from a gentleman at Oldham, and he bought them all on the Saturday. I have also had an inquiry from the South of England, and lots of others. Will you therefore please inform those who enquired for same that I cannot reply to all. I wish your paper the success it deserves.

I much appreciate the very great honour you have done me, writes Mr. J. Hawes (Westbourne Park), in making my hen the Yorkshire representative in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL. In winning the S.Y.C.C. Champion Trophy, she was a very great help to me, securing premier honours four out of five times, being unplaced at Plymouth for the only time in her show career. She has never failed under a northern judge, winning in all 26 first prizes. Mr. J. Robson has twice placed her fourth, Mr. T. Heath placed her third, and Mr. C. A. House left her out at Plymouth. She is not only a good show hen, but she breeds good youngsters. One of her sons won the Champion Diploma at Plymouth, and has also won this season, firsts at Queen's Park, Dudley and Spalding, and second at Peterborough.

The Standard Guide to the Fancy,

IS

The Hit of the Season.

A charming new cover, many beautiful illustrations of winning birds printed on art paper, a lovely coloured plate for frontispiece, a complete revision of all the popular features, and the addition of strikingly useful new features, mark this 1908 issue.

The articles, too, have never been excelled, and both Canary, Hybrid, British and Foreign bird keepers have been specially catered for. The needs of the beginner have likewise been given the fullest consideration.

VOTE EARLY!

Readers Wanted as Referees.

Who will win the Four-Guinea Painting?

THIS week our Great Essay Competition enters upon its last stages. As mentioned in our issue of May 2nd, when announcing the winners, the chief prize, that of an original painting of birds, value Four Guineas, was not awarded. This was owing to a difference of opinion among the judges as to which was the best essay out of the winning efforts in the four sections of the Competition. As we also then stated, instead of calling in someone to give a casting vote, we considered the best way out of this difficulty was to devise a means whereby readers of CAGE BIRDS should be the referees.

We have published the four winning essays in instalments extending over the past three weeks, and concluding with the present issue, and we now ask readers to fill in the voting paper appearing hereunder, in accordance with our plan, and thus decide by vote the destination of our chief prize. The instructions on the voting paper should be read carefully and carefully complied with.

It may be well to recapitulate here that the competitors are:—

MR. J. B. WATERMAN, essay entitled "Canaries: Their Management and Exhibition."

MR. J. W. DICKSON, essay entitled "Mule and Hybrid Breeding."

MR. J. JEFFREY, essay entitled "My Experiences With the Nightingale."

MR. A. B. FORSE, essay entitled "How to Fit Up a Bird-room."

We anticipate that a very interesting difference of opinion as to which is the best article will be found to exist when the votes come to be cast up. Readers should get their friends, whether bird-lovers or not, to peruse the essays and give their opinion, as we feel that the endeavour to forecast the result cannot prove other than agreeable pastime. So, readers, make sure you vote yourselves, and persuade your friends to join in also.

Remember: The closing day for receiving voting papers is Tuesday, June 2nd.

Fond of the City.

On the afternoon of May 1st two Wheatears were seen in Kensington Gardens a little east of the Round Pond. They were apparently quite satisfied with their surroundings, and seemed to cause no surprise or annoyance to the Sparrows, who are generally aggressive towards strangers.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Missed their Vocation.

Anxious, Stoke.—As you have had the birds examined by a breeder, who assures you that they are cocks, I take the sex for granted, though I should be rather inclined to doubt the genuineness of sex of a healthy male of last year which had not commenced to sing yet. The fact that the birds have never heard another sing is not sufficient to account for their own silence. As there are two in company they should certainly have commenced some sort of a medley for a song. Discontinue the mixture, and give instead one of three parts Canary to one part summer rape as a staple diet, and in addition half a teaspoonful of hemp to each twice a week. Every second day give the same quantity of crumbs of sponge cake with five drops of sherry mixed with it, and add to it every second time of giving a pinch of gold of pleasure seed. Every day give a spray of green-food—chickweed or dandelion. Every third day for a fortnight give four drops of tincture of steel in the drinking water. Should the birds come in song by this time you should drop off the gold of pleasure seed and the sherry, and give the sponge cake only once or twice a week. If this does not bring them in song, you may try letting them hear a good singing cock for a few weeks, and if that fails, my doubts as to their sex would become a certainty.

Dropped in Moult.

Perplexed.—It is quite useless leaving the birds together now they have gone into moult through being moved from a warm kitchen to a cold room. Your best plan is to separate at once all that are so affected. Keep them free from draughts, and give a teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake daily, well mixing with it one day five drops of cod liver oil emulsion, and the next six drops of sherry. Feed on plain Canary as a staple, and give separately half a teaspoonful of rape seed per bird every second day, and on alternate days the same quantity of hemp seed. Give a spray of green-food daily. In the drinking water give four drops of tincture of steel every second day for a fortnight—stop it sooner if the feathers have ceased dropping out—and then twelve drops of chemical food daily for a week or so. If you persevere with this treatment you may still have time to get one round of nests from the birds, but do not mate them up again until the moulting has quite ceased for a week at least and the birds are plainly anxious to start nesting.

A Fighting Bird.

F. W. Butler.—It seems to me to be more a doubtful cock than a gaudy one. If you did not observe it pairing with the Yorkshire hen, and find the eggs of this hen are clear, I think you may reasonably conclude it is a hen. If this is not the case you should have placed him where the Border hen could have seen him, and also in such a position that "he" could have fed her had he been so disposed," such as being in one side of a double breeder with only the wire slide between him and the hen, or in a small open wire cage such as a nursery, hung on the front of the cage containing the hen for a few days, or until you saw him calling to her and feeding her through the wires. Even if the bird is a genuine cock it certainly was not in good breeding condition, or it would have been singing more or less. You would do well to read the replies the last few weeks on feeding up birds for breeding, and see whether your feeding is at fault.

Yorkshire Weak on Legs.

Sandy.—In the first place see that the bird's perches are of a proper size to give it a firm grip, and are securely fixed in position. Failure to comply with these conditions may be the sole cause of your bird's apparent inability to perch properly. If this is not the case, alter diet. Discontinue egg food altogether for the present, and stop giving boiled rape. Let staple diet consist of a mixture of three parts Canary, and one part summer rape. Give half a teaspoonful of hemp every third day, and on the two intervening days a small teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake, well mixing with it one day four drops of cod liver oil emulsion, and the next six drops of sherry. Give a spray of chickweed or groundsel daily. In the drinking water give four drops of tincture of steel one day, twelve drops of Chemical Food the next, and pure water on the third, and repeat this course over again and again in the same order for a fortnight or three weeks. This is assuming your bird is not inordinately fat, which is just possible, as you say you have been feeding well, although from the few details you give about your dietary, it is nothing much out of the ordinary. Should the bird be over-fat in condition, treat first for a week on a spare diet with saline aperient, as frequently advised in this column, before commencing above treatment.

Hen Going Bald.

E. W. L.—The prospects of curing such cases are always rather remote, so you will probably have to persevere some time before you see any result—certainly not before the proper moulting time. I do not think it advisable to breed with birds so affected. For treatment feed on a staple diet of three parts Canary and one part rape seed, and twice a week give a small piece of bread soaked in milk, and with four drops of cod liver oil emulsion dropped about it—a piece of bread the size of a hazel nut is sufficient. Give a spray of chickweed or flowering heads of groundsel every day, and in the drinking water three times a week as much Epsom salts as will cover a threepenny piece, the same quantity of chlorate of potash, and six drops of lemon juice. Allow the bird to bathe itself daily, if it will do so, but see it is not chilled afterwards. Every other day for a week slightly moisten the bare skin with a camel-hair pencil dipped in a mixture of equal part of strong common vinegar and water. After that anoint it very sparingly twice a week with sulphur ointment. After giving the above medicine in the water for a fortnight, omit it the third week, and give it only each alternate week afterwards.

Young Birds Dying.

Puzzled.—The reason the young in both broods of the Crest-bred hen died as you describe is that the hen ceased to feed them, and in the last brood she, or the cock, began pecking at the down which would have ended in plucking out the quill when they appeared had the birds lived. The only satisfactory way of dealing with a hen of this class is to keep a pair of foster parents available and transfer the eggs of this hen to the foster parents to be hatched and reared. The eggs of the foster parent may be given to the Crest-bred to hatch out, and if the foster birds are of a good type and the hen feeds well, they should rear the two broods, and thus save all that are hatched out. But it is quite useless trusting to the Crest-bred to rear any young at all. As she has already produced two good broods you should only allow her to nest once more this year.

Various and Important.

J. C. S.—1. To cut the overgrown claws, catch the bird, wash the feet clean and have ready a small pair of sharp nail scissors. Hold the bird in the left hand with its back to your palm, and the second, third and fourth fingers folded firmly across its breast to keep it from moving. Now draw out a foot with the thumb and finger of your right hand and place it between the tips of the thumb and forefinger of your left hand. Hold firmly, also holding the foot up in front of a strong light. You will see a narrow red streak running part of the way along the claw, in the centre, showing how far the blood circulates. Take scissors and snip the claw off just short of the very tip of that pink streak. If you cut right up to the streak it will cause some bleeding, so be careful to keep just clear of it. Treat each claw separately in same way. Should you accidentally go a little too close with one, and it seems to bleed too profusely, heat a knitting needle to a white heat and just touch the tip of the claw with it. But if blood only just shows on the point leave alone; it will not hurt. 2. No, it is not yet too late to mate up fresh pairs. You have plenty of time to get one brood now, and provided the birds have not been mated before this season, you may possibly get two broods if the birds are in good condition and settle down to business at once. 3. About the middle of July you should begin to take steps to prevent any pairs starting for a fresh brood. August should be regarded as the latest month for brood hatching, and this should only be allowed in exceptional circumstances.

Not Fertilising Eggs.

W. S. Brewster.—1. The fact that your Border cock bird seems sleepy and lethargic is sufficient to account for its not fertilising any of the eggs. In all probability he is in an overfed condition, which is the cause of trouble. Now you have separated him, feed on a diet of plain Canary seed, and give just a few grains of hemp every third day, and a small teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake twice a week. Give nothing else in the way of food, save an unlimited supply of chickweed, with an occasional tuft of the blooming heads of groundsel. In drinking water give twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, every second day for a week. Then for another week give the medicine twice, and during each interval between it give six drops of aromatic sulphuric acid for one day. For a fortnight after give four drops tincture of steel twice a week. Let bird have plenty of space for exercise, and after this month's course of treatment, if your hen happens to be ready for mating, try him again. He may fertilise one round for you yet.

The Opium Fiend.

"Green Food."—The fact that opium is not, I believe, existent in dandelion is a negative reply to your suspicion as to whether this is the cause of your bird's drowsiness. As a matter of fact, I strongly suspect they are overfed, and would suggest that you treat as advised to "W. S. Brewster," or at least so far as all those that are not feeding young, or otherwise busily engaged with breeding are concerned. Lettuce has often been wrongly said to cause drowsiness through possessing opium, yet I note you succeeded with this all right, and have now gone one better, and stuck the opium theory upon dandelion. Still, I do not recommend the use of dandelion for general use at this season. I much prefer chickweed, lettuce, young groundsel, or watercress in the order named.

Brevities.

Sex of Young (Novice).—Yes, as you have Cinnamon blood in both your birds, and are breeding with a Cinnamon cock, there is a chance of one of the clear pink-eyed birds being a cock. The strength of this chance depends solely upon the amount of Cinnamon blood in the hen, and there should be a goodly proportion, for there to be a fair prospect of the chance being fulfilled.

Feeding Young (Roller).—Thanks, glad to hear former advice did so much good. As regards feeding the young, I see no objection whatever to your using the food you mention, seeing you have a quantity of it. I should, however, prefer to use it as a substitute for crushed biscuit, and add about the fourth part of its bulk of egg for the first week at least. As one small egg will be too much for you to use in one day, you might economise by using preserved yolk.

Hen Refuses to Sit (Alice E. Price).—There is no accounting for the idiosyncrasies of hens, such as the one you describe, and no means of curing them. Sometimes hens are driven to forsake their nests by them being infested with red mites, or through being scared by mice. The former I do not suspect is the case, but are you sure the room to which the hen was removed is free from mice? Assuming neither of these is the cause of your hen's behaviour, transfer eggs to a more reliable hen to be hatched and reared, and allow this hen to sit on a few dummies for two or three weeks if she will, when they may be taken away, and the hen allowed to nest again in the usual course. Of course you must endeavour to arrange for her to lay about the same time as one or two other hens.

Roller not Fertilising (Roller Cock).—As you do not say whether the bird sings, nor say anything about its condition, I assume you are quite satisfied respecting its sex. See reply to "W. S. Brewster," and treat as there advised if it is in an overfed condition. If it is in poor condition before mating for the next nest, give every second day for a fortnight a teaspoonful of crumbs of sponge cake with six drops of cod liver oil emulsion in it, and on alternate days a small pinch of gold of pleasure seed and half a teaspoonful of hemp. Give two leaves of dandelion daily. In drinking water give twelve drops of Chemical Food every second day during the fortnight, and on alternate days four drops tincture of steel.

One Egg (Norwich).—Patience is the best thing I can advise in such a case. The solitary egg you may throw away now, unless you had the forethought to place it under another hen just commencing to sit, in which case it might have hatched. Give birds a mild aperient of Epsom salts for one day, and for the next two days four drops tincture of steel. Give a spray of chickweed daily, and in all other respects treat as you did when the birds were going to nest first time. It may possibly be a fortnight before she lays her second clutch now, and you can do nothing to force matters without running the risk of upsetting things generally.

Breeding Songsters (C. W. Tompkins). — You would certainly be able to breed good songsters by mating Roller cock with Norwich hen, and provided you kept no other birds and allowed the young cocks to hear no other song but that of the Rollers, you would probably get some very fair performers. But you must not expect them to equal the pure Roller in vocal abilities. In all probability they will be louder, somewhat harsher, and have less variety in their song. To avoid this you can only do so by breeding pure Rollers; and even then you can only hope for first-rate performers by a very strict system of training and selection for the young.

Wanted: A Pedigree (Three Years' Reader).—No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what a given pair of birds will breed without knowing something of their pedigree. The grey Crest and Norwich Plainhead will probably produce a few Crest and Crest-breds of an inferior type, and a majority of Plainheads, too feathery and poor in colour to compete with pure Plainheads. As regards the other grey Crest, the best mate for your purpose would be a green cap-marked buff Crest-bred, with plenty of head feather and "browing," bred from a clear-bodied dark Crested strain.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

Under Hen Canaries.

W. S. Brewster.—You are quite likely to succeed in rearing a young Yellowhammer and a young Chaffinch under your hen Canaries. It has been accomplished by a good many fanciers—or, rather, by their hens. On the other hand, hen Canaries often fail in this task; several friends have told me that they have had to finish the rearing of the young Britishers by means of hand-feeding. The ordinary diet given the hens when rearing their own kind is sufficient, providing seeding green-foods (chickweed, shepherd's-purse, etc.), and soaked rape are liberally offered. Most hens, in fact, are somewhat shy at tackling what would be most useful items, viz., mealworms, live ants' eggs, smooth caterpillars, flies, small grubs, etc. I have frequently led them into eating mealworms and the live ants' cocoons, however, by mixing the same (with a fork) well among the soft food, cutting up the mealworms into pieces—in the same way, in fact, as one gets the small insectivorous British birds on to artificial food.

Young Chaffinches Under Canaries.

C.M.O.—Another querist asks me almost a similar question this week; note reply to "W. S. Brewster." When the young Chaffinches get over a week old, you may find them begin to "squeeze out" the young Canaries, as they are birds of more vigorous growth. You can watch for this, however, and if the two lots of eggs are due to hatch within a day of each other, then it will not be difficult to bring the four Chaffinches together, assuming, of course, they all thrive. When the youngsters begin to pick up for themselves, let them have a little not too moist soft food containing plenty of ants' eggs, and with some small mealworms frequently cut up amongst it, likewise a few live ants' eggs if you can obtain the same. These things, of course, are in addition to the usual things given young seed-eaters, viz., Canary and maw seeds, lightly cracked hemp, with soaked rape, also the seeding green-foods, and, later on, cracked and kibbled sunflower seeds, etc.

Bullfinches and Breeding.

Nomad.—1. The eggs of a Bullfinch take the same time to hatch as those of the Canary and similar small birds, that is, the young may be expected between the evening of the thirteenth day and the morning of the fourteenth day after incubation commenced in earnest. No absolutely definite period can possibly be given, as it varies over a few hours according to the warmth of the weather, and (especially with captive birds) the degree of closeness with which the hen sticks to her task. 2. Bullfinch hens cannot be really depended on, either in cages, or in aviaries, though in a good big aviary, and with no other couples about, they might go through all right. That is my own experience of them. Their behaviour is very puzzling; some will not even build, but drop their eggs on the floor; others build, but even then drop their eggs about; some build, lay their eggs, and sit for a few days, then apparently get "tired"; while a select few will even make an attempt to bring up the young. Whatever the cause may be, however, I fancy the number of Bullfinch hens which "bring off" the young, as fanciers say, is very, very small—practically nil when confined to a cage. 3. This is a vexed question. I can only say, as I have said in the past, that no genuine case of a hen Canary having fertile eggs when mated with a cock Bullfinch has ever come under my notice. It is said to have often happened on the Continent. And there seems no reason why it should not do so. Have never seen a Bullfinch-Canary Hybrid on the show bench.

An Extraordinary Occurrence.

Ruby.—You say that one of your Goldfinches made a small hole in a Canary's egg, piercing both shell and skin, and that when this egg was put under a hen Mule, which was incubating a clutch, it hatched out all right. You ask, is this often the case? It certainly is not; in fact, I think you have made a mistake in some way or other. An egg which has shell and skin pierced is held to be spoiled. To prick the eggs with a needle is a well-known dodge of those who sell eggs of poultry and the like and wish to prevent them being used for sitting purposes. Personally, I certainly have never known a pierced egg to hatch out. I have, however, known eggs when well on in incubation to accidentally get the shells cracked, and then to hatch out after a little Goldbeater's skin has been at once applied to the injured part; and I have heard of court plaster, postage stamp edging, etc., being successfully used. But a smashed egg which has not been sat on—never. As regards the hen Canary, there is something amiss with her internally, and you cannot alter matters. Shall be glad to hear of your experiences with the Bramblefinch-Canary couple.

Food for Skylark.

A Novice.—This is the recipe for Lark food which "A. Horan" says he found so successful. I use it with every success myself for these birds, and large Softbills generally. The quantity mentioned would last your six Larks a fair period, but you could, of course, easily double it. The ingredients you can get from any up-to-date seller of bird foods or through our advertising columns. Game meal (without grit) or crushed puppy biscuits, three pounds, finely ground silkworm pupae, half-a-pound, meat meal, good ants' eggs and dried flies, a quarter pound each, by weight. It will keep a long time. A few mealworms and other insects should be frequently given; also a little seed in a separate dish. This food can be moistened with a little water (it should be made crumbly moist, not into a sticky mass). But a little finely minced green-food (chickweed, lettuce, watercress, etc.), or grated raw carrot, or mashed cold boiled potato are by far the best. Clover grass (either a turf of it or some chopped fine and mixed in the food) is also one of the best possible things to give a Skylark to make it sing, and keep it healthy, and assist it during the moult. The game meal is practically identical with meals sold as pheasant and partridge meals, and either can be used.

Moulting Young Mules, etc.

Muler.—Some young Mules are fiends at plucking their companions, and possibly in this lies the explanation of the missing feathers of your own birds. All pluckers must be caged up separately; they can soon do a lot of damage. But it is possible to very much minimise the dangers of plucking occurring, by seeing that the youngsters have sufficient "elbow room" in the flight cages, and that they have something to exercise their beaks upon, such as strands of thick string, cuttlefish, old mortar, sunflower seed, and especially the ripe seeding heads of wild plants, such as chickweed, shepherd's-purse, and thistles. Young birds are like most Parrots—they must be "whittling away" at something. You would no doubt notice the reply to "Tryer" in last week's issue concerning the feeding of young Mules and Hybrids, and will be following the advice given him in future. I have no particular trouble myself to bring up the young. The Linnet you should give plenty of the seeding green-foods I recommended, and lightly rub the head daily with a little sulphur ointment (obtainable from a chemist); rub only the way the feathers lie. Shall be pleased to answer any further questions, if any difficulties crop up in the future.

Changing Eggs.

Pierpont.—Other replies this week deal with the hatching of Chaffinches by Canaries, and their rearing.—It is quite achievable, but you cannot keep, for the best part of a week, eggs that have been sat on for a day or two, then put them under a hen Canary and expect them to hatch out. Only perfectly fresh eggs (newly laid) can be kept for a few days ere being placed under another hen. Once incubation has been commenced, the eggs will be spoiled if kept from under a hen for even a few hours, and especially in cold weather. During the early stages of incubation, the germ quickly perishes if from any reason the eggs are allowed to get cold. A hen being off the nest over long may even bring this about. "Signs of blood" in an egg show that it had been fertilised, also that it had been sat on for a day or so. Sorry to hear of your loss of the Canary through flying out of the window, and trust you recovered him.

Hand-rearing Seed-eaters.

S. McK.—Your question respecting the address will be found answered in the Editor's column. Yellowhammers may be hand-reared in the same way as Goldies, Linnets, and other Finches. Full details of the general procedure have been given in our last two or three issues. These seed-eaters are not difficult to bring up by hand, providing the two principal rules connected with hand-rearing are duly observed, viz., to feed a little at a time only from dawn to dark, and to keep the nestlings scrupulously clean. I don't believe in taking them from their parents at too early an age; let them show their feathers nicely before you remove them. The food to be used is the usual kind—that is, egg and biscuit. Crush two Osborne biscuits, and well mix with them the yolk and half the white of a hard-boiled egg, using a fork to do this with, one with thin prongs. When feeding take the required quantity of this mixture, and make it the consistency of thin paste (or of cream) with new milk. See that it is always sweet and free from the slightest taint of sourness. It must be made fresh at least once daily. Often I put in a good pinch of Plasmon powder, which I am never without in my bird-room. A few small cut-up pieces of mealworm may be dipped in milk and popped into their mouths pretty frequently; likewise any house flies you can capture should also be fed to them. As the youngsters grow, add a little soaked and just sprouting summer rape to the stock food. Steep the rape seed in cold water, which thoroughly change every day. It will soon begin to germinate (burst), and is then ready for use, dabbing it as dry as possible in a towel before mixing it with the soft food. Gradually increase the quantity of this rape in the food. When they begin to pick up for themselves, wean them on to soaked rape, maw, lightly cracked canary and hemp seeds, hulled and broken up sunflower seed kernels, seeding chickweed, shepherd's-purse, and groundsel tops. I have had them pick up ants' eggs with relish; in fact, I often mix some amongst the food I hand-feed with. Note replies to "Mavis" and "Tryer" last week.

Nest on the Cage Floor.

Tom.—It is irritating, of course, to find a hen ignoring one's brand new, up-to-date nest box, and building her nest in a corner of the cage floor. The feminine mind was ever a problem, we are told, though I do not know that the fact is particularly consoling. Probably your hen does not like the position in which you have hung the nest-box; you could try it very low down, level with the bottom perch, in the corner for which she has shown a predilection. Arrange the nest she has built carefully in it. If she seems disinclined to accept the situation, and starts pulling the nest to bits, put the nest-box right on the floor. If she still "won't play," then you must let her have her own way. But if you wait until she turns quite "broody" (is anxious to sit) after the third egg is laid, you can then put the nest in the box, and hang the latter on the lower nail, with almost certainty that she will make no further fuss, but will get on with the business. So long as she successfully rears the young, however, it is really a matter of little moment where she has her nest, or whether it is in a nest-box. I have seen hen Canaries quite successful with nests made on the cage floor out of nothing but dried grass.

Treating Scaly Legs.

F.M.Y.—The removal of the unsightly, and oftimes pain-giving, scales from the legs of birds is not a difficult operation, nor is it dangerous providing one handles the "patient" firmly yet carefully. I have known fanciers simply pick them off with the sharp point of a pen-knife blade; others adopt the same procedure after soaking the legs in fairly hot water. Personally I use heated oil—olive or salad oil put in a suitable receptacle, the latter then being stood in a basin of boiling water until the oil attains the desired heat, and of this one's finger is the best judge. After soaking the legs in the oil, the scales can be gradually loosened and brought away, either by the thumb-nail, or pen-knife point. It should be done as gently and carefully as possible, of course, care being taken not to wrench the leg, or a toe, or to squeeze the bird's body. Afterwards wash the legs in warm water, dab dry with a soft towel, and anoint with a little cooling and healing ointment—say, Zambuk, or boracic ointment, or even lanoline. If blood should chance to show, paint the spot with "new skin" (obtainable from the chemist); failing that, with a little Friars' Balsam. Any pain is only momentary; as in the case of tooth-pulling with human beings, the operation makes for the sufferer's future well-being. It is not correct that Thrushes "only moult twice in confinement"—if that is what you mean.

Goldie with Two Wives.

Pat.—Certainly; one Goldfinch is capable of attending to two or three wives, and usually "makes no bones" about doing so. When the first hen shows signs of being ready to nest, run the Goldie with her for a few hours daily until the third egg is laid—early morning and the evening are the best times. Then leave her to sitting and rearing duties, and repeat the procedure with hen number two. If both hens show a desire to go to nest at the same time, run him with one in the morning and the other in the evening, reversing things next day—i.e., letting the evening hen (so to speak) be the morning hen. It is quite erroneous to think a Goldfinch (or any other male bird for that matter) must be with his wife always—a few minutes daily will be all sufficient, providing the hen "calls" to him, and he does his duty in that period. Briefly put, this is the whole procedure with any of the Finches which will "take to" more than one wife; some have views on this point, and most emphatically won't. You must arrange matters to best suit your own cages and circumstances.

Crossbill and its Management.

Constant Reader.—A Crossbill is not a rare bird; it is generally a winter visitor to the southern parts of Great Britain (though nests have been found there), frequenting the forests of Scotland in fair numbers. Many are seen from time to time on the show bench. Most are shown in their wild (i.e., red plumage). After a moult in captivity their colour changes to a yellowish green. I have heard of a case in which a moulted Crossbill retained some of the red shade in its plumage; but this was a noteworthy exception. The comparative amount and depth of the red colour is said to form a reliable index to this bird's age. Your bird may be given for seed, sunflower, hemp, and Canary seed; and for animal food three or four mealworms daily, with any other insects you can get. A few berries (haw, privet, black, and so on), also the core and pips of apples, smashed nuts of various kinds (walnuts, crack nuts, etc.), and fruit are relished. Offer him any of the other seeds or seed mixtures in general use now and again; also small maize, dari, wheat, and the like. Sometimes he will eat a little, and variety is good. The Crossbill will find a great fund of amusement, and a supply of food also, in a few fir and pine cones, if you can get them with the seed in. He will also find you some employment in providing him with new perches, for he will use his spare moments in chewing these up. It is good for him, too, to have exercise for his curious and powerful mandibles. I found him an amusing and interesting bird when tame. Don't give the fir, etc., cones in a "green" state. Gather them ripe, when about to open; if necessary lay them in a moderately warm place (such as a cool oven) until they open.

Wagtail, Pipit and Bullfinch.

Novice.—I can hardly say more than that I use the food you mention myself for Wagtails, with the addition of a little dried ground-up sponge cake, and vegetables of some kind. Give a little colour-food about the beginning of July, and very gradually work up the strength. One part colour-food to five or six of soft food is a good strength. A really first-class Yellow Wagtail, put down in first-class condition, is a very good exhibition bird indeed. A Pipit (that is, Meadow or Tree) stands little chance of the highest honours in a mixed insectivorous class; sometimes a class for "Lark or Pipit" is to be found, but only at the biggest shows. A Bullfinch should have all the natural colouring agents you can gather (or it will eat) while it is moulting—black and privet berries in particular.

Brevities.

Loose Feathered (A.H.).—Yes; the treatment I recommended to you is equally suitable for similar small birds. Glad to hear it has resulted in such a big improvement in the condition of the birds.

After the Moult (C.C., Liverpool).—Into every tablespoonful of soft food given the Thrushes, well mix six to ten drops of Parrish's Chemical Food. Begin at the lower dose, and gradually work up to the higher. Give fresh daily, and continue for at least a fortnight, when improvement should be noticed. Let them have a few mealworms, and also a few "blackbeetles" daily.

Linnets Off Song (D.J.J.).—Your letter is a complete puzzle. I cannot guess the cause, and you give me no particulars to work upon. What is the state of the birds' excreta? Are they lively and tight in feather, or inclined to be dull? Do they eat well? Your feeding seems excellent, except that you give too much hemp for the springtime. It is very fattening when regularly given. Write me again, and in the meantime stir half a teaspoonful of dandelion juice (from the chemist) into their drinking water for three days.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

Indian Parrot Out of Condition.

M.W.—Your diet is fairly correct, though I prefer the home-made mixture of Canary, hemp, wheat, dari, oats and sunflower seeds, with ripe fruit, plain biscuits, nuts (shelled walnuts are best), cuttlefish, green-food and water. I should say the bird was ill when it came to you, but the trouble was not then apparent, having since developed. Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in its drinking water every other day for a week, and on the other alternate days make the drinking water the colour of pale port with Parrish's Chemical Food, and continue this for a month. If the bird has caught a chill obtain the following mixture from your chemist: Ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills, and glycerine in equal parts. To one part of the mixture add two parts of water, and let the bird have a few sips three or four times a day. In case of there being any exudation from the nostrils, spray or bathe them with diluted glyco-thymoline. The bird should be kept out of the reach of draught till its condition is improved. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops or any kind of animal food whatever. It must not be kept in a vitiated atmosphere.

A Special Case.

W. B. Smith.—In such cases I have found jalap and areca-nut most effective, but the voidings should not be allowed to remain in the cage but removed immediately. Give the bird as much jalap as will lie on a sixpence; if the bird will not take it any other way, give it in a piece of madeira or sponge cake. If this method fails slightly damp the cake, and the jalap will then adhere to it—one dose should be sufficient. Follow this by two or three doses of about the same quantity of areca-nut administered by a similar method. As a tonic I should make its drinking water the colour of pale port with Parrish's Chemical Food for the next month. You will find the proper seed diet given in reply to "Amateur" in this issue, but of course the drugs, etc., advised in this reply will not apply to your bird—only the diet. If there is no improvement ten days hence you had better repeat query with fullest details. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, nor any kind of animal food whatever.

Grey Parrot Unwell.

Amateur.—It is in the diet that you have chiefly erred; treat as under:—Diet, seed mixture of Canary, wheat, oats, dari, hemp and sunflower, well mix and keep a constant supply in its cage. As you have been giving boiled maize you must continue to do so, but as soon as it is eating freely of the seed mixture gradually wean it from the maize. You can also give, so as to vary the diet, ripe fruit, plain biscuits, nuts (shelled walnuts are best), green-food, green peas, lettuce, etc., as in season, cuttlefish, grit and water. You must not give table scraps, tea, coffee, or milk slops or any kind of animal food. Give the bird several doses of Dinneford's Magnesia, one teaspoonful to two tablespoonfuls of water, with two days between the doses. This aperient must be stopped at once if its voidings become watery loose. When not giving the magnesia make its drinking water the colour of pale port with Parrish's Chemical Food. Wean it from the boiled maize, and treat as above, and there should soon be an improvement.

Parrot Eating Voidings.

C.P.—You will have to cover the cage grating with half-inch mesh wire-netting, and see that this is kept very clean, till bird is broken of the habit. The proper seed mixture you will find in replies to other correspondents in this issue; continue the boiled maize for a time, but as soon as you are sure it is eating heartily and readily of the dry seed mixture gradually wean it from the boiled maize. Ripe fruit, plain biscuit (dry), nuts (shelled walnuts are best), also a little lettuce, green peas, or other salad as in season. Keep a piece of cuttlefish hanging in the cage, mix a little Parrot grit with its seed mixture, and offer it water, into which you have put sufficient Parrish's Chemical Food to make it the colour of pale port wine, three or four times a day, permitting it on each occasion to satisfy its thirst. In the case of any appearance of constipation give a dose or two of Dinneford's Magnesia which will soon give relief. For quantity, etc., see other replies in this issue.

Sexing Bronze Mannikins.

W. Baker.—I fear you will have much difficulty (at any rate, till you have trained your eye somewhat) in recognising the distinctions when comparing the birds on the move, but with two skins such are very apparent. Adult male: Above, brown; top of head, almost black; forehead, black; lower back and rump, whitish, barred with dark brown; tail, dull black; wings, brown with a band of metallic green which crosses each shoulder; face, chin, throat, and chest, bronzy-brown, glossed with steely-purplish; breast and abdomen, white, barred on the sides with steely-black; under tail-coverts, white, barred with blackish; beak, leaden; legs and feet, dark brown; iris, brown. Adult female: Slightly smaller than the male, her beak not so conical, but more tapering, upper surface of plumage, browner than that of the male, and her metallic green shoulder bands not so large nor quite so brilliant. The female has little more than a call note, while the male has quite a little chattering song. The throbbing of his throat while uttering it is very noticeable, while the female produces her call with scarcely a perceptable movement of the throat. With a little careful observation the above differences should soon enable you to decide whether you have a true pair or a couple of males. This species is fairly ready to nest even in a cage, though the young are not always reared. A Hybrid between this species and the Magpie Mannikin was reared in my aviary last year, and still lives.

What Bird?

I.K.—It is a female Ring-necked Parrakeet, of which there are several species. Just which yours belongs to I fear it is impossible to say from a written description. It is mainly a matter of diet, when with a thoroughly healthy body its plumage will improve. Give it several doses of Dinneford's Magnesia (one teaspoonful in its drinking water), say, three or four, with a two days' interval between each dose; if its voidings should become watery loose the aperient must be stopped at once. Follow this by a course of Parrish's Chemical Food—see other replies. Diet: A seed mixture of Canary, hemp, maize, wheat, dari, and sunflower seed in equal parts should form the staple diet; this can be varied with ripe fruit, green-food, plain biscuits (dry), nuts (shelled walnuts are best), cuttlefish, and water. Do not give table scraps, tea, coffee, or milk slops, nor any kind of animal food. Spray the bird, or let it have a bath, two or three times a week, keeping it out of draught till dry. It should have the opportunity of quenching its thirst three times a day if it is not safe to leave the water in its cage continuously, which it will be quite safe to do providing the bird is not troubled with an inordinate thirst.

Brevities.

Treatment of Tri-coloured Nuns (E.M.).—The treatment of Tri-coloured Nuns or Mannikins is very simple, and as under the conditions of cage life they are not very active birds, an ordinary breeding cage should suffice, but it must be understood that the larger the cage the less likely are they to become mopy and dull. Diet: Canary, white and spray millet, green-food (lettuce, green in flower, chickweed, etc.), cuttlefish, grit and water ad. lib., for drinking and bathing. I do not remember any record of Nuns breeding in captivity, though occasionally I have had odd birds pair up with other species, but never any result; however, it is not impossible. Put a husk at one end of the cage and a small box at the other. Give them a little hay and long grass, and leave them to their own devices. Your chances of successful breeding would be much greater in an outdoor aviary than under any other conditions.

Parrot with Wound on Leg ("Favourite").—You must certainly look to the food tin and remove any sharp edges there may be about. The wound must be well cleansed, and then lightly touched with Friars' Balsam, keeping the bird from pecking at it till it is dry, if possible. If the bird will not leave the wound alone, you must try and get a bandage of some sort round it while it is in a raw condition, and if you can protect it from the bird's beak it should soon heal. It should be bathed with clean chilled water each time it bleeds, and then be lightly anointed with the Balsam.

What Birds? (Curios).—(1) I am of the opinion that these queries belong more to my colleague Mr. Weston than to myself, and you had better repeat query as to treatment, etc., to him next week. In the meantime, diet your Bullfinch on Canary, summer rape, sunflower, and teazle seed, two parts of the first-named and one each of the others; supply fresh green-stuff, such as chickweed, tender lettuce, etc., at least twice a day. (2) Am of opinion it is the common Linnet in its nuptial dress; this rosy hue is not retained in captivity; the bird moults out brown. Of course, on the other hand, it might be some species of Rose Finch, but I think it is the former. (3) I am doubtful as to what this can be, and there is but little time to look the matter up before going to press, but I will keep the query before me and try to give you a definite reply in our next issue. At present I incline to the opinion that it is the Siberian Chaffinch, or possibly an abnormal Brambling.

Naming a Parrot (J. L. Martin).—I do not know the birds by the vernacular name you quote, and, of course, immature plumage is a very unsafe guide to define species by. However, I'm of the opinion they were All-Green Parrakeets. In such a young stage I should not hesitate to feed on pulped boiled maize, ripe fruit, and even a little milk sop, but aim at getting them on to a seed as quickly as possible. The great thing is to ascertain how they have been fed before coming into your hands, and avoid a sudden change of diet (which many species resent), and if it be unwholesome, gradually wean it on to a more wholesome one. The diet for this species is Canary, millet, and a few oats, such ripe fruit as it will take, and grecufood. They are natives of Brazil.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Linnet (F. Collinson).—Acute inflammation of lungs, enlarged liver, terminating with apoplexy. A severe form of "chill."

Cinnamon Ken (Leader). — Inflammation of lungs, spleen, kidneys, and liver, ending with apoplexy. This condition is suggestive of "bird-fever," and if any other deaths occur you must go in for thorough disinfection.

Variegated Cinnamon Cock (E. J. Reynolds).—Undoubtedly a case of "Bird Fever," which seems strange considering that you have only the house-bred birds saved from last year. The infection must have come with a strange bird or cage, but not with the seeds, unless it came from an infected shop.

Young Blackbird (W. A. Lott).—Inflammation of liver and bowels.

Hen Canary with Week-old Chick (H. Thornhill).—Inflammation of lungs, liver and spleen, terminating with apoplexy—all the symptoms of "bird fever."

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

A True Account (H.E.T.).—Many thanks.

Breeding Results (A.M.).—We shall be very pleased to have an account of your breeding results. We are always glad to hear of readers' experiences with their birds, either with reference to breeding or otherwise.

Illustrated Ideas (J. Neale).—Our artist has a number of "Ideas" awaiting illustration, and also their turn to appear in our columns, but whether yours are amongst them we cannot at the moment say. In any case, we cannot undertake to use "Illustrated Ideas" the same week as they are received.

Nest on a Tombstone (J. Burton).—We thank you for this very interesting photograph.

Outdoor Stock Cage (C.B.).—Articles and photographs safely received, and we shall hope to use them shortly. Accept our best thanks.

Address Wanted (S. McKinlay).—We cannot give addresses without permission, but if you will send your missive in a stamped envelope, we will have it addressed and posted with pleasure.

Report (D. Roberts).—We are very much obliged to you, but it so happened that a local correspondent had already sent in a report.

Seed Crushing Machine (T. B. Gray).—We do not remember the machine in question, but have put your enquiry in the correspondence column.

The Water Ousel.

In the West the Water-Colley, in the North the Dipper, elsewhere the Water Ousel—such are the names given to a rusty-brown bird with a white neck. He flies in a straight line like a Starling and in a clumsy manner as a young Starling does. His cry is feeble and pett sh, and has an unfinished sound. His haunts are the stream and small rivers. There are usually a pair of them together, and they may be seen in the same stretch of water day after day, but being shy and wary are not easily observed.

Thrushes Delay Railway Truck.

At Stairfoot Colliery, near Sheffield, Thrushes have built between the spokes of a waggon wheel, and the female is hatching four eggs. A few days ago it was found necessary to move the waggon, which is loaded with coke. As a result the nest fell out, but, strange to say, none of the eggs suffered injury. The nest and its contents were replaced, whereupon the mother bird calmly resumed sitting. The workmen are carefully watching the safety of the nest, and instructions have been given that the waggon must not be shifted until the young birds are hatched.

A Tame Hawfinch.

Allow me to express my appreciation of the excellent "Chart" of the Hawfinch which appeared the other week in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. J. C. Wilmot (Bedford). The series of charts which you are giving us is simply invaluable, especially to those who have but recently entered the ranks of the Fancy, calling attention as they do, not only to the good points of the specimens produced, but also to the bad points to be found in same. The model Hawfinch in last week's issue is, I consider, A1. This bird is a great favourite of mine. The one I now have is a great pet, being very tame. He sings to me (that is if one can call it a song), and kisses me; in fact, puts his formidable beak right between my lips. He is very affectionate.

Sparrow Pests.

A north country paper suggests combined Sparrow destruction in the same manner as Pigeons have been dealt with in the south and west of England. No doubt these birds are much more numerous than is desirable, and a little thinning out would be to the advantage of farmers and others; but they are most difficult birds to deal with. They are as cunning and crafty as any of the bird-we have, and will not look at anything having the slightest suspicion of being a trap, not even when it is left for some days. The only method of dealing with them appears to be during the winter when they can be fed and shot, or caught at night with nets. Now although the farmer is raving against them during harvest, he tolerates them during winter, and so the birds live and multiply to worry him again the following August.

THE BREEDING AND MANAGEMENT OF THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD CANARY.

By J. HAZELL.

A Lecture given before the Members of the Lewisham and District C.B.S.

The Norwich Plainhead is, to my idea, the most perfect specimen, as well as the most popular of all Canaries.—It is said that in the City of Norwich, from whence it is supposed to have originated, there are about 4,000 breeders. Although at one time the best of specimens came from there, it is not so at the present time, as they are bred North, South, East, and West. At any bird show you will always find a good gathering of Norwich. It is one of the most easy varieties for the novice to take up with; being hardy and making good feeders and breeders.

You are all aware that we have a Southern Norwich Plainhead Club in our midst, with headquarters in London, doing all in its power to improve the Norwich. It has only been in existence about four years, but there is already a marked improvement in the breed down South, and all lovers of this variety should join and support it.

Colour, Type and Quality.

In a good Norwich we must have three things—Colour, Type and Quality. A Norwich Plainhead without colour would stand very little chance on the show bench. So to get colour it is most important to breed for same. You are certain to lose colour if you pair clear to clear. The best way to obtain colour is to pair a clear to a ticked or variegated Canary. By pairing two variegated birds together it is possible to breed greens, and these paired back to clears will soon break up and you may breed from them clears, ticked and variegated. You will then have a good foundation to work from for colour.

In breeding for type it is best to pair two medium sized birds together, these being usually more typical than the larger sized birds. By pairing two large birds you get them too long and coarse in feather. Pairing a small hen to a large cock is better than pairing a large hen to a small cock.

It is most important to see that the cock has a nice round head and clear skull, showing no trace of browning, and with plenty of colour. Shape and quality should predominate in the hen. I like the hen to be shapely, with short close feather, as then, if paired to a cock with plenty of feather, they would not throw those long-feathered birds we sometimes see.

I have bred this last few years some nice typical hens by pairing two very short feathered birds together, providing they were of the right shape and quality, and have succeeded in getting rid of a lot of superfluous feather; I do not think I have any loose feathered birds in my room now.

Double Yellowing and Buffing.

Double yellowing and double buffing I have never had much to do with, not seeing the advantage of breeding yellow to yellow without one has a special object in view. But from double buffs last year I got some very nice young, but you want to know what kind of feather to use to gain anything by so doing. The pair I double-buffed had very short feathers, and that silkiness you get on a yellow of sound rich colour, there being very little meal or frost on it to what some buffs have (you might almost take it for a yellow). The young from this pair were similar in feather to the old cock, but with more meal or frost on them.

We will now run through the standard of the Norwich Plainhead Club to see what we have to breed to. "Colour: Deep, bright, pure, rich and level throughout." So you see colour is a most important point in a Norwich Plainhead. "Shape: Head round, full and neat; neck, short and thick; body, short and chubby, with wide back well filled up, deep head, and full chest." "Feather: Soft and silky, with brilliancy and compactness." "Wings and tail, short, compact, and good carriage." "Size: Well proportioned." "Beak: Short and stout (clear)." "Legs: Well set back (also clear)." "Feet: Perfect." "Condition: Health, cleanliness, and sound feather. Streaked beak and marked legs not to be a disqualification, but count against the bird to this extent." "Length: Not to exceed 6½ inches."

I think that is a very good standard, and if you succeed in breeding one that will have all these points in it, I think you will be very lucky indeed. You see there is no need to have those long-sided birds we sometimes see on the show bench.

I breed even marks, and advise breeding with birds marked on opposite sides, and as near as possible in the same way, though of course I can only speak from observation. Lizard blood, in my opinion, does not improve type or quality, though other breeders may differ with me over this.—H. THOS. LUCAS, Hon. Sec.

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

THE first council meeting of the Yorkshire Union of C.B.S. for session 1908-9 took place at headquarters, Market Tavern, Bradford, on May 16th, a good muster of delegates being present. The new president, Mr. J. Greaves, occupied the chair, and, before the real business of the evening commenced, had the honour and pleasure of presenting Mr. Fred Hammond (the late secretary) with a magnificent gold medal, value £2, in recognition of his valuable and esteemed services to the Union. Mr. Hammond responded, and spoke of the great pleasure it would give him to wear such a valuable token, and he thanked the donors for their kind appreciation of his services.

NOVICES will be pleased to hear that they have had the number of medals to be competed for in their sections increased to sixteen, twelve of which will be given in the Yorkshire section and four in the Norwich.

FIRST Feather shows seem to be falling out of favour altogether. This season not even a single open one will be held in the Union district, and fanciers will have to content themselves with those for members of societies only. The young bird shows have gradually dwindled down during the last four or five years. Then four was the usual number, and this year two have been talked about, but both have fallen through.

THE Windhill and Bradford West societies have arranged a joint ramble for May 30th, the venue being Ilkley, and they wish to get as many fanciers and friends to go with them as possible. All are sure of a hearty welcome. Plenty of bird-life is to be seen around Ilkley, amongst the birds being Kingfishers, of which I have seen several pairs every year for at least six years, and Chaffinches, of which there are more here than in any other place I have ever visited, and splendid ones at that. Both societies being strong numerically a good company is expected.

MEETINGS have been rather quiet lately, fanciers having turned their thoughts towards the breeding room. Some, as usual, are doing well, others are doing bad, and therefore are seeking the reason why this is so. I have heard of one fancier who says there are no sweating hens, and I am inclined to agree with him. In his opinion the cause is diarrhœa in the nest, this making the hen wet, and appear as though she was sweating. I hope our friend will write up to CAGE BIRDS and give his reasons and state how he proposes to remedy the trouble. I am certain this would prove both interesting and instructive, and now is the time it is required.

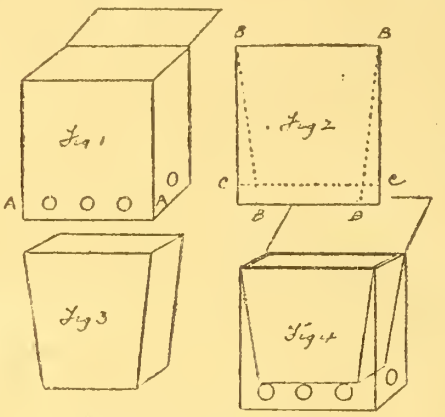
No. 207.

A SELF-SUPPLYING FOUNTAIN SEED BOX.

Sent by W. W. Challis, 7, Downing Place, Cambridge.

Below I give a sketch of a seed box, which might be of interest to CAGE BIRD readers. To make, obtain a plank of wood 8ft. long, 1ft. wide, and ½in. thick. From one end mark off 48ins. and cut off. Now divide this piece of wood into six equal pieces. These six are to be fixed together, so as to form a box with a lid. At about half an inch from the bottom, drill holes



A Self-Supplying Hopper.

(about 1¼ins. diameter). (See Fig 1). Now take the remainder of the wood and divide into four parts. Take each of these and mark off 1in. from the two lower ends (C to C in Fig. 2), and 1in. upwards (B to B), cutting off, as shown by the dotted lines in Fig. 2. These four pieces of wood are joined together as shown in Fig. 3. It will now be found that this fits into the first box, the bottom of the inset box coming just above the holes in the other. (See Fig. 4). Place seed in the box, and all you have to do is to watch that your birds obtain the seed through the holes and you have made a seed-box in which no seed is wasted and a mice-proof one. This can, if wished, be fixed to a pole if required, for the aviary.—W. W. CHALLIS.

A SIMPLE LABEL HOLDER FOR BREEDING CAGES.

Sent by J. W. Bancroft, 12, Princes Drive, Marshland Road, Cheshire.

Herewith I submit a sketch of a simple and handy device for hanging labels on to the fronts of breeding cages, which I find very useful, especially to fanciers who have an aversion to gumming or pasting the labels on to the cage front. The label is simply slipped down the groove formed by the sides being bent over to the front. The holder may be hung in position on any part of the front, so long as the hook rests on a cross-bar. To make holder, first cut a piece of tin (Fig. 1), 2¾ins. by 1⅝ins., and cut off as at A in Fig. 1. This done, form grooves by bending forward to the front the three sides of the tin, that is, along the dotted lines as in Fig 1. Now bend the half-inch strip over to the back to form the hook. The holder is now complete, and ready to receive the label. Fig. 2 shows holder ready for hanging in position.—J. W. BANCROFT.

A COLUMN FOR FANCIERS.

Appended are brief particulars of some of "Cage Birds" SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS for keepers and lovers of birds, with post free prices.

"THE HYGIENE OF BIRD-KEEPING." - 1/1
By W. GEO. CRESWELL M.D.
A most useful manual, thoroughly treating of modern hygiene in bird-keeping, by the most eminent living authority on the subject.

"SEPTIC FEVER OR CANARY PLAGUE." - 7d.
By K. H. CLARKE, M.D.,
A very useful booklet concerning this dread disease. It is the only one published, and should be found in every bird-lover's library. Dr. Clarke has given the subject very special study.

By J. H. PAYNE.
A Lecture reprinted from CAGE BIRDS, delivered by this leading judge and expert before the London and Provincial Ornithological Society, and pronounced by all experts to be a most valuable pamphlet concerning the breeding of the variety.

BREEDING CAGE LABELS, 1d. doz., 7 doz. 6d
A boon to all breeders. Neatly printed in sets of twelve, on perforated gummed paper. They can be torn off, and affixed to the breeding cage in a moment, and prevent all confusion. Useful alike to both small and large breeders of birds.

CARD BREEDING REGISTERS, 1d. each, 4 for 3d., 9 for 6d.
For hanging up in the bird-room. Printed on suitable stiff card, they are ruled to hold a complete record of the breeding results of six pairs of birds; invaluable for future reference, to ensure that knowledge of one's stock essential to accurate breeding.

LIVE BIRD LABELS, 24, 3d.; 50, 6d.; 100, 1/-
For use when despatching live birds on journeys by rail, or to the shows, etc. Printed in red ink and gummed on back. The simplest, neatest, and best on the market.

NOTE PAPER & POSTCARDS, 250 for 2/-; 500 for 2/6.
Until further notice we have decided to supply below cost price artistic Memorandum Forms and stout posteards, with name, address, twelve words of particulars, and blocks of any special variety of bird at half cost for cash. Carriage paid to any address in the U.K. Our latest style of note-head and postcard has been universally admired, and we will gladly send specimens to anyone enclosing stamped addressed envelope.

BLOCKS OF BIRDS, 1/6 each, 5 for 6/-, or 9 for 10/-.
For inserting in advertisements and for printing memorandums blocks of all kinds of birds at above low prices can be supplied. Larger blocks to order at cheapest possible rates. These dainty little blocks immensely enhance the appearance of note paper, postcards, and advertisements.

PICTURE POSTCARDS, 1d. each; set of six, 6d.
The most delightful and appropriate postcards of Canaries, British Birds, and Hybrids on the market, executed in colours by Mr. H. Norman. Ideal for Fanciers' correspondence. All represent exact and correct show types and have accompanying descriptions. State which bird or birds are required, or whether a mixed selection is preferred.
The latest set is entitled, "Pairs Matched for Breeding"; very educational art postcards. Price 3d. set of 8.

ORNAMENTAL PLATES, 1/- & 1/6 each.
The following coloured plates of cage Birds can be obtained mounted on stiff card and gelatined. This process makes them washable and gives them the handsome appearance and all the durability of framed plates under glass:—Bullfinch, Blackbird and Robin, Border Fancy Canary, Bullfinch Hybrids, Cinnamon Canary, Cinnamon Marked Yorkshires, Foreign Finches, Goldfinch and Bullfinch, Hybrids (popular), Lancashire and Lizards, Mules (popular), Norwich (Yellow), Parrakeets, Yorkshires. Price 1s. each. Crests, Desirable Aliens (Foreign Birds), Larks and Pipits, Norwich (Blaze of Colour), Wagtails and Stonechat. Price 1s. 6d. each.
Also a padded plate of KINGFISHER having all the appearance of a hand painting executed on ivory. A most charming ornament for brackets, occasional tables, etc. Price 1s. All are post free.
Why spend large sums on decorating the house with other pictures?

FANCIERS' PRINTING.
Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work.

THE NIGHTINGALE NEAR HARROGATE.

SIR,—While a friend and myself were walking near a wood at Bilton at dusk on May 16, we both heard and saw a Nightingale. I am mentioning this as it is, I think, a very rare occurrence near Harrogate.

INFORMATION WANTED ABOUT A SEED-CRUSHING MACHINE.

SIR,—Can any reader favour me through the columns of your very interesting paper, CAGE BIRDS, by giving me an idea of what kind of machine Wilson's Patent Seed-crushing Machine is, where is could be seen, and what it is likely to cost? T. B. GRAY.

TWIN LINNET MULES.

SIR,—Being a fancier and breeder and successful exhibitor, I am sending particulars of a happening in my bird place, thinking it might be of interest to other fanciers. I put a cock Linnet with a hen Canary. They paired, and she laid three eggs, all fertile. One egg was much larger than the others. Two hatched, and the young are doing well. The other egg not hatching I opened it, and found two well-matured young birds in it—dead, of course. I have shown them to several fanciers, one being Mr. W. N. Midgley, the successful Norwich exhibitor. I have them by me in spirits of wine, and they can be seen by anyone on application. The young Mules were bred in an ordinary 24-inch breeding cage. C. THE GOLDEN ORIOLE IN CAPTIVITY.

SIR,—I was pleased to read about the beautiful Golden Oriole in CAGE BIRDS of May 16, the like of which bird I have not seen since my schooling days in the hills in India, where it is found in plenty. A more beautiful bird it is hard to find when it is seen in summer plumage, sitting on the tall trees in the hillsides with the full blaze of the sun striking on it. It is hard to tell whether it is more plentiful in Africa or India, but I should say the latter, as I have never seen one while in Africa where I was for quite two years (on the trek). The only way for an Oriole to be brought up in captivity is by hand and from the nest (wild state) when about ten days old. I fully endorse everything mentioned about the Oriole, and may I suggest that besides the food that has been mentioned, the fancier should try a few gentles, mealworms, smooth green caterpillars found on cabbage plants, and grasshoppers, which may be found among the grass in the country, but are rather hard to procure. No doubt the reason why the Oriole will readily kill wasps and not eat them is on account of thinking them to be grasshoppers, and when finding out the mistake throw them away. I am not in possession of this beautiful bird and have not seen one yet in England, where I arrived from India as far back as '89. So after all these years I have almost forgotten the exact colour. This bird, the Hill Mynah and the Indian Jay I have had and reared in India (taken from the nest), but on an entirely different diet—one which is not procurable in England—i.e., ground "Gram" and "Ghee." I may say that there are millions of grasshoppers in India, and one has to be careful which ones to get as there are some which no birds will touch in India. The Oriole builds its nest on the highest of branches and almost at the top of the trees, especially firs and oaks. I trust this will explain and give a little satisfaction to W. P. Wallace and to B. De Dedem.

AN APPEAL FROM THE CAMELON CAGE BIRD ASSOCIATION.

SIR,—Will you allow me a little space in your valuable paper on behalf of the above club? We held our first open show in November, 1906—at least it was open for poultry and pigeons, but confined as regards cage birds. This was voted by everyone a huge success, but judge our surprise when we were informed about eight months after the show that we were £11 in debt! Now we consider this has been caused by sheer carelessness on the part of two of our officials, who have all along never taken the members into their confidence. We, the members, have tried all means to try and get our late show cleared up, but we have never yet got a satisfactory report from the said two officials. I may say that when we were told we had lost a good round sum on our show, the members decided to try something in order to clear this debt. With this in view, we held a concert, and provided a good company, but owing no doubt to the dull trade we have have been having here, we only realised about £2 10s. from same. No doubt some of your readers will think we have taken a long time to have our show settled up, and quite right, too. But owing to some grievance which has existed between the said two officials, which has caused a deadlock, we have been able to do very little in the matter. At the same time we, the few remaining hard-working members, are determined to have this debt cleared, so that we may have our confined members' show of cage birds this year again, as we are anxious to try and raise the Fancy to a higher level in our village. With this end in view, we make an earnest appeal to all fanciers to help us out of the difficulty we have been put into, by giving us their support at this time. Any subscriptions, though very small, will be very thankfully received.—I am, for the members, DAVID MORTON.

YELLOWHAMMER-CANARY MULES

SIR,—As promised, I write to let you know that these Mules are doing well. I saw them on Sunday last; they were then 23 days old and were sitting on the perches. Two appear to be cocks, and are favouring the hen. She, I might mention in answer to your footnote, is a yellow Cinnamon Canary. The other one is apparently a hen, and more favours the cock bird. In the other nest were four eggs, one unfertile, and the others were addled after about the third day, evidently through leaving the Yellowhammer with the hen, as the eggs were found buried under the lining of the nest. The Yellowhammer is now with a clear Buff Norwich hen, and another nest of eggs is expected. Should any fancier care to see the young, and the old pair now nesting again, or should the facts be in any way disputed, I will forward you the owner's name and address for publication, so that they may see for themselves.

IDEAL BRITISH BIRDS.

SIR,—I am more than pleased that ideal British birds are being depicted and articles written on them. I think myself it would be a good plan for men who have made a special study of certain species, men who have selected, moulted and put them on the bench, and have been successful with them, to give their views of the bird after the article has appeared. If we are going to have ideal specimens depicted, and they are going to be judged to the standard laid down in the articles, we will know what to select, but when we see birds winning at the Palace Show with the very faults that are spoken against, what are we to do? On looking at the British bird standard in CAGE BIRDS' ANNUAL for 1907, we see these words referring to the Goldfinch: "Blaze large, well back over the eye and down the throat, free from black stripes or breaks." And yet there was one with these black stripes in the money at the Palace Show. We read that the bib of the Hawfinch should not be triangular but shield-shape. The Hawfinch that won had a shield-shaped bib, and the one that was second had a triangular-shaped one. If exhibitors knew exactly the ideas of the judges, we could select them. The Norwich Canary judges judge to a standard laid down by the members of the Norwich Plainhead Club, and the Norwich exhibitors breed to that standard. Now why cannot the N.B.B. and M.C. members lay down a standard for all the British birds and let their judges judge to that standard? Then there would not be so much dissatisfaction when exhibitors go to shows to see birds taking premier honours that are not ideal specimens and do not come up to the standard.

HERBERT J. CHICK.

[The opinions of fanciers generally are always welcome, and we shall be pleased to print any discussion arising out of the "Charts" now being published. Mr. Chick, however, gives us credit for "too much good intention." Our object has never been to picture birds for judges to judge to, or to lay down arbitrary rules for our judges in the accompanying articles—and it never will be our object. That does not come within our province, but is a matter for the various specialist clubs. Our intention is solely to help the novices and amateurs in the hobby to an understanding of the various points which go to make up the winning specimens seen on the show-benches of to-day, and to point out faults to be avoided. Mr. Chick apparently overlooks the fact that possession of a fault does not by any means debar a bird—Goldfinch or otherwise—from taking and being worthy of a prize, though it may keep him out of premier place. He also has clearly never exhibited Norwich Plainheads, or had much talk with those who do so! And lastly, what is the ideal British bird?—do we know it? Anyway, if all exhibitors waited until they got it (assuming "ideal" to mean faultless) then British bird classes would soon disappear from our shows. Besides, possibly all have not Mr. Chick's faculty of consistently acquiring the "ideal."—EDITOR.]

THE C.B.U. AND CLASHING OF SHOWS.

SIR,—I think your correspondent, Mr. Dicken, is only voicing the opinion of hundreds of fanciers in his letter of May 16th in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS. I should also like to know what good the Cage Bird Union has ever done except draw the fees from the societies affiliated. Now, when we are members of a society that is affiliated to the C.B.U., we have got to show where they like and not where we like. We are not allowed to exhibit at any show which is not under the Union's patronage, while if we don't belong to a society, we can show where we like. I think the outsider is better off. Now, has the C.B.U. ever got reduced railway rates for exhibits as they were going to do when they started? If so, no one has ever heard about them. I, like Mr. Dicken, think we should be better off without any C.B.U.

T. KEEGAN.

SIR,—I heartily agree with your correspondents who think it is time some move was made in regard to the C.B.U. As far as I can make out the Union has not only failed in its purpose of benefiting the Fancy, but to an extent has hindered it by stipulating that its members shall exhibit at affiliated shows only, etc. I do not know whether the railway companies have been approached respecting the reduction of the exorbitant rates charged for birds, but if they have, the effort (one of the chief objects for which the Union was formed, I believe) has failed, as the rates not only remain very high, but passengers taking birds with them are now required to pay for same. The writer was recently charged 1s. 6d. for three show cages containing birds; they being small and light I took them in the compartment with me. Re the clashing of shows, I think secretaries will themselves do all they can to avoid choosing the same date as another society situated in their vicinity in order to obtain better entries, and I for one fail to see why we should be dictated to as to when we may hold our show, or where we may exhibit. The only end the Union will attain in my opinion, will be to decimate the membership of societies, as I personally know several fanciers at present members of societies who intend to sever their connection if this ridiculous state of affairs is allowed to continue, they being, like myself, desirous of sending their birds to the shows that will suit them best, and not to be confined to a few. I think the correspondence recently published conclusively proves that at present the Union is more of a detriment than a help to the Fancy, and I hope for a speedy improvement or its termination.

WILFRID R. BELLAMY.

SIR,—In reply to "S. A. D."; if societies have not the common sense to keep from affiliating with the C.B.U., they should stand by such a rule as I suggested last week, and thereby give any new societies that wished to either affiliate or apply for a license a chance as well as the old societies of having a license, a Saturday in the two best months and the patronage of anyone who wishes to exhibit. He knows as well as I do that if there were no C.B.U. with a rule 17, there would not be any of this annoyance, and fanciers could exhibit at any show they wished to. It is not the C.B.U. we want, but the patronage of fanciers to make the show a success. Re the Secretary of C.B.U.; I know the show dates in our district, and anyone can see them mentioned in CAGE BIRDS; the question I asked him to answer however, was how to get a Saturday from the middle of October to the end of November without clashing with another show. Now these are the only suitable months for our show to be held in, and there is a show on every Saturday (but one) on the same main railway line as ours within a few miles of us. We give way to one only 20 miles from us on the same line, and take the date fixed on by one which is on another line altogether, and 40 miles from us; yet we cannot have the license. He says the Union wants to prevent two shows from being injured by a loss of entries. This is where the selfishness comes in; the other society gets to know we have pitched on the same day that they have selected and writes to stop us getting the license, so that we may not get the patronage and a share of the entries on our line (which would not hurt them in the least). Just because they cannot get the entries themselves, they stop us from obtaining them. Then, again, I have learned that a new society has applied for a license on the same day as another old society, 20 miles from here, on the same line, and affiliated to the Union; and they were informed that they could not have the license, but could affiliate. Puzzle number two, now where does the prevention of injury and loss of entries to this society come in? FAIR PLAY.

WILD BIRDS AND HUMAN ENEMIES.

SIR,—Might I be permitted to draw the attention of your many readers to a very sad state of affairs in the woods and other places where birds are tempted to take up their abode to breed in this district (Whitehaven). A ramble into the woods mentioned leads one to wonder if in the near future there will be a bird left or not. Only yesterday (Sunday) a friend and I found five young Blackbirds lying dead at the bottom of the tree which contained the nest. How they came to be there is a mystery; but the fact remains that someone's shoe heel had mangled the poor little creatures. Only a few weeks ago I visited one of the places which I am writing about. It was a beautiful morning; on every hand the birds were singing, and it made me forget for the time being that within three hours I would be hewing coal in the mine in total darkness. But yesterday (Sunday) there was a great change. The place seemed to be entirely deserted, and where I had found birds' nests on previous occasions there were traces of the destroyers' work. Some, no doubt, will blame the children. To such let me put this question: Is a child able to break a bird's wing whilst it is flying? No; certainly not. But those "children" at ages ranging from 20 to 50 who roam the countryside with catapults are more likely to be the culprits. Can we fanciers do nothing to protect our pets? Why not form a society for the protection of wild birds and their nests? It is alright saying we have the wild bird protection laws, but that stronger measures, and stronger measures alone, will save our wild pets from total extinction is the opinion of—

THE WILD BIRD'S FRIEND.

[While deploring to the full cruelty in any form towards birds, whether captive or wild, we hope and believe our correspondent's views on "total extinction" are the reverse of correct. We have already strong societies looking after the protection of our wild birds. If the perpetrators of acts of cruelty are not seen and caught, however, no society, of course, can possibly deal with them; and if they are caught, then the law as it stands at present can deal severely with the offenders. Witnesses of wanton cruelties towards birds ought always to do their best to bring those responsible to book.—EDITOR.]

ANOTHER EXTRAORDINARY CASE OF EGG-LAYING.

SIR,—Having read in CAGE BIRDS an instance of abnormal laying by Canaries, I should like to let you know about a hen I have. I mated her on April 28th and she laid an egg on Sunday, May 3rd, another on Monday and another again on Tuesday, after which she refused to go near the nest until the following Sunday, May 10th, when she laid one. The next one appeared on Tuesday and then every day until she had laid six, making nine in all in 14 days. I set her on six and she is now sitting tight. Can any of your readers account for this?

THE BREEDING OF RIBBON FINCHES.

SIR,—Having noticed in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, recently that enquiries are being made respecting the breeding of Ribbon Finches and also that the reply was to the effect that probably these birds would breed in the autumn, it may be of interest to your numerous readers to know that a pair in my bird-room two weeks back hatched three young ones—two males and a female. Unfortunately the young hen bird fell out of the nest which was near the ceiling of the room and was killed. I find that the cock bird does all the feeding; the young ones very seldom go to the mother bird for their food. I also have a pair of Fire Finches with a nest of eggs, but I do not know how many, as I find it does not do to interfere. Other foreigners I have are busy making nests.

JOHN FAWCITT.

DANDELION AND YOUNG BIRDS.

SIR,—Your correspondent "F.H.S." did certainly not act very prudently in gathering rank, lush green-food of any kind for his birds as dandelion leaves 8 to 10 inches long would be. Assuming that he knows enough about common plants to be sure it was really dandelion that he gathered, he is another one to learn by costly experience that this green-food is not the best that can be procured for use during the breeding season. It is now many years ago since I first published my conviction, based on a series of careful experiments in using it, that dandelion, except in quite exceptional cases, should be strictly avoided after the birds have begun to breed. The very idea of discarding such a popular green-food was pooh-poohed by not a few who prided themselves on their practical experience, but many of the critics have gradually come to learn that "there's summat in it." Although many fanciers still swear by it, and use it all through the season, it will never alter the fact that it is decidedly a risky green-food for breeding birds. Exactly how it acts, or what its peculiar properties are that affect birds badly, I do not profess to know, but as different fanciers' experiences are so much at variance on the point, it may be that its harmful effects are only developed under particular conditions of growth and environment, or when the general condition of the bird renders them more than usually susceptible to it.

CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

MULE AND HYBRID BREEDING NOTES.

SIR,—Since CAGE BIRDS has become widely known in this district and wild-caught birds are so readily obtained, a good number of young fanciers have taken the hobby of Mule breeding up, and made their own cages out of all kinds of boxes. There were several instances where these fanciers had eggs in March. One had a hen Bullie (now been caged three years) fed chiefly on hemp seed, which laid, being paired up with a cock Linnet, but the eggs were laid in the cage bottom. She never made any attempt to build. Last season this same hen laid over 20 eggs in a similar way, but none proved fertile. She has been a very prolific layer during her cage life, having laid over 40 eggs. She has been up with several kinds of mates but none of her eggs has ever been any good. This does seem a pity and quite disheartening to anyone. She is quite a pet with her owner, being so tame. I know where hemp seed is used solely for them, it stimulates and brings them on a great deal earlier than other kind of food, but at the same time too much of that seed is not advisable without plenty of green food. Another young fancier had up a hen. Canary and cock Greenie, which he had seen pair well, and the Canary had built her nest three or four times, only to be at once pulled to pieces by the Greenie. He tried parting them for most of the day, but the Canary only moped and would not attempt to again build until the cock was brought back. I advised him to get a nest pan and remove the eggs as laid, placing dummies in their places, and when she had laid her three eggs remove the cock clean away from her hearing. Whether that will have any result remains to be seen. Another steady pair which are going on well is the Twite-Canary. They are the best of friends although the Twite was only caught in the winter, but soon settled down to cage life through being placed with steady birds. His greatest hopes, however, rest on the Redpoll-Bullie pair. Both birds were caught before Christmas and have steadied down very quickly and are the best of friends. He also has up the Redpoll-Greenie (both steady and caught since Christmas). This promising young fancier has a great gift for steadying wild caught birds and soon gets them quite tame. It is his intention to try the Yellowhammer-Canary cross, as he has a new tame Yellowhammer; he also intends to use the cock Bullie in several crosses. I only hope he may be rewarded with a good Hybrid or two this season. His Redpolls, Linnets, Bullfinches and Greenfinches were, I believe, all caught in a trap cage in his own garden, although he as a rule generally raises a lot of young birds by hand feeding from the nest. Hybrid breeding is certainly booming in this district, so I hope to be able to give your readers some useful hints as detailed to me by these enthusiasts. Plenty of cock Bullies can be had, and have been caught in this district, but very few hens, and what hens have been caught I hear have soon died when put in a cage. I have myself in years gone by always lost more hens than cocks. The reason I never could understand, without it was because I had not caught their mates. Some of my callers have been great students of CAGE BIRDS, and have seen Mr. G. E. Weston's notes and correspondence re the Siskin-Bullie cross, so are very anxious to produce it. I wish Mr. Weston would suggest the Yellowhammer cross in some way, as many are caught in this district, but the bird does not give much encouragement to Hybrid breeders. I am glad to say that several are going to try the cock Bullie in various ways. I don't see why he should not breed as well as the hen. I have myself used one for a good many years, but never with any success; but others might be more fortunate. I have known of several instances where he has successfully bred with his own species in confinement, the same as the Goldfinch, both in a cage and in a large aviary, but not with any other species. I hear also of a gentleman who has a large aviary and is trying this season to get a cross between a cock Blackbird and hen Thrush. He has put in a Thrush's nest in a bundle of sticks, besides giving them plenty of nesting material.

A NEW SOCIETY FOR FERRYHILL.

SIR,—I am glad to inform you that the fanciers of Ferryhill have just formed a society to be called the Ferryhill and District Cage Bird Society. We have fixed a membership radius of four miles and have upwards of 20 members enrolled. We hope to get a good few more. The meeting nights are the first Thursday in each month, commencing at 7.30 p.m. All fanciers living within the radius are earnestly invited to become members.

AN APPEAL BY MR. J. H. PAYNE.

SIR,—Kindly allow me a little of your valuable space to thank those who so kindly responded to my appeal for help in respect of the loss sustained by the old fancier in Painswick—Mr. J. Bridgman—who lost the whole of his stock through vermin. He feels deeply grateful for the kindness shown him and would ask all to accept his heartfelt thanks. I must also thank you, Sir, for inserting my appeal in your paper, and I feel sure you will be as pleased as I am that he has now made another start. Mr. C. E. Brown gave a Buff Norwich cock, Mr. and Mrs. Clark, 7 Borders; A Friend, a pair of Norwich; Messrs. E. Baker, a Buff Norwich hen; G. T. Jones, a Norwich hen and a Bullfinch cock; E. Stephenson, a Yellow Norwich hen; G. Gwilliam, a Buff Norwich cock: J. Houghton, 2s. 6d.; E. Wasley, 2s.; H. Barnes, 1s.; and J. H. Payne, 5s.

THE STUFF FANCIERS ARE MADE OF.

SIR,—A young friend of mine, an ardent new recruit to the Fancy, was invited to spend the day with me yesterday, and at the duly-appointed hour presented himself, but bearing a somewhat bulky parcel which was very carefully handled. Feminine curiosity at last prompted a question as to what the parcel contained, as it is not usually customary to carry big parcels on Sunday. Our young friend blushingly admitted that it contained his first young Canaries, and explained that as their mother was feeding them only indifferently, he declined to trust them to her tender mercies, so he took them with him wherever he went and fed them by hand! The latter he then proceeded to do, to the great amusement of those who had never previously seen a couple of healthy, hungry, young birds being hand-fed. Of such material are good fanciers made.

AN APPEAL FOR A FANCIER IN DISTRESS.

The Benjamin Spier's Fund.

SIR,—Kindly allow me a small space in CAGE BIRDS to thank the many subscribers to the above fund. Subscriptions flowed in from north, south, east, and west, and from both sides of the water. Never for one moment did I think, when I was led to send out the appeal last December, that I should get such a grand sum for our brother fancier who has had the great misfortune to lose his sight. But my appeal found its way to the hearts of brother fanciers, and to those who have subscribed I repeat His own words: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me." I thank subscribers one and all. I also wish to thank Mr. Easterling for the time he has given, visiting, as he did, the Crystal Palace Show daily, and many other shows, getting together the grand sum of £10, not being able to go myself, through being on the sick-list at the time. Since my last letter in the columns of CAGE BIRDS I have received the following sums:—Mr. Easterling, £3; Bird Lovers (Sydney, Australia), 10s.; Mr. S. Stubbings (Perth, Western Australia), 6s.; John Barclay (Belfast), 5s.; Miss P. Wahnrow (Kentish Town), 2s. 6d.; J. J. Boston (Harringay Park), 2s.; Friend in Scotland, 1s.; grand total £15 15s. 6d.

GEORGE HENRY NEAL.

SIR,—Will you permit me a small space in the columns of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, to acknowledge receipt of £15 15s. 6d. collected by Mr. G. H. Neal and Mr. Easterling on behalf of myself, wife and family, for which I most heartily thank them and all subscribers. I wish all fanciers the best of health and a good breeding season.

THE BORDER FANCY CANARY CLUB AND ITS JUDGES.

SIR,—I am pleased to hear from Mr. Patterson that he is not upset, and I hope he will remain as calm as he pretends to be. Mr. Patterson says it is nothing short of presumption for me to interfere in anything concerning the club, seeing I am not a member. I deny having interfered with the club, further than taking exception to statements he made in his first two letters. Now, Mr. Patterson has definitely stated that he will not answer any questions which touch outside the effect of the new rule on the club's interest. I say, so let it be. In my first letter I asked him a question which he said was away from the point at issue, and when I pressed for an answer he said I had an axe to grind, but he could not be the grinding stone. Again, in my third letter I asked a few questions, but he made no attempt to answer them. Now, although he looks upon me as a presumptuous, wandering intruder, he is prepared to credit me with being able to give your readers information on a whole host of questions he himself puts! I think the interests of all concerned would be best served by a club official giving the information Mr. Patterson desires. It might tend to augment the club's membership and therefore strengthen their hands. While thanking Mr. Patterson for his extended sympathy towards myself, through our knowing each other, I can assure him that I have too long and wide an experience in public life (including parochial and municipal, with all their honourable rebuffs) to be easily hurt. But, after all, what will it profit to embitter the feelings of anyone? So, Mr. Patterson, just to show you are not wanting a "grinding stone" from Whitburn, kindly insist on getting your information from your club officials.

A NOTED WINNING WHEATEAR.

SIR,—I was very pleased indeed when I took up my CAGE BIRDS to find that you had given my Wheatear the honour of being depicted on the front page. It is acknowledged by the judges it has been shown under to be the best seen on the show bench. It was caught in Leicestershire, a young bird, last season. Seeing it had to be shown in A.S. classes, I think it did very well. It won 2nd at Leicester, beaten by my Wryneck, 4th at Nottingham, beaten by my Chough, Great Grey Shrike, and Magpie, 1st at Hull, 1st and spl. at Shipton, 1st and spl. at St. Helen's, 2nd at Derby, beaten by Mr. Axe's Thrush, 3rd at Burton, beaten by a Nightingale and Golden-crested Wren. It shows that however good a specimen a bird may be it very rarely wins first every time in the Any Species class under different judges, because individual tastes differ. I consider myself that when a bird comes before a judge, and he knows it is the best specimen of its kind that he has seen, he should put it first. A black and white sketch gives you the outline of this bird, but it cannot show you the beauty of the bird. Its wings are lovely and as full of work as possible. It carries a grand colour on breast and back. Birds such as this one should be depicted for the benefit of the novice, because often we see birds depicted that are not ideal specimens, although they may have won at the Palace. Thanking you and wishing CAGE BIRDS every success.

SWEATING HENS & GROUNDSEL.

SIR,—I do not like to seem to differ from so old and respected an authority as Mr. Verrall, yet I am sure that he must himself welcome a recent experience of mine with groundsel which will go far to prove that it will not of necessity kill either old or young Canaries. First, one word regarding sweating hens. If, as the work of Dr. Creswell goes to prove, sweating is caused by a non-virulent type of septic bacilli similar to the germs causing septic fever, his conclusions are far off the mark as to the cause of sweating; but there is certainly a great truth underlying his remarks as to egg-food, too rich in egg being a predisposing cause, seeing that the egg is the cultivating medium for the bacilli. As regards groundsel I should never hesitate to give it to birds when it is in the proper condition; that is, not too rank in growth, clean, young and tender, fresh, dry, and free from frosted or decaying portions. These, indeed, are essential points which every kind of green-food should comply with. For the first round of nests it is often the only green-stuff available, and numbers of hens will almost rear their young upon it. Now for my experience. At the present time I have a pair of Crests with a brood of one solitary youngster—the only one that was hatched. The hen being an unusually good feeder as Crests go, has kept me particularly interested in this pair. The only green food I have given them is groundsel, and the birds both feed very freely with it, so that it forms probably at least one-half of the sole sustenance taken by the youngster. On the morning of the twelfth day after this bird was hatched the birds were some hours late in being fed, and the green-food had been absent since the previous night. The youngster was chirping impatiently, and the hen obviously anxious to get to work. A tuft of freshly-gathered groundsel was given her, being placed where she could reach it comfortably from the side of the nest box. Immediately she hopped on the side of the nest and began devouring it ravenously, clearly bent on getting a cropful in the shortest possible space of time. I watched her movements minutely, and no sooner had she filled her crop in this hurried manner from the spray of groundsel than she turned round and fed the youngster with just as much of it as he could hold. All this took place in such a short space of time that it is hardly possible to believe that all the mass of green-stuff passed into the young bird's crop could have been warm. And yet that youngster is still living, and thriving apace, and has not looked behind since it was hatched. Surely this should convince our old friend that groundsel will not kill young Canaries. Had there been the smallest danger of it doing so this eleven-days-and-a-half-old youngster would have stood a poor chance after a meal as described coming on top of a long abstinence.

How to Fit Up a Bird-room.

Cage Fittings and their Uses.

I will now pass on to the fittings. For seed, I use wooden hoppers four inches wide, with a glass front, and the sides made to pass through the wires about half-an-inch when hooked on, thus preventing the seed being thrown out on the floor and wasted (see Fig. 7). The drinkers are of the open glass pattern with egg-shaped bottoms, and are round inside, with a flat piece outside to fix against the front of cage. When hung on with a wire bracket, these drinkers are very easily cleaned out, having no corners in which the slime may collect. Covered drinkers should not be used as the water in them gets foul much quicker.

Regarding the egg-food pans: These constitute one of the greatest difficulties the breeder of Yorkshires has to contend with. If he use the cut drawers for the door to drop in, he finds that he cannot hang the show cage on and use the egg-drawer as well, and if he cut a slot in the wood under the door, he cannot hang on the cage because the knob of the egg-drawer gets in the way, and the birds have also to pass over the egg-food to get into the show cage. If the drawers are used either to the right or left of the door, they are liable to get the excrement dropped into them from the perch above. To get over all these difficulties, I have been using the half-circle pans fixed with a piece of stick just above the right-hand perch on the cross-bar of the front; but this is very awkward in the breeding season, for you have to open the door, and put the hand right into the cage to get out the pan, and of course, off jumps the hen. Before the season arrives I hope to have time to alter all my cage fronts by cutting a space between four wires just over the right-hand perch (see C, Fig. 2) and fixing a cross-piece so as to form a slot for an ordinary egg drawer to slide in. (See Fig. 8.) The egg-food can then be changed without disturbing the birds.

An Easily-constructed Cage-rack.

The arrangement of the cages depends a great deal on the aspect of the room. If there is plenty of light, you can arrange them anyhow you like; but if, as in my case, there is only one window (and that facing due north, with a wall running out at right angles some 15 feet, entirely preventing the sun getting into the room as it goes down to the west, my room therefore never getting a ray of sunshine from morning till night), the breeder then has to put his thinking cap on, in order to devise a means of getting as much light as possible into his cages.

Having a great objection to the racks I have seen, on account of the harbour for red mite which they usually provide, I spent a good deal of time trying to think out how I might construct a rack on which the cages would touch as little as possible, leaving at the same time plenty of air space all round them. The result of this consideration was the cheapest, neatest and best rack I have as yet seen. These racks can be fixed close up to the wall or in the middle of the room, if necessary.

The wood used for making them is 1 inch wide and ¾ of an inch thick, which should be planed up on all sides. It can be purchased, if so required, ready planed for about 1s. 9d. per 100 feet. Cut off a number of lengths 6 feet 4 inches long, and also some 1 foot long; now take the long pieces and lay them parallel, fixing the short ones across them like the rungs of a ladder as in Fig. 3. The first one should be 9 inches from the end of the long lengths to the top edge of the cross piece, and from the top of this to the top of the next one the space should be 17 inches; then two more 17 inches again. There should then be 16 inches of the long lengths left.

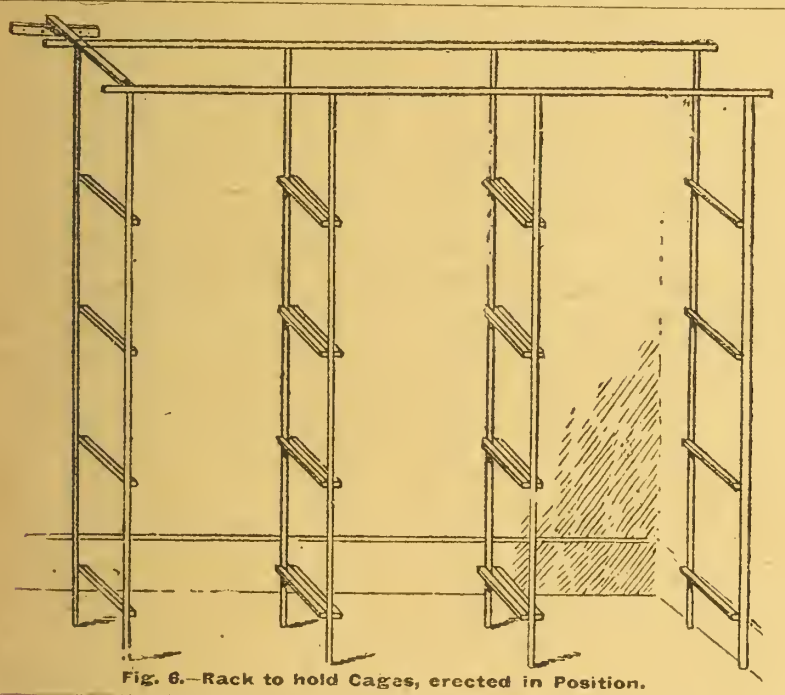

Fig. 6.—Rack to hold Cages, erected in Position.

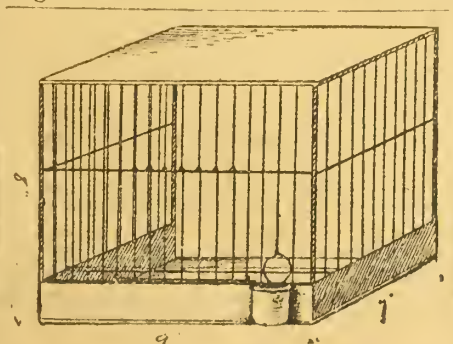

Fig. 9.—The Nursery Cage.

Now turn this over and fix fillets on the other side exactly corresponding; this will make what I will term a double standard as in Fig. 4. A single standard will also be required at each end of the rack, that is to say, with the fillets nailed on one side only.

When making these standards, great care must be taken to get them all exactly alike. Supposing the rack to be for a stack of twelve 23-inch breeders, the standards should be placed 23½ inches apart and a length of the wood fixed along the top ends of the standard back and front, being careful to keep the standards the proper distance apart. If the end of the rack is close up to the wall, it will be as well to fix a single standard to the wall first; being careful again to keep it perfectly upright and with the fillets facing the room. It will then be necessary for someone to hold up the two long lengths, while their ends are fixed one to each top end of this single standard.

Now take one of the double standards and place it 23½ inches from the fixed one, that is, measuring along the top stretchers, which should still be held up, and nail through the stretchers into the top ends of the standard. Now fix another double one in like manner, and then a single one with the fillets facing the last double standard. Cut off the ends of the top stretchers, leaving two or three inches overhanging for strength. A fillet about 1 foot long should now be fixed to the wall exactly opposite and level with the top of the last single standard, and a piece of the wood should be fixed from this fillet to the front of rack directly over and nailed to the standard, care being taken to see that the rack is perfectly upright, neither leaning in towards the wall or out to the room. See Fig. 6, which shows the rack in position.

Completing the Racks.

The bottoms of the standards should now be fixed to the floor with some small brads, keeping them the same distance on the floor as they are on the stretchers at the top. Having fixed the bottoms, it will now be necessary to fix another length of the wood along the back edges of the standards about three foot from the floor again keeping the standards the proper distance apart.

To save a lot of measuring it is best to cut off a piece of the wood exactly 23½ inches long and hold this between the two standards when fixing. When this back stretcher is fixed on, the rack should be quite rigid and ready for use. If the room is large enough it is best to fix the racks far enough from the wall to allow of one's getting behind them, but this is not absolutely necessary. It will now be seen that this rack will hold three tiers of cages, four in each tier, with the bottom one 9 inches from the floor and the top one as high as it is advisable to go. This rack can be made to suit cages of all sizes, providing they are the same length in each tier; and when the cages are all in position it will be seen that there is air space all round them. Any cage can be removed from the rack without disturbing the others.

The spaces between the cages are also handy for cleaning-out purposes; a board can be made to slip in between the two cages and the sawdust scraped out on it, thus preventing it from falling into the lower cages. I like sawdust best for the cage bottoms, as it keeps the birds much cleaner. Sand, however, must be given in a pot or pan of some kind.

Nursery and Bath Cages.

In addition to the cages previously mentioned, I use nursery and bath cages. The nursery cages are about 9 inches long, 7 inches wide and 8 inches high—wood top and bottom and wire all round, with a door and a drinker hole in one end and a perch at the same end. No perch should be used at the end nearest the breeding cage, or the old birds will pluck the youngsters through the wires. Fig. 9 depicts one of the nursery cages. Two hooks should be made on these cages, so that they hang on to the cross-bar of the cage-front. A good number of these nursery cages should be kept, so that when in use a clean cage can be exchanged for a dirty one, for it is much better to remove the young birds to a clean cage than to clean the cage out with them in it.

The bath cages are about 7 inches long, 6 inches wide and 7 inches high—wood top and bottom, and wired on three sides, one end being left open for the birds to enter when the cage is hung on to the breeder. This cage is also fitted with hooks in the same way as the nursery cages. White china pie dishes make very good baths at a cost of one penny each. These nurseries and baths look very neat if painted inside and out to match the breeders.

The whole of the cages and fittings in my bird-room, including hoppers, show-cages and cases, I have made myself, and if anyone about to start a bird-room will follow out the foregoing instructions, I feel sure he will be pleased with the result. I am equally sure they will be as proud of their room as I am of mine. At any rate, that is my sincere wish.

THE YOUNG NATURALIST.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given each week for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age, and must state from where stories are taken.

Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

Grandma's Canary.

One day an old lady had a hen Canary on her head, when she heard a knock at the door. When she went to open the door the bird flew out. The old lady was very frightened at this, and ran out and followed the bird, which flew on to a tree close by. She whistled to it, and it flew back and sat on her head again. She then walked indoors with the bird safely in her keeping. This lady was my grandmother. —Sent by Annie Saunders (aged 14), The Street, Dickleburgh, near Scole, Norfolk.

*The Parrot and the Thief.

A certain boy was presented with a Parrot which became very fond of him. It would not make friends with his sister or anybody else, but would scream out if they went near him, "Gway, gway, bad man, bad man." One day it happened that all the family were out of the room where the bird was, and a passing tramp stole in. Not seeing the Parrot or anybody about, he laid his hands on a silver paper-knife, meaning to steal it. Suddenly he was startled by a hoarse voice which began screaming, "Gway, gway, bad man, bad man." He fled hastily, but the bird's cries roused attention, and the thief was captured.—Sent by M. E. Rickman, 63, Clwyd Street.

Will Master Rickman give town and state his age?

*The Quarrelsome Cuckoos.

Two Cuckoos and a Hedge-Sparrow were hatched in the same nest recently. One Hedge-Sparrow's egg remained unhatched. A few hours after a contest began between the Cuckoos for the possession of the nest, which continued undetermined till the next afternoon, when one of them, which was somewhat the more superior in size, turned the other out, together with the young Hedge-Sparrow and the egg. This contest was very remarkable. The combatants alternately appeared to have the advantage; each carried the other several times to the top of the nest, and then sank down again oppressed by the weight of his burden. At length, after various efforts, the stronger prevailed, and was brought up by the Hedge-Sparrows.—Sent by Edward Lydyard (aged 12), 60, St. Nicholas Road, Bristol.

My Experiences with the Nightingale.

By J. JEFFREY (Kidderminster).

A Venture at the Shows.

The show season was now in full swing, and I determined to try my hand at exhibiting. I made some cages and sent birds out to all the shows within 40 miles, not venturing to send them too far away. I was very successful indeed, often taking 1st, 2nd, or 3rd in soft-bill classes with Nightingales. I have quite a pile of my cards by me now, and I often look through them with pride. A good percentage of the birds were claimed at the shows, and I succeeded in clearing between £6 and £7 in prize money. This compensated me for my trouble and expense, as what birds I had left sold well and at a very fair price.

Further Valuable Experience.

I determined to keep two pairs myself through the winter having, as I said, a good supply of cured wasp grubs by me. I had two large roomy cages made with canvas tops, and I placed a pair of hand-reared birds in the one and a wild caught cock bird and a hand-reared hen in the other. But through an accident I lost the one hen. The hand-reared cock began to warble well as soon as it had finished moulting, and improved very considerably as the weeks went by; but the song never approached that of an adult specimen.

I was very anxious to hear the wild-caught one begin to sing. It seemed a long time to wait from August to December without hearing a note, but one day about the middle of December, sure enough the old cock began to sing one very cold morning as soon as it was daylight, and most mornings after that I had the pleasure of listening to him pour out his pure, wild notes equal to those of any bird I had heard. It was a treat, and I was delighted, as it proved beyond all doubt that Nightingales would sing in confinement.

Nesting in Confinement.

One morning while I was having breakfast and was listening to the birds singing, I saw him fly across the cage and make love to his mate. Sure enough the birds were paired, and very soon after I saw the hen carrying about any bits of rubbish she could find in the cage in her beak. I could hardly believe she wanted to nest, but I went and gathered a handful of leaves and placed them in the cage. It was only the middle of January, and the weather was cold. But for all that she soon manipulated the leaves into a kind of nest in one corner of the cage, and I began to wonder what the outcome would be.

One day, while trying to see how the nesting operations were going on, I noticed a lot of feathers in the nest and concluded that the birds were plucking themselves for material with which to build a nest. But, on closer examination, I found that both birds were full of quills. The birds were living rather high up the wall and the fire and gas at night had sent them into a moult. This quite alarmed me, and instead of dropping the birds lower and further away from the fire, I took them directly into the front room. This proved fatal, and within a few days both birds were dead. Imagine my disappointment. I had only the one hand-reared cock bird left. He had picked up the song of the adult bird very well, and was making a great improvement in his style of singing, but he was nothing like so nice a singer as the old bird.

Preparing for Further Experiment.

This completed my first year's experience in the keeping of Nightingales. I was more than satisfied, and had learnt a lot, and I determined the next season to go in for it "thick." So I set to work and made some cages, and as soon as the weather opened out well, I commenced to build a good-sized aviary—20 yards long, 7 feet high, and 8 feet wide. This I divided into four, with half-inch wire netting, and doors leading from one to another. The back and part of the top were made with corrugated iron. The front part of this (under the wire netting) I planted with a thick hedge of evergreens and privet with a brick gullet about a foot away for a stream of water to run down so many hours each day.

My past experience convinced me that Nightingales could not only be kept in confinement, but also bred in confinement; and, nothing daunting, I was going to try the experiment. Every preparation was made to carry out my object. First of all I decided not to rely on gentles for the staple diet.

Gathering Ants' Eggs.

So I made several trips to the outlying woods and gained permission to gather ants' eggs therefrom. I had four different places where ants were pretty plentiful, the nearest place being about two and a half miles away. I had a strong carrier fixed to my bicycle, and had two bags made of black selica, about eighteen inches wide and one yard long.

Many a morning at 4.30, I was off to the woods to gather a bag of ants' eggs. I would carefully remove all the sticks and rubbish from the top of the nest until I came to a cluster of eggs, and then with a small shovel gather them into the bag. I tied up the bag and shook it well so as to get rid of the loose ants. I replaced the nest as nearly as I could as I had found it, and moved off in quest of another. When I had got about 20 yards away, I would look carefully on the ground to find a fresh trail of ants. This done, I would watch them till I saw some of them carrying bits of stick or leaves, or grubs, and whichever way they were taking them, that was where to find the nest. I would follow the trail straight up to the nest, and in this way I would fill my bag with a good supply of ants' eggs and come home with an appetite ready to devour a dry crust.

Now came the task of clearing the eggs from the rubbish. I had previously levelled out a square patch of ground at the top of the garden and boarded it round with 11-inch boards which were let in the ground several inches. These boards were well besmeared with gas tar inside and out, and the ants' eggs were shut down inside this patch. With two small riddles as much of the rubbish was taken away as possible, using the larger mesh first and then the smaller one. Ants and rubbish were put back into the bag and carried away to the nearest wood.

Then came the cleaning operations of those that were left. The eggs were spread out as thin as possible, and long boxes were made having a hole at each end. These were placed all round the square, and very soon you would see thousands of ants carrying eggs into them.

Procuring Ants' Eggs.

As each box was filled, the eggs were emptied into a tin box and placed in an oven till they were steaming hot. They were then placed on canvas frames and put in a good airy room to dry gradually. In this way a grand supply of ants' eggs was always available.

The only drawback I experienced was that in dry weather the ants would bore holes in the ground and carry their eggs in there; they would also tunnel under the boards and get away. But I soon overcame that difficulty, by covering the floor with a thick strong canvas. It was about the middle of May when the ants' eggs appeared, and operations began on the 9th of June, when the first nest of 'gales was secured. I remember the date quite well, as it fell on the birthday of a friend of mine, who was quite taken up with the hobby, and was helping me for the very love of the thing. By this time I had by me quite a store of ants' eggs, and it was lucky I had, for I succeeded in collecting 64 Nightingales that season. In addition, I secured about 13 adult Redstarts, 2 nests of Wrynecks, nests of Lesser Whitethroats and Dippers, several Whinchats, Stonechats, Rock Pipits, and a nest of Tree Creepers, making 120 odd birds in all.

Some Unfortunate Incidents.

The ants' eggs proved a veritable godsend to me, but for all that, I had to use a very large proportion of genties. I had no trouble at all with the birds which turned out strong and healthy, and it was less than a dozen I lost all that season. I made a small extra place in the aviary for cleaning ants' eggs, and using some very stiff gas-tar, I found this acted like bird-lime; it killed several birds for me! On another occasion, I went into the aviary with a bucket of water, and the 'gales, which were very tame, came flying after me: some settled on my head, some on my shoulders and arms, and, in fact, anywhere they could settle. They would do this, especially if they were a bit short of food. Unfortunately, on the occasion in question, one missed his mark, and fell into the water, and in my hurry to put down the bucket and get the bird out, to my annoyance, I found (after it was too late), I had dropped it on two nice young 'gales.

I had a very good season as regards sales and exhibiting, and I succeeded in taking first and special and several other prizes at the Crystal Palace, also winning a tea service of 50 pieces for most points at the Longton show.

They Wintered Well.

This time I kept by me three pairs of 'gales and several odd hens for breeding purposes in the following spring. They wintered well and sang splendidly, but I kept them in a much colder room. One bird I kept out-doors till the middle of January, when the thermometer registered 10deg. of frost, and the wire netting was white all over with rimy frost. I am convinced that 'gales can stand a very large amount of cold, providing they are well fed.

Last year I went away for three days at Christmas, and when I came home the first thing I heard was the 'gale, who was singing away for all he was worth, and this notwithstanding the fact that the ground was covered with snow, two inches thick, and there had been no fire in the house during my three days' absence.

I had special reasons for keeping my 'gales in as cold a room as possible. In the first place, I wished to keep them from pairing, and in the second, to harden them for turning out in the following April. Everything went off satisfactorily, and the birds were put in the aviary. My food supply was getting "spun out"; the weather was too cold for breeding gentles, and no ants' eggs were yet to be had. So I had a very anxious time of it. I sent for a quart of mealworms, which cost 7s., but, dear me! they ate them all in two days. But just in the nick of time I was able to gather both ants' eggs and gentles.

A Crowning Success.

I gathered a lot of old leaves and blackbirds' nests and pulled them to pieces. Sure enough, the birds started to breed. I had three nests. Two of them yielded me four youngsters each, and the other one three.

It was a treat to hear the birds sing. The neighbours were out at night listening to them, and I became quite "famous." This was the crowning year of all. I bred and collected over 80 'gales that year (1899). A gentleman came from Birmingham to see my aviaries, and a column of particulars appeared in a Birmingham weekly journal, which I send for the editor's inspection.

I shall never attempt to breed 'gales again, except it be an odd pair; there is too much trouble attached to it. And the quantity of food necessary during the winter is enormous. I don't think for one moment that the Nightingale could be kept through our winter on artificial food. My birds were kept exclusively on cured wasps' grubs, English ants' eggs, and gentles. On this food Nightingales will live for years in confinement, and will sing and breed just as well as in their natural state.

This year, as I have said, proved to be my best season. I had a tremendous collection of soft-bills, and besides this, I reared a nest of Kingfishers, seven in number. Each one of these birds required daily five fish from 2 to 3 inches long. I sold five of them, and kept two till long after Christmas, and then I lost them through misfortune.

Altogether I had a very trying time to keep up the supply of food for my birds. I picked out quite a score of the worst-looking birds of one kind and another, and turned them out. Some of them, although wild-caught, stayed about for weeks, refusing to go away, and often I would throw them a handful of ants' eggs. I felt sorry for some of them—they tried so hard to get back into the aviary.

Proper Feeding Necessary.

It was very evident I could not improve my mode of feeding, as the bulk of my birds were living pictures as regards health; there was not a delicate bird amongst them. I am quite convinced that if you want to keep a Nightingale for show or song you must keep from artificial food as much as possible. The natural food of the 'gales is little more than what they can suck from the caterpillars, etc., their chief diet being only juicy matter. Only the juicy part of the beetles they attack passes through the birds, as the wings and legs are thrown back in pellets in a similar way to that of the Owl. The song of the Nightingale, too, depends on the power of the musoles of its throat, which are only delicate organs and easily destroyed; how then can it be expected that a 'gale will sing in confinement on such indigestible matter as grated biscuits and other ingredients that are to be found in artificial foods?

It is quite true that the birds will live on such foods for a considerable time, but, as I have proved over and over again, let anyone come and pick the finest bird I have and feed it on artificial food, and in a month after I will beat it hands down with a much inferior bird; simply because his bird will go back, while mine will improve. I did this so repeatedly when I was exhibiting, that I gave up showing as it was "spoiling" good customers.

The Disappearance of Marked Nests.

The following year I laid my plans for another good season, but quite a different experience awaited me. I found 13 nests, which I calculated would bring me at least 70 birds. But the first four nests I went for had disappeared. One was in a by-lane; I saw it one day, and it was quite safe, but I learnt afterwards that a spaniel dog had routed it and killed the young. Rats were responsible for another, as I saw them running about close to the nest. Another was close to a drain, where a pair of weasels had made their billet; the old hen had been torn to pieces on the spot. As I was nearing the fourth nest, I heard quite a commotion, and on hurrying to the spot I discovered an old Jay in the act of carrying off the last young bird.

This all happened in one day, and a 10-miles journey round resulted in my returning without a feather. I was greatly disappointed, but my troubles were not yet over, for a very heavy thunderstorm came on and simply drowned several more nests out: and that season I only succeeded in getting 27 birds.

My Final Experience.

The next season I had 64 birds, and so on till the present time. But last year was the most disastrous of my 12 years' experience. The continued wet weather destroyed thousands of young birds. Out of 20 nests, only 2 of these carried; one nest of youngsters, I am sorry to say, got out when only 8 days old, and I lost them, and only succeeded in gathering 7 birds.

Nightingales only breed once in a season and in the whole of my experience I have never known them to nest again after hatching out their young; but in nearly every instance where the eggs have been destroyed, I have known them go to nest again. Last season many of them forsook their eggs when they had been sitting a week. I could go to half-a-dozen nests now and find them intact. Several I brought home, but the eggs were of no use. One I gave to a gentleman to take to America.

In conclusion, I may say that I don't think there is anyone living to-day who has had the time and opportunity of studying the habits of the Nightingale and other soft-bills that I have, and very few who have had the practical experience and handling of so many birds of this class.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

The Novices Notebook.

This page will consist of topical hints, addressed chiefly to beginners, concerning every branch of the hobby of bird-keeping, and the notes will be contributed from time to time by various leading experts.

Red Millet.

Red millet may be treated in practice much the same as white millet. It is as a whole slightly larger in size than the white, and is of a dark reddish-chestnut colour. The birds seem to eat it just as freely as the white when white is absent, but as long as white is available that will always be given preference. Thus if a mixture of white and red millet and Canary is given very little attention will be paid to the two last-named until the white millet is exhausted; then, again, little attention will be paid to the Canary until all the red millet has disappeared, which would seem to show that millet of any colour is better liked than Canary by these birds.

Other varieties of millet, brown, yellow, and also a mixture of brown, yellow, red and Indian, are not infrequently sold by dealers who are not specialists in bird seeds as red millet. But in practical use, so long as one provides a good proportion of white these varieties may be used in a manner of speaking indiscriminately.

Indian Millet.

The Indian millet being very small in grain is of particular use for the smallest of foreign seed-eaters and for young foreign birds just commencing to feed themselves, as these classes of birds cannot always easily "tackle" the larger grains of red and white varieties. It is of a rather dull, buffish white—I had almost written dirty white—colour, not unlike a sample of miniature white millet that had long lost its freshness and brilliancy.

Spray Millet.

Spray millet is the yellow millet which is sold in the natural husk as it grows. Its use is chiefly as a treat for the hardier classes of foreign seed-eaters and for shy or delicate feeders. Most birds enjoy picking out the seed for themselves immensely. In large aviaries it may either be suspended in bunches, as brought from the roof—the best place is where mice are not troublesome—or tied to the ends of sticks four or five feet long and planted here and there about the floor.

As a food for Canaries and British Finches it seems less suitable than Canary, and is rarely liked so well by the birds. But foreign Finches will as a rule come under the general category of seed-eating foreigners as already mentioned. British Buntings I have found rather partial to the white millet and should expect it to be rather favoured by the Larks and Pipits, and possibly the Wagtails, though I have not really tried it extensively for these birds.

Most of the foreign mixed feeders and some of the generally classified insectivorous species, of which the Nonpariel and Pekin Robin may be mentioned as types, respectively, prefer the white millet as a seed food to any other—hemp only excepted. Here, however, it is to be understood that the seed diet is decidedly a bye-portion, and given more in the way of a treat than as a portion of the diet.

Linseed.

For cage birds pure and simple the use of this seed may be advantageously reduced almost to the vanishing point. Its extremely oily nature renders it wholly unsuitable as a regular item of diet for closely confined birds. Its principal use is when given a few grains every two or three days to hen Canaries for a month or so prior to nesting, or to birds that are in a poor condition. In the latter case its fattening nature is useful to build up the birds quickly and in the former case its oiliness is believed to have a good effect in helping to ward off egg-binding with the early nest. But when given in either of these cases its use should be discontinued as soon as the birds go to nest, as it not infrequently sets up trouble with the young when it forms any appreciable portion of the seed diet, and the hen feeds the young with it to any extent. The glutinous properties of the seed are then against it.

Another time when it is generally used is during the latter half of the moult. At this time it is of real service, so long as its use does not set up undue looseness of the bowels. Its oiliness is now useful from a three-fold point of view: It helps to form a suitable carrying medium for the colour used in colour-feeding and distributing it in the feathers; it gives a natural bloom and gloss to the plumage when fine; and the drain of the moult reducing the general condition of the birds, its fattening properties are at this time much more useful than would be the case at any other time. Many fanciers make a point of mixing a small quantity of crushed linseed with the soft food. This, however, is a practice I would never advise, as it is not every bird that will eat the food thus prepared, and perhaps those that will not are the wisest, as the oil in it must at the best of time be more or less rancid from exposure to the air, which doubtless accounts also for its being more relaxing when given in this way. Always give linseed in the whole seed or not at all.

Apart from these minor ones, the chief use of linseed is for forming a portion of the seed mixture for British birds of the Linnet tribe—Linnets, Twites, and Redpolls—and in smaller proportions for British Finches generally; and for use in mixed collections of birds kept in large out-door aviaries. On broad, general principles it may be written down as a guiding axiom that the smaller the space in which a bird is confined, the smaller must be the proportion of this seed in its diet, cutting it down until on reaching the tiny, so-called regulation singing cage of a few inches square, it is made to disappear altogether.

To the fancier who is not conversant with this seed, perhaps the best description is that it is a small seed, in colour and in longitudinal corrugations very much resembling the common flavouring carraway seed. It is a little shorter in length, but about three times as thick, and is of an unbent cylindrical shape.

It is invaluable as a regular item in the stock mixture for Goldfinches and Siskins in particular, and for British Finches generally. Most Canaries will also eat it eagerly, and it may, therefore, find a place in any mixture that is given to them as an occasional treat, for which purpose it will be better suited than as a regular item in the every-day bill of fare of these birds.

Thistle Seed.

There are very few but who know this seed well enough, through having gathered at one time or other their own supply from the heads of the various thistles. All that has been said concerning the use of teazle will apply equally well here. Both seeds are, so to speak, the speciality for Goldfinches and Siskins, and are of great service to all the rest of the Finch tribe, and as an occasional change for Canaries.

Whether used as a cleaned seed, and mixed with the daily diet, or given in the more natural form of ripe thistle heads, it is of the utmost service for seeding off Greypates and bringing them through the moult successfully. It is also very good as an item in the regular mixture for feeding adult birds. Indeed, it might almost be said that the three seeds, thistle, teazle, and hemp, are the mainstay of the keeper of Goldies all the year round.

One important caution we may point out here is to avoid the mistake of buying the shiny black niger or inga seed for thistle seed. To many fanciers inga appears to be known as thistle seed, or rather, it is believed to be the product of a species of thistle, and consequently to be a good substitute for real thistle seed. This is a very serious error, for whilst thistle may be used with freedom as a regular article of diet, niger is only suited for special use on particular occasions. If one has any real doubt about recognising the two seeds, the best way out of the difficulty is to procure a few ripe thistle heads, and extract the seed for comparison with niger, when one should have no further trouble in recognising the two seeds apart.

Summer Rape Seed.

The only rape that is fit as a regular article of diet for caged birds is that known as Summer, or German, rape. It is a small round seed, of the usual cabbage-seed type, but is of a reddish brown colour. In colour it is somewhat variable, and often has a kind of purplish or bluish bloom, which probably gave rise to an idea that the rape of the German breeders was of a bluish hue. The flavour should be mild and nutty, with nothing acrid or "mustardy" about it. When this is obtained it may well form a fourth part of the bulk of the staple mixture for Canaries during the greater part of the year. In very cold situations, or cold rooms, it may be used more freely during the winter months than is advisable in heated rooms, where, if it is used very freely during the winter, the effect will be to force the bird into premature breeding condition, and upset the stock generally in the following spring. If used very sparingly during the winter, and then given rather freely for a week or two, its effect is soon seen in forcing the birds into song and condition, especially those that have appeared a little backward.

Another time when it may be used freely with every advantage is when the young are being reared. At this time a regular supply may be given, either dry, scalded, or soaked in cold water. In either of the two last-named cases the utmost care must be taken to prevent it becoming sour, which it does very rapidly in warm, sultry weather. Many fanciers soak and crush it and mix it with the egg-food when the young are being fed, and it will often tempt a lazy hen to feed better. But it has the disadvantage of making the egg food turn sour much quicker than it otherwise would, so that on the whole it is much the best plan to keep the egg-food pure, and give the rape in a separate china or glass vessel. Another point to be observed is that rape must not be given in this way until the young birds are at least five or six days old.

Many of the seed-eating British birds, especially those of the Linnet tribe, subsist much more largely upon rape than Canaries do, therefore, it should form a larger proportion of the bulk of their staple mixture.

Love of the Old Home.

I have known the Redshanks to yearly frequent the same marsh and water meadow, even when the ground was so encroached upon by building that hardly space was left sufficient for a cow to graze upon. Here in the villages there are a few old walnut trees left, a remnant of the timber of the one-time extensive park. They are now practically surrounded by houses, yet the Jackdaw, Wood-pigeon, Starling, Thrush, Chaffinch, and Wryneck annually nest in them. The latter bird can be heard frequently during the day, for he is anything but quiet, until a nesting site has been selected. The cry of the Wryneck is loud, shrill, and clear, and often repeated. This ceases as soon as the hen bird begins to sit. I have repeatedly watched the bird flying from tree to tree but have never yet detected it uttering its note when on the wing. This bird is somewhat locally distributed, preferring open wooded districts where cultivation is being carried on, to the thick woods. Its food is not found so much upon the timber as is that of the Woodpecker, to which bird it is closely allied. Although it possesses an outer toe like the Woodpecker's, it will be noticed that it never climbs the trunk and branches of the trees, but sits like any other perching bird. Neither has it the stiff tail so peculiar to climbers. It obtains its food almost exclusively by means of its tongue, which it inserts into the nooks and crevices of the bark, proceeding along the branch in a sidelong course. Its plumage is soft and beautifully mottled, and a well-marked specimen is as handsome as any of our wild birds.

Food of the Snowy Owl.

A considerable portion of the food of the Snowy Owl consists of fish, which the bird catches for itself.

The Most Hated Bird.

The most hated bird is probably the Crow. He is detested by the gamekeeper, the sportsman, the farmer, and every one who has anything to do with farms, woods, and fields, and yet the Crow survives.

The Song of the Nightingale.

At the time of writing the song of the Nightingale can be heard after 10 o'clock at night, and very little in the daytime; later the time of singing will be altered, and he will be heard oftener during daylight and just before dawn. A Thrush was singing one night quite recently long after dark, and the Lark carolled some time after sunset.

A Summer Extract.

"Down the road skims an Eave-Swallow, swift as an arrow, his white beak making the sun-dried dust dull and dingy: he is seeking a pool for mortar, and will waver to and fro by the brook below till he finds a convenient place to alight. Thence back to the eave here, where for forty years he and his ancestors built in safety."

In Heat and Cold.

The sitting wild bird will soon be suffering from the heat of the sun, while patiently incubating her treasures. It is no uncommon sight to see a Blackbird or Thrush in some exposed position, with its beak open, panting in the heat. But as summer advances, vegetation grows and makes shade for the sitting bird and callow young. In the far North, where some birds nest upon the snow, do they commence incubation when the first egg is laid, or do they occasionally return to the eggs to warm them just sufficiently to prevent them getting frozen? Bird books give us no information upon this point, and we are unable to see for ourselves.

Issue of £1 000 Six per cent. Cumulative Preference Shares (the interest on which is guaranteed for two years). Directors, friends and employees of the Company have intimated their intention of applying for 1,250 of these shares which the Directors reserve the right to allot in full. The Preference Shares carry a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of £6 per cent. per annum on the capital for the time being paid up thereon payable by half-yearly instalments on the 22nd August and the 22nd February, and (subject to the payment to the Ordinary Shares of a fixed cumulative dividend at the rate of £10 per cent. per annum) a right to receive out of the profits for each year a further non-cumulative dividend for such year at the rate of £5 per cent. per annum on the Capital for the time being paid up thereon, and rank, both as regards the first mentioned dividend and in a winding up as to repayment of Capital, in priority to all other shares in the capital. The holders of the preference shares may, after the 22nd February, 1913, be required to sell their Preference Shares at 25/- per share pursuant to Article 26.

The 5,000 Ordinary shares above mentioned are to be issued to the Vendors as fully paid up shares, the Vendors thus showing their confidence in the future of the Company by taking their whole payment in Ordinary shares ranking after the Preference shares both for Capital and Dividends.

ISSUE of 4,000 Six per cent. PREFERENCE SHARES of £1 each payable as follows:—
5/- per share on application. 5/- per share on allotment. 10/- per share on Thursday June 18th, 1908.

The shares may be paid up in full on allotment on or before the 25th day of May 1908, interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum being allowed in respect of the prepayment of instalments.
Applications have already been received from the Directors, their friends and employees of the Company for 1,250 Preference Shares and the remaining 2,750 are now offered for subscription at par.

PROSPECTUS.

The Directors of the Poultry Press Ltd., have decided to give the Poultry Keeping Public an opportunity of acquiring a portion of the Preference Share interest.

They feel that by enabling poultry keepers to participate in the success of the undertaking, they will be expediting that success, and taking a step as advantageous to their own interests as to the interests of poultry keepers themselves.

The bright prospects of "The Poultry World" are so evident as scarcely to need insistance on them at this juncture. The Directors assert without fear of contradiction that no other poultry journal at present on the market can claim so large a proportion of enthusiastic amateurs amongst its readers. No other poultry journal has shown the same rapidity of proportionate increase both in respect of circulation and advertisements, and no other poultry journal has been met at the start of its career with such a wave of general approbation.

In making this issue of Preference shares, the Directors their friends and employees of the Company have applied for 1,250 and the remainder are offered to readers of "The Poultry World" in the confident anticipation that a distribution of a certain proportion of shares amongst poultry keepers themselves, will enable the obviously bright prospects of the paper to materialise more quickly than perhaps would otherwise be the case.

The directors of the Poultry Press Ltd. are all gentlemen who have been closely connected with the publication of similar periodicals, occupying a creditable or noted position in newspaperdom. Mr. Carl, Mr. Watmough and Mr. Berry, have each made big successes of class papers of a similiar order to "The Poultry World." Mr. Carl, the Managing Director, whose experience in conducting Fancy Journals is a large one, is of the opinion that he has never before come across a reading constituency so responsive to any efforts made on their behalf, or so cognisant of the value of practical journalism as the present readers of "The Poultry World." Mr. Carl intends pursuing the same policy in directing "The Poultry World" as that which enabled him to extend the sold-copy circulation of "Cage Birds" from 4,000 copies per week to ten times that number—40,000 copies per week—in that period of six years. The ability that has brought about such results, almost incredible, have been placed at the disposal of "The Poultry World," and Mr. Carl has every hope of being able to show even better results from his management of this Company's property. In fact, the substantial progress made in the period already covered by his management has been highly gratifying to all concerned in the production of the paper. From its first appearance "The Poultry World" was given the heartiest welcome, and has met with such a measure of support as has never before been accorded to any Live Stock Journal. Its circulation and its advertisements have each shown a steady upward growth until now at the present moment "The Poultry World" has a circulation which is 300 per cent beyond that enjoyed by "Poultry and Pigeons" from which paper it was taken.

The services of several highly popular and respected poultry experts and artists have been enlisted on behalf of the company; the names of the Rev. J. N. Williams, C. A. House, W. Hooley, G. F. J. Buvington, E. G. Wippell, standing for all that is progressive, reliable and authoritative in poultry journalism.

The Directors further possess the great advantage of being able to utilise the columns of their successful kindred journals, "Cage Birds," "Pigeons," "Fur and Feather," etc., through which to proclaim the merits of "The Poultry World," and advance its interests amongst prospective poultry keepers.

In order to show the possibilities in respect of circulation and advertisements, a well-known expert has provided the Directors with some interesting figures. According to his calculations, there are in the British Isles alone 35,000 exhibitors of prize poultry, 3,000 exhibitions where poultry is given some measure of representation, 1,000 clubs for people interested in poultry with an aggregate membership of 25,000, 2,000 people engaged in poultry farming on an extensive scale, 15,000 people engaged in poultry farming as a side-line or hobby, 5,000 members of clubs or organisations dealing solely with the utility side.

We have had worked out for us a comparative financial statement of the revenue from poultry advertisements derived by two other poultry journals. The average, so far as we are in a position to judge, comes out roughly as follows:—

Cash received from Advertisements—

Total per week.		Total per Week.
During Season, No. 1 Journal ...	£120	Out of Season, No. 1 Journal ...	£50
" " No. 2 " ...	450	" " No. 2 " ...	190

These estimates may, of course, be incorrect one way or the other. They are calculated on the face value of the advertisement space. But the wide and great possibilities open to a reputable and well conducted poultry journal must be apparent to everyone familiar with the field.

In fact, the Directors feel such confidence in the success of the paper that Mr. Carl and Mr. Watmough have undertaken to guarantee the dividend on the Preference Shares for the first two years, after which period they feel that there can be no doubt as to the dividend coming out of the profits of the Company.

1. A contract dated the 30th March, 1908, between the Company of the 1st part, Frederick Carl of the 2nd part, and John Edwin Watnough of the 3rd part, whereby in consideration of their respective contracts for services, the Company agreed to allott to the said Frederick Carl, 2,500 Ordinary shares, as fully paid up shares in addition to the salary therein mentioned, and to allott to the said J. E. Watmough, 1,500 Ordinary shares as fully paid up shares in addition to the salary therein mentioned.

2. A contract dated the 30th day of March, 1908, between the Fanciers Newspaper and General Printing and Publishing Company, Limited, of Idle Bradford, of the one part, and the Company of the other part, being a contract for the sale to the Company of the Poultry Section of "Pigeons and Poultry" in consideration of the allotment to the Fanciers Newspaper and General Printing Publishing Company of 1,000 Ordinary Shares as fully paid up Shares.

The Articles of Association provide that the qualification of a Director shall be the holding of at least 100 shares in the Company or the holding of the office of Director of a Limited Liability Company holding at least 500 shares in the Company, and that the remuneration of the Directors shall from time to time be determined by the Company in general meeting, but shall in no way affect the remuneration payable to the said Frederick Carl and John Edwin Watmough respectively under the before-mentioned contract.

Interest of Directors:—

Mr. Frederick Carl is the holder of 1,700 Ordinary shares.
Mr. J. E. Watmough is the holder of 1,500 Ordinary shares.
Mr. William Ewert Berry is the holder of 800 Ordinary shares.

Mr. John Trewavas' qualification is by reason of his being a Director of the Fanciers Newspaper and General Printing and Publishing Company, Limited, which said company is the holder of 1,000 Ordinary shares in this Company.

A copy of the Company's Memorandum of Association is printed in the fold of the Prospectus (or at the foot) and forms part of it.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company and of the above mentioned contracts may be inspected at the offices of the solicitors of the Company at any time during business hours.

The minimum subscription on which the Directors may proceed to allotment is 1,500 shares.

The preliminary expenses including registration fees and fees of the Accountants and Solicitors and the cost of printing, advertising and issuing this prospectus, and stamps are estimated at £200 and will be paid by the Company.

Where no allotment is made the application money will be returned in full and where the number of shares allotted is less than what was applied for, the surplus of the application money will be applied towards the amount payable on allotment and the balance, if any, returned. In case of default in payment of any instalment at its due date the allotment will be liable to cancellation or forfeiture and all amounts previously paid and any interest thereon will be liable to forfeiture.

Application should be made upon the forms accompanying the Prospectus, and sent to the Secretary at the registered office together with a deposit of 5/- per share.

Prospectus and Application Forms may be obtained from the Solicitors or at the Registered office, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Dated 19th May, 1908.

ALWAYS USE OUR

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Rollers & Singing Canaries.

YOUR opportunity to secure a genuine Seifert Roller for training youngsters occurs now. I have a limited quantity of the finest Seifert Contest Rollers procurable; all are in full song day and gaslight, and magnificent breeding trim. These birds excel in the deep bass and hollow bell rolls, and are entirely free from harsh notes, whatever prices, cocks, 15/-, 17/6, 21/- each. Hens guaranteed same strain, 4/6 each. These are not merely "Seifert" strain, in name only, but warranted the pure blood, and will be sent on full week's approval as usual, on receipt of cash, or CAGE BIRDS deposit system, and money refunded in full if every satisfaction not given. Early application is essential to secure one of these birds as no more will be imported by me until November next.—W. Gore, Gooch-st., Birmingham.

SEIFERTS, Tweeds' strain, Trutes, Smith's strain; warranted; hens, 3/6; cocks, 10/- to 15/-; approval.—Blakemore, Copenhagen-st., Worcester.

THERE IS

ALL THE DIFFERENCE

between advertising what you

POSSESS

by so-called Specialists, which correctly named would be Special Copytsts.

It is simple indeed for anyone to make claims, although they know such cannot be upheld. This style is as "old as the hills," just as it is to purchase in one name and sell in another. It is neither new nor clever, but quite the reverse. I, or any one else could advertise in their grandmother's name, mother-in-law's, or any similar absurdity; but all right thinking people prefer the manly man and the womanly woman. I maintain such tactics cannot be too widley known.

Note following Prices:—

that during the last 16 years I have wired more cokernut husk nests than any other man living. If any other expert has sufficient pluck to accept, please deposit with Editor. My Improved Secure husks are universally admitted immensely superior, and considerably more successful than any other kind. Remember, no other husks are wired like these, and the Improved Secure husks are obtainable from me only, so don't be deceived. Every Fancy paper advises its readers to prefer them before any other kind, and the largest zoos, parks, and breeders employ them. One quality only, the best, 4/6 dozen; smaller quantities, 5d. each; Cockatiel nest boxes, 1/6 each.—Harper, Adelaide Villa, Dudley-rd., Wolverhampton.

BOOKLET FREE.

Finest Talking Parrots. I only deal in Parrots that will make first-class talkers; no rubbish. I am willing at all times to send my Parrots on four weeks' trial and three months' talking guarantee. Why? Because all my Parrots are young, strong, and reliable. My lifetime has been spent among grey Parrots, both at home and abroad. I guarantee every customer every satisfaction. Grey Parrots are my special fancy. I have trained them, know their wants, and can give every purchaser a bird that will please him in every way. I can supply grey talkers, not thinkers, that will say almost anything, at reasonable prices. Before you purchase a grey or green Parrot, send for my Booklet, entitled "Talking Parrots." All my birds are sent on four weeks' trial, at my risk. Send postcard for catalogue.—Mrs. Forster, Princes Park Aviaries, Violet Street, Liverpool.

PARROT PROBLEM

solved. For full proofs send postcard at once for my large book, "Parrot Prattle," now containing 168 pages. This is the most wonderful book ever offered free of all charge to all Parrot fanciers. (This "Parrot Prattle" is registered copyright, and all infringers and imitators will be proceeded against). It contains hundreds of testimonials from all parts with full names and addresses, many interesting facts, and gives valuable advice and hints to all Parrot buyers. Full details of our original system of selling Parrots on four week's trial, at our risk, which we were the first to introduce. We sell Parrots of all descriptions on four weeks' trial, at our risk, before settlement. Cheapest and best in the Kingdom, and any Parrot sold by us, and not giving full satisfaction, will be exchanged any time within twelve months. Remember we lead and others try to follow. Write to other dealers as well as us, and judge for yourselves. Lists of Parrots for sale and above book post free on receipt of postcard.

Nightingale and Robin.

There is a certain affinity between the Nightingale and Robin, although one is a summer visitor only, while the other is a resident bird; but the same anomaly exists between the Song-Thrush and the Redwings—two closely related birds. The Nightingale obtains most of its food upon the ground, as does the Robin. Its flight is comparatively weak with the same flick of the tail and bob of the head. Its usual call-note is a plaintive weet, very similar to the Robin, and it has the same habit of snapping its bill when disturbed. Like the Redbreast the Nightingale shows a strong affection for certain haunts, returning annually to the same locality, and during pairing time it is extremely pugnacious, driving away all likely rivals. The nest is in most cases placed upon the ground among the rank vegetation of the woods.

SINGING CONTESTS.

NEWTOWN (Leeds).

Usual contests held at the Prince Albert Inn, Newtown. On May 23rd 12 birds faced the judges, Messrs. Jackson and Jennings. For quality—result: 1st, Binns; 2nd and 3rd divided between Sissons and Binns. On May 24th 27 birds faced the judges, Messrs. Allen and Jennings; timekeeper, Mr. R. Jackson. 1st, Sellers; 2nd, Sissons; 3rd, Binns.—E. WOOD, Hon. Sec.

There will be a great Linnet singing contest open to all England for quality singing, held at the Prince Albert, Newtown, Leeds, on Whit-Tuesday, when the landlord will give six splendid prizes. Entrance fee, 6d. per bird. Everybody will be heartily welcome. This house is only five minutes' walk from the Leeds Bird Market, and ten minutes' walk from all stations. First bird hung at three o'clock.—E. WOOD, Hon. Sec.—ADVT.

DARLINGTON.

A Linnet singing contest held at the George Hotel on May 23rd, when 26 birds competed for two prizes. Result: 1 and 2, Simpson (timepiece and silver medal). Judge, Mr. J. Cannon.—R. S. BLACK.

YORK.

LEEDS.

Usual contest for quality singing held at King's Head, Shannon-street, on May 23rd, when 28 birds sang. 1st, Galley; 2nd, Hardcastle; 3rd shared between Wigfield and Stead. Judges, Messrs. T. Summers and T. Chadwick. On May 24th, when 30 birds faced the judges. 1st, Hardcastle; 2nd, Crowther; 3rd, Wigfield; 4th, Galley. Judges, Messrs. Cooper and Nicholson. We wish all Linnet fanciers to know that our yearly contest will be held on Whit Monday, when upwards of £30 will be sung for. First pair of birds to be hung at 11 a.m. prompt. Numbers drawn night before match.—T. SUMMERS, Hon. Sec.—(ADVT.)

SHEFFIELD.

Usual contest held at Don Inn, Duniop-st., Carbrook, May 24th, when some good singing was heard. Twenty-four birds competed. 1st, Blackadder, 78; 2nd, Baker, 72; 3rd divided between Watson and Robinson, 53 each.—BROWN, Sec.

IN THE COURTS.

PROSECUTION AT CAMBRIDGE.

At the Cambridge Borough Police Court on May 15th, William Casey, labourer, of 2, Coldham Lane, was summoned for using nets for the purpose of taking 28 wild birds not included in the schedule to the Wild Birds Protection Act, 1880, in the close season, on May 2nd. The close season extends from March 1st to August 1st.

Mr. G. A. Wootten appeared for the defendant, and asked the Magistrates to adjourn the case, as he had seen Mr. Millard, who owned the farm where the birds were caught, and Mr. Millard said he gave defendant permission to catch the birds because they were a pertect pest. Mr. Millard was very ill, but his foreman would be authorised to say Mr. Millard gave defendant the permission.—The Clerk, in reply to the Chairman (Mr. Campkin) said the Act was a curious one, because if permission was given no offence was committed.—The Chief Constable said it placed the police in an awkward position because Mr. Millard denied giving the defendant permission to trap the birds. Otherwise the proceedings would not have been taken.—The case was adjourned until Saturday.

At the adjourned hearing Mr. Wootten said he was prepared to show that defendant had obtained the necessary permission. Mr. Millard was too ill to attend the Court, but he had written a letter which he proposed to hand to the Bench.—The Magistrates' Clerk said this would not be evidence.—Mr. Wootten asked for an adjournment, so that Mr. Millard could attend, but the Magistrates decided to hear the evidence for the prosecution.

P.s. Merry stated that on Saturday, May 2nd, at 7.20 a.m., he was on duty on Coldham Common, in company with P.c. Abbott, both of them being in plain clothes. It was a foggy morning, and witness got close to the defendant, who had fixed nets on a piece of ground adjoining Coldham Common, in the occupation of Mr. Charles Millard, of the Station Farm. A number of call birds in cages were placed close by. Witness had reason to believe defendant was there without permission, and he kept observation on him until 1.29 p.m. During this time defendant caught a number of birds. He packed up his nets and call birds, and came on to Coldham Common, where witness stopped him. Witness said to him, "You know this is the close season. Have you permission to catch birds on that land?" He replied, "Yes; I got permission a month ago from Mr. Millard." Defendant said he had caught six Linnets, and he "knew what he was about." He added that he "had got the Act, but had not got any birds that were on the paper." He refused to allow witness to examine the birds, and witness took possession of them, as well as the nets and call-birds. Witness found that defendant had caught twenty-five Linnets and three Greenfinches. The birds were set at liberty. Witness saw Mr. Millard after the adjournment, who repeated his statement that he had not given permission to the defendant.—The Magistrates adjourned the case for a fortnight.

A NOISY COCKATOO.

At Birkenhead County Police Court the other day, Arthur Thomas Harding, of Stanley-road, New Ferry, was summoned for keeping a Cockatoo to the annoyance of the neighbourhood. From the evidence it appeared that a medical student complained of the noise made by the Cockatoo. The noise, he said, was greater than he had heard any Cockatoo in its wild state in Africa make. Four witnesses spoke to the nuisance. The defendant said when the bird came to his house six years ago everybody petted it; and now there had been a great change shown towards it. The magistrates remanded the case for a month to see what could be done to prevent the annoyance being repeated.

YOUNG RAVENS FORFEITED AND SOLD.

In Stranraer Sheriff Court on May 14th, Thomas Inglis, gamekeeper, Barncorkrie, was charged with a contravention of the Wild Birds' Protection Act by having in his possession five Ravens which had been recently taken. He pleaded guilty. The Fiscal asked that the birds should be forfeited and disposed of. Ravens were in much request as pets, and a good market could be found for them. No good object would be gained in liberating them, for he was told that after a considerable period of captivity they would be incapable of providing for themselves. Accused said he took the birds in ignorance. He had always been accustomed to destroy them. Sheriff Watson imposed a penalty of 6s. for each bird, 30s. in all, with the alternative of seven days, and ordered that the birds should be forfeited and sold.

I received, writes Mr. J. E. Howarth (Dewsbury), on May 23rd, an unsealed envelope, properly addressed and with a 1d. stamp on (postmark, Bristol, May 22nd), but with no letter inside. I should like to know if it is a joke or a would-be reply to my advertisement in your issue of the 11th inst.

I was very pleased on receiving CAGE BIRDS this week, writes Mr. R. B. Tope (Plymouth), to see my Grizzle Crest, second at the Crystal Palace, pictured on the front. He is a descendant of that noted Crest-bred, "The Earl of Devon," which won me numerous first prizes and specials. He was only once beaten; it was at Liverpool under Mr. House, when a noted Northern Yellow Crest took premier honours; he, however, stood second. I received four telegrams from different fanciers asking for lowest price, but I was not to be tempted to part with him under catalogue price. My best thanks are due to your artist, Mr. Norman, for the masterly and realistic drawing of the bird; it reflects great credit upon him. I wish CAGE BIRDS yet further success.

Where Birds Drink Wine.

Wine is so plentiful at the present moment on the shores of Lake Maggiore, from the village of Brione to Orselina, that it is given freely to tramps who ask for a drink. The poorest of people leave a bowl of wine on the window-sill for all comers, and it is reported that even the birds share the hospitality.

A Persistent Singer.

The song of the Reed Bunting is just now the most monotonous of the avian choir. It consists of a single short passage ending abruptly. The bird is a most persistent singer, and while perched upon a fence rail near his reed-fringed home will drone out his song by the hour. Even out on the breezy marshes, where it is in keeping with the surroundings, its song becomes somewhat irksome.

Jackdaws Among The Pigeons.

In wild life we have frequent instances of parent birds fighting with larger and stronger ones, in defence of their young. The danger to the little ones, and the knowledge that they are entirely dependent upon them will make even delicate and inoffensive birds bold and brave for the time being. On the other hand, we occasionally get an instance of abject cowardice, when one would think that the robbed bird would make some show of resistance, or at least some attempt to attract the thief from his booty. A number of Pigeons build upon the parapets and stone cornices of old Greenwich Church, where they increase and multiply, and would do more so if it were not for an artful Jackdaw from the adjacent park, who occasionally makes a raid into the Pigeon stronghold, and by sheer boldness and cheek carries off a baby Pigeon, while the old birds gather together upon the upper portions of the building, and craning their necks over the edge look down upon the robber, and probably wonder whose baby the black rascal will take next.

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

IT is with great regret that I write of the death of Mr. W. Horsman, the esteemed late host of the City of Bradford Society's headquarters, who was laid to rest some fourteen days ago. Some time ago I mentioned the presentation made to him by the society, and at that time he was bedfast. He never rallied, and passed away after many weary months of illness.

I also regret to record two very unfortunate accidents which have happened to Yorkshire fanciers. Mr. M. Broadley, of Windhill, has sustained a dislocated shoulder by a fall from a ladder while following his employment. He is, however, progressing favourably, and hopes before long to be among his birdy friends again. The other fancier, Mr. M. Robinson, also sustained an injury whilst following his employment, and a very serious one indeed. Having had a leg severely damaged, he is in a very critical condition. All bird-lovers will join me in wishing both speedy recoveries.

THE Secretary of the Yorkshire County British Bird and Mule Club is giving the members a whip-up, and would be pleased to hear of any new members. Some good prizes are again to be given, and it behoves all fanciers of our native birds to help the club on to the success it deserves.

THE Open Norwich Club is forging ahead; they held their first committee meeting on Saturday last, which proved to be fully representative. The members now total 75. They have decided to give their patronage to ten shows, and the three highest birds at each are to count for specials. Four prizes will be given in the champion section and six in the novice section (the latter six including the three given by Mr. Carl); also at each show 3s. will be given for most points gained by 4th birds, and 2s. for fifth birds, thus giving those who are not at the "top of the tree" a chance to handle a little of the spoil. The next meeting takes place on July 4th, and all who wish to join and want their names to appear in the year and rule book must communicate with the secretary before that time.

MANY fanciers (outside the West Riding particularly) seem to have some vague idea that the Yorkshire Canary Club and the Yorkshire Union are one body, and the secretaries are continually receiving the communications intended for the other. Secretaries and intending members will do well to note that the Yorkshire Union is a union of societies confined to Yorkshire (the societies, not members) for the protection of the Fancy in general and the advancement of bird-keeping and breeding in all its branches; whilst the Yorkshire Canary Club is a specialist club having as its sole interest the promotion of the Yorkshire Canary, and it is in no way connected with, or under the influence of the Yorkshire Union. I might mention, too, that the C.M.Y.C.C.,Open Norwich Club, Yorkshire County B.B. and M.C. are also in no way under the Yorkshire Union, but give their patronage and prizes where they think the most good will accrue.

WHO is the prominent breeder and judge that went gathering dandelion during the thunder and hailstorm t'other Friday? He must be doing well, if hail, thunder and lightning couldn't turn him back! Rumour says he won't take £10 for the best two he has out; they must be good ones.

CLUB REPORTS.

MORPETH AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held on May 15th, Mr. A. Grey in the chair. The most important business was the framing of rules for the working of our society. The C.B.U. circular of "alteration of rules" was approved of, the meeting being unanimously in favour of their adoption. Will fanciers wishing to join please send in their names not later than June 12th, our next meeting night, after which date our books will be closed for the enrolling of members for the present year.—E. COWLING, Sec.

YORKSHIRE C.C. OF IRELAND.

At a committee meeting held on May 22nd at Douglas Hotel, there were seven members present. Messrs. Mulvey, Maguire, and Rooney (all of Dublin) were admitted members. The matter as regards Mr. Devitt was allowed to stand over until the general meeting. It was decided to hold the general meeting on June 11th. Mr. R. Halliday wrote saying he would book the 26th November next to judge the club show. The meeting adjourned until May 29th at 8.30.—W. C. SHOLEDICE, Hon. Sec.

BRITISH ROLLER C.C.

Monthly meeting held on May 12th, when a large number of Roller Fanciers attended. Six new members were elected. Letters were read from the Wakefield and Leeds Roller Canary Clubs with reference to the C.B.U., and it was unanimously decided to withdraw from the C.B.U. We all think that, as a specialist Club, we can manage our own affairs; neither can we see what benefit we are getting for our money.—The Chairman, Mr. F. E. Fisher, in proposing a vote of condolence to Miss Rettich and family, spoke in sympathetic terms of the late Mr. A. Rettich, and said that we all held him in high esteem, and the B.R.C.C. had suffered the loss of a good judge. Mr. F. A. Lester, in seconding the vote, which was carried, spoke in a similar strain. This concluded the business. The Chairman then called on Mr. F. A. Lester to give his lecture on "Rollers, Past, Present, and Future," which proved very interesting. Mr. Lester described the means by which the Roller had been brought to perfection by the Germans, and how it was making great progress at the present time in this country. He stated that it had a great future before it. He urged the members present to breed more tours into the song of their birds, pointing out that it was being done by several members at the present time with great success on the show bench. After the lecture numerous questions were asked. The answers were interesting, and will no doubt prove of great service to the members. A hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Lester, the Chairman remarking that he himself had learnt a lot thereby. A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded an enjoyable evening.—J. W. NORRIS Hon. Sec.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Some Hints on Color-Feeding.

Fortnightly meeting held on May 23rd, Mr. J. Farrar presiding over a very large attendance. It was decided that the first feather show be held on July 4th in St. Peter's Hall, Green Street, Mr. Millar (late of Southwick) being appointed judge. The question of the patronage of the specialist clubs for our open show on November 20th and 21st was then brought forward, and the secretaries were instructed to again write to the Norwich Plainhead Club and the National British Bird and Mule Club. It was also decided that there would not, in any event, be less than seven open classes for Norwich Plainheads, or less than six open classes for British Birds, and two for Mules or Hybrids. The suggestions agreed to by the delegates of the C.B.U. at their last annual meeting were all agreed to unanimously until we came to the clause which stated that "licenees be not granted to purely cage bird societies, as such ought to be affiliated to the Union." A long and interesting discussion ensued upon this question, Mr. W. F. Swan and Mr. G. Davison speaking in favour of compelling Societies to join the Union, and Mr. W. Reid and Mr. G. Clark speaking strongly against coercing any Society into joining. However, it was put to the meeting, and it was carried by a majority of five that all the suggestions be agreed to. The adjourned discussion on "Colour Feeding" was then resumed. The question was raised as to how much hot pepper should be used, and the majority of the Norwich breeders present agreed that four of cold to one of hot was about the right proportion, although one or two of the older breeders thought that a larger proportion of hot pepper might be used with better results; while, on the other hand, one noted Yorkshire breeder present thought that hot pepper should only be used when birds are being moulted in a cold room. Replying to questions as to how and when to mix the colour food, Mr. Reid stated that he always prepared his colour food overnight, and that to ensure the colour being thoroughly incorporated with the egg food he rubbed the whole lot together through his hands. He was supported in this by Mr. Riseborough, who pointed out that unless the feed was properly mixed together the birds would probably waste a lot of good colour-food in their endeavours to pick out the egg food with the least pepper on it. Several other questions were asked by the younger breeders, which were all satisfactorily answered by Mr. Swan, Mr. Clark, and other members before the discussion was brought to a close. Fanciers, both old and young, are heartily invited to attend and take part.—REID AND MADDISON, Secs.

ABERDEEN O.S.

Meeting held in the Trades Hall, on May 23. The President, Mr. Hector, occupied the chair. A letter was read from the Scottish Plainhead Club intimating that Aberdeen was on the list for the international Contest, and it was unanimously agreed to fulfil all conditions required by the Plainhead Club, should our show be chosen for the contest. Letters were also read from the Scottish Crest Club and the Yorkshire Canary Club of Scotland, offering their patronages, which were accepted. Mr. John Strachan gave notice of motion to alter the rule in Young Birds' Section. Before parting the President said they were all pleased to see Mr. John Smith back again, after his long holiday in South Africa, and that they had missed his genial presence (applause). Mr. Smith thanked Mr. Hector for his kind remarks, and for the hearty welcome the Society had given him.—John Bryson, sec.

ROCHESTER, STROOD, FRINDSBURY AND DISTRICT F.S.

A general meeting was held at "The Vineyard," Rochester, on 21st May, Mr. J. Giles presiding. The chief items were a discussion on the financial affairs of the society, which were in rather an unsatisfactory state, and the election of officers. Mr. J. Giles was unanimously re-elected chairman, Mr. H. W. Casimore vice-chairman, Mr. T. R. Brookland treasurer, and Mr. W. Hurdman secretary. The remaining officers were re-elected en bloc as last year. Five new members were elected. A pleasant feature of the evening was the presentation to the assistant-secretary, Mr. T. Charles, of a massive marble clock, subscribed for by the members, on the occasion of his recent marriage. The presentation was made by the chairman, who spoke in high terms of the good work Mr. Charles had rendered the society. Mr. Charles suitably thanked the members for this pleasant surprise. Arrangements are in progress for the annual open show in October.—W. HURDMAN, Sec.

OPEN NORWICH PLAINHEAD CLUB.

A committee meeting was held at the Market Tavern, Godwin-street, Bradford, on May 23rd. Mr. D. Sunderland (chairman) presiding. Mr. Percy Illingworth, M.P., was unanimously elected as president. Messrs. Harry Vire, C. Hepplestou, C. J. Whiteley, and F. Carl, and Mrs. C. M. Sunderland were elected vice-presidents, and Messrs. S. Clegg and J. Wilcock (Bradford) auditors. Applications for membership were accepted from Messrs. Alfred Grey (Morpeth), F. Coventry and W. Sherrington (Preston), L. Dyke (Bolton Woods), D. Hunter (Scarborough), A. Spencer (Doncaster), and J. Eyre (Dodsworth). It was decided that the following rules be added to those already passed:—Rule 17, "That the chairman be empowered, through the secretary, on the requisition of five members, to call a special meeting to discuss any important business within fourteen days' notice." Rule 18, "That rules shall not be altered, or any new rule adopted, except at the annual meeting, of which one month's notice shall be given to all members." The offers of special prizes, viz., marble clock and bronzes, value £4 4s., Mrs. C. M. Sunderland; oil paintings on opals, value £1 5s., Mr. H. Vire; copper kettle, value 10/6, Mr. C. Hepperston; dress piece, value 15/6, Mr. C. J. Whiteley; and others from Messrs. Haigh and Son, W. H. Shackleton, Joe Wilcock (each 10/6 cash), Mr. F. Carl's special, value £3 3s. (for competition in the amateur and novice sections), and a cruet from Mr. Sam Wilcock, were accepted. A vote of thanks was passed to all donors, and the secretary was instructed to invite applications (through the Press) for club's patronage, all applications to be made before first Saturday in July. Intending members wishing to have names included in rule book for season 1908-9 must send in their applications before first Saturday in July. Societies desirous of club's patronage must submit judge's names, and provide not less than six open Norwich classes. The number of club shows is not to exceed ten. "That four prizes be provided for competition in the champion section and six in the novice section for points gained throughout the season, and that 3s. be given for most points gained by members by fourth prize birds and 2s. for points gained by members by fifth prize birds at each show held under the club's patronage, any member gaining a first prize not to be eligible for these two specials."—Carried. "That three highest birds (at each show) count for points."—Carried. "That applications (already received) for O.N.P.C. patronage be deferred until next meeting."—Carried. Next meeting will be held on first Saturday in July. A vote of thanks to Mr. D. Sunderland for presiding closed the meeting.—O. MITCHELL, Hon. Sec.

RUGBY AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

At a meeting held at The Moat, Albert-street, on May 19th, Mr. Clem F. Savage read a paper entitled "The Treatment of Young Canaries." Mr. G. A. Towers presided, and although the attendance was not so large as could be wished for the occasion, there was a good discussion. It was decided to hold a members' nest feather show on June 27th. Mr. H. Diekens will be asked to officiate as judge.

OXFORD F.S.

Annual meeting, April 27, when Mr. W. F. Cross was voted to the chair, and a large number of members were present. The balance-sheet for last year was presented showing a balance in hand of £3 13s., and assets £20. The chairman explained that the past year had been a very unfortunate one, but hoped the society would make more rapid strides. The rules were revised, and the following were elected as officers: — President, Mr. M. Wootten, J.P.; Vice-Presidents, Mrs. G. H. Morrell, Mrs. Ball, Messrs. A. Butler, E. E. Shepherd, Hall and Co., R. G. Gillard, M.R.C.V.S., W. F. Cross, J. Gould, J. Hastings, J. F. King, Alderman F. H. Kingerlee, and J. P. S. Boulton; Hon. Solicitor, Mr. G. Walsh; Hon. Vet., Mr. R. J. Verney, M.R.C.V.S.; Auditor, Mr. C. Haines, F.C.A.; Bankers, Messrs. Wootten and Co.; Hon. Treas., Mr. W. F. Cross; Sec., Mr. A. H. Calcutt, Kidlington, Oxon.; Asst. Sec., Mr. H. Jedan, 5, Fairacres Road, Oxford; Committee, Messrs. H. Johnson (Chairman), J. C. Coates, J. A. Lees, A. Galpin, W. White, W. R. Lee, R. G. Gillard, M.R.C.V.S., F. Butler, F. Palmer, A. Lewin, A. Payne, and S. Boultou. Anyone wishing to become a member will be supplied with a copy of the rules on application to the secretary, and the committee will be pleased to receive guarantees of any class or gift of special prizes. The radius of membership is open, and fanciers are invited to become members.—A. H. Calcutt, sec.

NATIONAL BRITISH BIRD & M.C.

A committee meeting was held at headquarters, 25, High Holborn, on May 18th. Present: Messrs. Rohson (chairman), Fulljames, Dewhurst, Dobson, Silver, Trower, Weston, Hathaway, Wyse, Maxwell, Vale, Cooper, Goodchild, Newby, Plumbridge, and Carr. Letters were read from Mrs. Howe, Messrs. Turton, Cunningham, Arrighi, Hathaway, Galloway, and the L. and P.O.S. Proposed by Mr. Weston, seconded by Mr. Cooper, "That no cage-maker claim any credit, or right, in the design of the N.B.B. and M.C. standard show-cage, as drawn up and designed by the sub-committee, and passed by the general committee on April 20th, 1908." Proposed by Mr. Weston, seconded by Mr. Trower, "That the secretaries be authorised to have a standard cage made by a private person for the purpose of being photographed and sent to the Fancy Press." Proposed by Mr. Trower, seconded by Mr. Cooper, "That a very hearty vote of thanks be accorded the following gentlemen, who very kindly went to the trouble and expense to send up cages to help the committee:—Messrs. J. F. Dewar (Edinburgh), P. F. M. Galloway (Caversham), E. Hathaway (Clapham), R. A. Newley (Brixton), J. Walsh (Blackburn), J. Sandiford (Preston), Watson, and Cullen." Mr. Fulljames referred in sympathetic terms to the sad death of Mr. Albert Rettich, and proposed that a letter of condolence be sent to Miss Rettich, expressing the sympathy of the members of the club through the loss of her father. This was seconded by Mr. Dewhurst, and supported by all present. Proposed by Mr. Weston, and seconded by Mr. Cooper, "That a hearty vote of thanks be accorded Mr. W. C. Cunningham for his generous donation to the club funds." The hon. treasurer reported the following financial position of the club:—Received up to date, £23 16s. 6d.; paid out, £13 16s. 6d.; balance in hand, £10. Owing to the change of management at the "Napier," notice was given for the club to find new headquarters. Messrs. Robson, Dewhurst, and Plumbridge having previously seen several rooms, placed the facts before the committee. On the proposition of Mr. Trower, seconded by Mr. Silver, and supported by Messrs. Maxwell and Cooper, it was decided, "That the headquarters of the N.B.B. and M.C. be transferred to the Feathers' Hotel, Great Chapel-street, Westminster, and that our meeting nights be held on the last Thursday in each month as formerly. Proposed by Mr. Goodchild, and seconded by Mr. Maxwell, "That a hearty vote of thanks be accorded Messrs. Robson, Dewhurst, and Plumbridge for the trouble they had taken in finding suitable headquarters for the club." Proposed by Mr. Weston, and seconded by Mr. Robson, "That Mr. H. Norman, The Eyrie, Salisbury-road, Carshalton, become a member of this club." This was carried. A hearty vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the meeting.—PLUMBRIDGE and CARR, Hon. Sec.

EDINBURGH EASTERN DIST. O.S.

Our next meeting is not till September 7th, when there should be some interesting reports from the members as to the likely champions that will be forthcoming at the Annual Show which has been arranged to take place in the Free Gardeners' Hall, Abbeymount, on November 14. We have been successful in securing the services of Mr. Wm. Thornton, to judge the Scotch Fancies, and Mr. John McLay, the Norwich Plainheads, Crests, Border Fancies, etc. At our May meeting the allocation of classes for British Birds was left over till the next meeting. Seven new members joined the Society during the season.—George R. Smith, hon. sec.

OUTINGS.

BRADFORD (East) ORNITHOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

A good number of members and friends turned up on May 23rd for the ramble to Shibden Vale. The weather was gloriously fine, and a pleasant afternoon was spent amidst the splendid scenery which this district is noted for. After a bracing ride on the car from Bradford to Queensbury we walked through the Vale, which just at this time of the year is at its best, the beautiful foliage of the trees vieing with the pleasing contrast which the bluebells afford for the premier position of beauty. Many pleasant walks were explored, as this was the first visit which had been paid to this district, before we adjourned for tea at Rose Cottage. After full justice had been done to this, the party indulged in a homely sing-song, one of the ladies and a member officiating at the piano. The walk was then resumed, and we made our way to Stump Cross, taking the car to Shelf. From thence we walked back home, having spent a very enjoyable half-day's outing. At our next meeting on June 2nd we are to have a novel competition to decide. Mr. R. Halliday is giving a grand, framed water-colour painting of a Yorkshire as a prize to the member who picks out the faults of about six Yorkshires which he has sketched, each of them having some pronounced fault, which he will criticise, and place in a sealed envelope, the competitor gaining the prize who is nearest to him in his criticisms. All members are eligible to compete for this prize, the entry is free, and I hope there will be a good turn-up of members in order to make the affair a great success.—H. HILL, Secretary.

ROCHDALE GOOD INTENT AND HEYWOOD CAGE BIRD SOCIETIES.

The Rochdale Good Intent and Heywood and District Cage Bird Societies had a very interesting ramble on May 17th. Leaving Rochdale by the 8.40 train for Todmorden, we went by way of Dobroyd Castle on to the Moors, but the day being very dull not many birds were to be seen. We reached Holmes Chapel in good time for dinner, so we spent an hour in the fields and woods behind, where we found innumerable birds' nests, some containing eggs and others young. After doing ample justice to the meal provided by our host and hostess we made for Townley Park, and after viewing the fine old hall and ground had tea at the Waverley Cafe. We afterwards adjourned to the smoke room, where we were joined by Messrs. Edward and Uttley, of Burnley, and having been treated to a song or two we had a very good discussion on the Lancashire and Crest. Just before parting our conversation drifted into one about the Norwich Plainhead, and one member said he would like to show a team selected from a given district against a team selected by Mr. Edwards, also from a given district. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Barwise for so ably acting as guide, and to the secretary for organising the ramble, was suitably responded to, and we parted company with our Burnley friends, reaching home at about 9.15, having spent a very enjoyable day.—SAM M. CLAYTON, Hon. Sec. of the Rochdale Good Intent C.B.S.

PLUMSTEAD & WOOLWICH CAGE BIRD SOCIETY.

The members went for an afternoon ramble in Wanstead Park on May 16, when seventeen members turned up. The journey was made first by ferry, then by brake and tram, and occupied just about an hour. Entering the park and going to the cottages, the party were met by the head-keeper, who proceeded to show the way. The first point of interest was a stable in which the same Martins and their young have built for five years in succession. Following our guide through the wood, the old grotto was first inspected, and then a lovely walk of two miles through the wood was commenced. First the nest of a Carrion Crow was noticed, then the entrance to that of a Spotted Woodpecker, which was pointed out in a tree close to the lake, from whose waters a pair of Mallards and a Moorhen took wing. Passing on we came to a Dove's nest, and while looking at this the Cuckoo and Chaffinch were heard. A little way further on, a pair of Long-tailed Tits were seen, and following the edge of the lake, a brood of wild duck. The herons' nests could now be seen, there being 54 this year, showing a decrease of two on last year's number; but the cold weather had killed many of the young. A large number of Martins and Swifts were also busy here. We were next shown the latest thing in Hybrid breeding, this being a cross between the Black and White Swan (rather too large for cage birds). Eggs are being incubated from this pair, but there is a good deal of doubt whether they will hatch, there being a week's difference in the time which the eggs of the two breeds take to hatch out. We next came to a dead tree containing a number of Starlings' nests, two Jays at the same time passing overhead. Within a few yards we were shown the nest which four tawny Owls had left that morning. We next came to a most noisy place, consisting of no less than 250 homes of the Rook—what is called Rook Island. Adjoining this is another island known as the Heron Isle, on which no Rook is allowed to nest. Here we saw several Herons feeding their young on small fish. These birds seem to prefer to build in the tops of oak trees. Following our path, we saw a Misselthrush, Ringdoves, Herons, Dabchicks, Coots, Wild Duck, pairs of Jays, Chiff-chaffs, Thrushes, Blackbirds, and several more Jays, some coming quite close. Passing through another wood several nests of Thrushes and Blackbirds were found, and also that of a Misselthrush. Coming to the boating lake, several of the party indulged in a pull on the water. Leaving the park, we adjourned to Mr. Pindard's, at the tram terminus, where an excellent tea was provided, to which full justice was done. After a merry meal and the usual speeches, the return journey was entered upon, the party arriving at the ferry just before nine, all having spent a most enjoyable afternoon. —W. Pawley, hon. sec.

TORBAY O.S.

The first ramble took place on May 20th. The party entrained at Paignton for Brixham (a fishing port situated the south side of the bay), where we were met by Mr. J. Dickers, a breeder of Yorkshires, who kindly acted as guide. Tracks were at once made for the country, the route taken being through Higher Brixham, on to the picturesque old thatch cottage, known as "Ann Tolcher's Cottage." At this point we left the main road and took to the country lanes, which brought us to the top of a hill that gave us a magnificent view of both sea and landscape. Looking seawards was to be seen the lovely coastguard station at Mausands, which a few, headed by Mr. E. Parnell, sen., made for, while others kept to the hill top, and were to be seen prying in the hedges, bramble, and furze bushes. It was in the latter way that the first nest containing eggs was discovered, which most of us had a peep at. Close at hand an old farm labourer was trimming a hedge, and on being asked if he had disturbed any nests replied that they didn't sit in such places, but there was wan (one) sitting in the orchard below. He was referring, we found, to Pheasants, which could be heard close by. A rally was made, and we then took to the coast, where we were overtaken by Mr. P. W. Mugford (a well-known West Country breeder of Mules and Canaries, and exhibitor of British birds), who followed by a later train. We continued along the edge of the cliffs, where we had an entire change of bird life, as we were now overlooking the English Channel in a part that is noted for its seagulls; in fact, it might be termed the home of the seagull, as hundreds of them nest in the cliffs between Mausands and Berryhead, which latter place we reached 5.45 after a three hours' walk. It was gratifying to see the veterans arriving fresher than the youngsters. Among them were our chairman, Mr. J. Webber, who certainly had a limp collar by this time; our vice-chairman, Mr. A. N. Innes, a genial and jolly fellow, as most of those who has spent years on the sea are, Messrs. M. C. Parnell, P. W. Mugford, and J. Bamberry. Among the younger members were Messrs. C. Parnell, W. Hodge, Jack Jeffery (the assist. hon. sec.), F. Badcock, and Will Bastard. The party having been got together, we all sat down to a good tea provided at the Fort Tea House. After tea, and a much-needed rest, we visited the Lighthouse, and spent the rest of the evening sauntering about the Fort grounds, leaving in good time to enable us to reach Paignton at 8.45, after spending a most enjoyable day in lovely summer weather.—J. N. JEFFERY, Secretary.

Books Every Bird Keeper and Breeder must have.

By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to-date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price.

Cage Birds 1908 Annual - - - - - post free, 7d.

The Standard Guide to the Cage Bird Hobby is a title bestowed upon the ANNUAL years ago. And the 1908 edition merits it more than any previous volume. Revised and brought up-to-date from cover to cover, with a lovely coloured plate and many full-page art illustrations, and crammed with valuable articles and unique and helpful features, it is the finest value for money ever offered lovers of birds. Canary, British, Hybrid and Foreign bird enthusiasts alike will find it a Complete Guide to the Fancy.

A well-known fancier has said of it:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." This book is one no breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred—keep account of their strong and weak points. It contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages, and many invaluable "Hints for Emergencies."

CAGE BIRDS CHARTS.

No. 8.—THE CHAT FAMILY. Some Exhibition Points and Failings.

Notes on the Drawing on page 521.

The family of Chats (strictly speaking this is a somewhat loose use of the term "family") is one of the most interesting among insectivorous birds. In their wild state, its three most common members, so far as Britain is concerned, the Wheatear, Whinchat, and Stonechat, are fairly well known to lovers of our native birds, being not at all unpleutiful in suitable localities. On the show-bench, however, only the Wheatear appears at all frequently. The other two species are rarely staged. This results solely from difficulties of keeping and moulting. Of the trio the Wheatear is, comparatively speaking, quite easy to maintain in health and condition (perfection of plumage, that is) also—and this perhaps is the chief thing—to "meat off." The Whinchat presents a much more difficult problem; the Stonechat the hardest problem of them all. From a judge who has kept examples of either species for any length of time, the fancier who can put down a really good Stonechat or Whinchat is certain of recognition in the prize list. It does not matter so very much whether the specimen be perfection (or "ideal," as some term it) in show-points, so long as it is somewhere near the mark—the chief thing is to get it on to the show-bench: to paraphrase a well-known saying: Sufficient for the day is the exhibiting thereof.

To take the Whinchat first: In the top right-hand corner is shown a "good specimen." This drawing gives an excellent idea of the shape and markings required in the show specimen. This bird should be as large as possible, and not too slim in build. The white streaks over the eyes, and that which passes across the chin round on to the cheeks, require to be very distinct, sharply defined on the edges, and pure in colour, while the wing-patches, situate near the shoulder, should also be large and clean in colour. Other white parts are the abdomen, and the tail for some two-thirds of the way down.

The crown, neck, back and rump are black, of somewhat dingy shade, strongly marked with brown, the result being conspicuous "spangling" very like that seen on the Bramblefinch. The wings are black, edged with rufous-brown; the tail towards the end is dusky brown, with two black feathors in the centre. On the breast the bird should be a pretty reddish (or rosy) tint. The cheek-patch is an important point, and should be an intense black—a charming contrast to the white markings above and below it.

"An Inferior Bird"—The deficiencies of this bird will be readily appreciated on contrasting it with the specimen above. In markings it fails badly, and reminds me of the hen Whinchat more than anything else, though it is very like the young bird, which, however, does not show the clean white head-marks. It should be noted that a Whinchat under two years old is not really fit for exhibition purposes, while full beauty of colour, spangling, and markings generally is not attained until the third season. In winter, too, he is not so gay in colour and nicely marked as when in nuptial dress.

"A Perfect Stonechat."—In my own opinion the Stonechat is one of the birds which truly deserve to be termed "delicious." He is usually a source of tribulation in the beginning, but once on food and over the first shyness incidental to captivity, makes one of the most captivating pets I know—richly clad, and the essence of daintiness in every movement.

The head (down to the upper edge of the eye) hind neck, and back are black, margined with reddish-brown with varying heaviness; the cheeks (under the eye) and throat are practically an intense black; on each side of the neck appears a band of white, which needs to be wide, well-defined and pure in colour; the breast is reddish-chestnut, shading into white on the vent, while the rump is whitish also; the wings are brownish-black, edged with reddish-brown, and should carry a distinct white patch on the coverts.

In shape the Stonechat always puts me in mind of a very much enlarged edition of the Gold-crested Wren—he has a very broad rounded head, thick neck, chubby body, and short tail. As in the case of the Whinchat, perfection of colour and markings is only attained by three-year-old birds, this being particularly noticeable in the case of the head, which in an old male (during the breeding season) is an intense velvety black, whereas in the younger bird the head is mottled with brown, and the "collar" and other white markings less prominent, and not so pure in colour. When in winter plumage the colour-scheme is less brilliant, and the brownish "spangling" on the upper surface very pronounced.

"Fails in size, shape, and colour."—It is easy to pick out this bird's failings, the lack of marking on back, the irregularly cut "collar," the obscure wing-patch and the dullness of colour all over, to say nothing of the fatal slimness of body.

"Badly-cut markings."—This shows the black on cheek and throat faultily shaped, and the white neck patch very irregularly finished off at the edges.

"An Ideal Wheatear."—A strong adjective, but one which the bird here depicted thoroughly justifies. The Wheatear is a much larger bird than either of the two species just dealt with. Its size, in fact, is one of the most peculiar points about it, for some Wheatears look, to the eye, quite twice the size of others of their kith and kin. Needless to say, it is these extremely large birds that stand the best chance of success on the showbench. They are said to be the birds which inhabit the more northern parts of the globe (Greenland, for instance) so that apparently this matter of size is on all fours with that of the British and Siberian Goldfinches. Very few of the extra big kind are caught in England in the Spring, but they are not uncommon during the autumn migration. The Wheatear should have a very broad, well-rounded chest, a bold wide head set on a proportionate neck, and stand well up on its legs.

The crown, hind neck and back, are a delicate bluish-grey; on the forehead, and running well across the cheeks over the eyes, should be a broad, well-defined pure-coloured white streak; from the base of the mandibles a streak of black plumage should run past the eye and towards the nape, widening as it extends backwards, and being clean-cut on the edges; the wings are black, the inner feathers prettily edged with brownish-yellow; the region of the rump is white, which, as the bird often droops its wings, shows conspicuously, as it does also when it uses its wings; the tail is white at the base, and black towards the tip, the two centre feathers being black right through. The colour of the under surface is not easy to describe, but may be defined as a delicate warm ruddy orange, varying in depth in places, and with yellowish shadings.

As occurs in the two species already dealt with, one must have an old Wheatear to get the white forehead, dense eye-stripe and other markings to perfection, while the young bird never possesses that beautiful purity of colour found in the older bird, though this failing is not so marked as in the case of the Stonechat. In winter plumage the garb of the male becomes duller; he is then not unlike his always plainer, browner-coloured mate.

"An ordinary pale-coloured specimen."—This bird has the buffish markings found on the hen, and on some (probably young) cock-birds. Such a one would stand no chance whatever on the showbench.

"Small and badly-defined eye-marks."—The eye-stripe here shown is a particularly bad one, being both small and ill-defined. The white band on the forehead and over the eye, too, is not sufficiently well-marked and vivid.

One or two other important points apply to all three species as exhibition birds. There should be no missing claws, or missing, broken or frayed tail and flight feathers, or damaged feathers at the base of the upper mandible, while it is essential that the birds should be thoroughly steady, and tight and glossy in plumage.

How to Judge Exhibition Birds.

NO. 8: THE CHAT FAMILY (Wheatear, Stonechat and Whinchat).

[See Full-page Drawing and Explanatory Notes on pages 521 and 513 this week.]

In this issue No. 8 of the series of CAGE BIRDS CHARTS appears. It deals with the Chat Family, and the lover of these birds, and especially the beginner, has only to keep the chart in his birdroom to have always before him the ideal to look for and acquire, while the faults to be avoided can never escape his eye.

In due course many other favourite exhibition birds will be made the subject of one of CAGE BIRDS CHARTS.

The same great pains will be taken to ensure the completeness of every chart, and its accompanying letterpress, and the deft fingers of our artist will portray the excellencies and deficiencies of the birds with the same precision and clearness. The value of CAGE BIRDS latest feature to the novices and amateurs in our hobby will be obvious to all, and we ask our many kind friends to bring CAGE BIRDS CHARTS to the notice of everyone interested in Bird-keeping and breeding.

Impress upon them that they must on no account miss any one of the series to be issued in the near future, or they will miss a TRULY HELPFUL AND EDUCATIONAL feature never previously put before bird-keepers.

CAGE BIRDS CHARTS may be had beautifully printed on stiff art card with eyelet holes, for hanging in the bird-room, price 3d. each, or any three for 7d., or any six for 1s., post free. The explanatory notes and scales of exhibition points are printed round the margin. No. 1, the Goldfinch, No. 2, the Yorkshire Canary, No. 3, The Bullfinch, No. 4, The Border Fancy, No. 5, The Hawfinch, No. 6, The Lizard Canary, and No. 7, The Norwich Plainhead, are now on sale, and No. 8 will be on sale early next week.

"THE WORLD'S BIRDS."

THE WORLD'S BIRDS.—A simple and popular classification of the Birds of the World. By Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. Over 50 illustrations from photographs, and many outline figures in the text. Price 5s. Published by Hutchinson and Company (London).

In "The World's Birds" the prolific and accomplished pen of Mr. Frank Finn has produced a book which we confidently predict will meet with instant and ready favour among all interested in our feathered friends. Its scope, as indicated by the title, is of the widest, yet the original method adopted by the author has enabled him to convey in the limits of this volume just those very things one so often desires to know about both the birds of our own country and those of foreign parts—and just those facts one finds it so difficult to hunt out of the multitudinous bird literature of today.

For instance, we often meet with references to such curiously-named birds as the Morepork, Motmot, Touracou, and Whip-poor-Will, and probably experience a desire to learn something of their form and characteristics. With Mr. Finn's latest work on one's book-shelf, this desire can be gratified on the spot. If we are in doubt as to the number of eggs laid by Nightjars (or other familiar birds), the period of incubation, and like details, we have in "The World's Birds" a means of obtaining accurate information, concisely put, upon the matter. The appended extract on the Woodpeckers will serve to show the character of the work. In addition, Mr. Finn has written a most informing introduction, couched in simple, easily-understandable language, which will enable the general reader to acquire an insight into the structure, distribution, etc., of birds. We can cordially recommend "The World's Birds" to our readers. It is an indispensable work of reference. The outline drawings are exceedingly helpful, and the photographic illustrations quite remarkably good, many very rare species being beautifully depicted.

WOODPECKERS (Picidæ).

DIAGNOSIS.—Tree-birds, with straight beak of medium thickness and toes in pairs, or one only behind.

SIZE.—From that of a Crow to that of a Tit.

FORM.—Bill of medium length and stoutness, straight or very slightly curved, usually compressed and chisel-tipped, corner of mouth coming half-way to eye; feet with short shanks and strong sharp curved claws, two toes in front and usually two behind, sometimes only one behind, the inner hind or first toe being in some cases rudimentary or wanting; wings of medium length or short; tail medium or short, usually very stiff and serving as a support. Head large, neck rather long in some. Tongue very long and extensible, hard and barbed at tip.

PLUMAGE AND COLOURATION.—Varied in colour, very commonly black and white, sometimes olive-green, or brown, never showing any blue, but very often red or yellow; no seasonal change, but usually a small difference between the sexes. Young differing little from parents; sex-difference apparent at once.

YOUNG.—Naked and helpless, fed by parents; they have bare, swollen skin at the gape, and a warty pad on the hock, as nestlings, and move about in the nest on their hocks.

NEST.—A hole pecked out in a tree or bank.

EGGS.—Several, pure glossy white.

INCUBATION.—A fortnight, or a little more.

COURTSHIP.—In the American Flicker (Colaptes auratus) the male displays his wings.

FOOD.—Chiefly insects, especially wood-borers and shelterers under bark; berries, fruit, nuts, and sometimes the sap of trees, are also taken by some. They usually seek food on trees, but some feed on the ground.

GAIT.—On the ground they hop awkwardly, but on the trees they are very active, seldom hopping from bough to bough, but climbing up and round the trunks and large branches; they descend, if at all, tail first.

FLIGHT.—Usually somewhat undulating, a few beats of the wings alternating with closure of them for a moment. The feet are carried tucked up in front, and the neck extended.

NOTE.—Usually harsh, a cackle or "laugh"; sometimes a piping sound.

DISPOSITION AND HABITS.—Shy unless protected, unsociable as a rule, and often rather quarrelsome. Young birds in some cases will fight violently as soon as fledged.

ECONOMIC QUALITIES.—They are, on the whole, most useful, destroying insects injurious to timber.

CAPTIVITY.—They live well if reared from the nest, but are very quarrelsome with each other; they become very tame and make good pets. They have not been bred, in England at all events.

DISTRIBUTION AND IMPORTANT SPECIES.—This family, numbering nearly three hundred and fifty species, is found all over the world except in the Australian region, almost always in wooded country, though a few frequent the ground or rocks; they are, on the whole, resident, few being migratory. The family includes three sections, the typical Woodpeckers (Picinæ), with the typical structure and habits of the family, and found throughout its range; the Piculets (Picumninæ), tiny birds with rather the habits of Tits, and numbering only a few species, found in West Africa, South-East Asia, and South America; and Wrynecks (Iyngina), with very finely-pencilled plumage and normal tails, including our well-known migratory species and a few others, confined to the Old World outside Australia. Our commonest Woodpecker in England is the Green (Gecinus viridis), about the size of a pigeon, olive-green, with red crown and yellow patch above tail; in India the Golden-backed (Brachypternus aurantius), with the crown red and upper surface dull golden, is the best known; and in North America the Golden-winged or Flicker (Colaptes auratus), a dove-brown bird, with spotted breast, barred back, and red crescent on the back of head, and with the quill-shafts bright golden yellow.

BREEDING RESULTS OF THE 1908 SEASON.

Despite the cold breeding season we have had, I have been successful in getting 30 young ones on to the perches out of 33 hatched, writes Mr. Jas. Stewart (Whitehaven)—not a bad percentage, I think.

Owing to the inclemency of the weather, writes Mr. H. E. Parrott (Weybridge), I paired up my Yorkies very much later this season, but am glad to say that the first round are hatching out very well indeed—four per nest in nearly every case. I have twenty youngsters out at present, and doing well, and other nests due in a few days, so with ordinary luck my first round will be as successful as ever.

Kelty and Blairadam C.B.A.

The season for young birds up here is very bad. We have plenty of full eggs, but no young birds, they dying in the shell—the result of the weather.—J. FORD, sec. of the Kelty and Blairadam C.B.A.

Edinburgh Eastern O.S.

Very favourable reports are to hand respecting our members' breeding prospects, and I hear of some very nice youngsters that are already forward, which seems to augur well for our coming show.—GEORGE R. SMITH, hon. sec. of the Edinburgh Eastern District O.S.

Newcastle-on-Tyne C.B.S.

Upon the whole our members seem to be getting a fair percentage of young birds, although the weather of late has been very severe. But we are pleased to state that this last few days the weather conditions have shown signs of improvement.—CURRY AND HUTCHINSON, joint secs., Newcastle C.B.S.

Rugby C.B.S.

The secretary of the Rugby C.B.S., Mr. C. F. Savage, writes us that some fanciers in that district have had very bad luck with their first round, the spell of cold weather of a few weeks ago having upset the breeding operations, so that the results to date are almost nil. Others however, are doing better, and have quite a number of youngsters on the sticks. All are hopeful of better fortune in the immediate future.

Secretaries and Fanciers are invited to send their experiences

Albino Wood Pigeon.

A pure white unmated Woodpigeon has been seen in Surrey. Probably his unusual colouring prevented his finding a mate.

JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS.

The attention of Show Secretaries is directed to the following list of gentlemen willing to act as Judges. Terms for insertion on application.

W. O BARLOW, The Aviaries, Malpas, Cheshire. Judge of Canaries, British Birds and Mules. Terms moderate

J. C. BARNES, 149, Duncombe Street, Walkley, Sheffield. Judge of Canaries and Cage Birds. Long practical experience. Terms moderate.

W. P. BARNES, 12, Launder Terrace, Grantham. Judge of Canaries and Cage Birds. Norwich, Crests, Cinnamons, Lizards, Speciality. Life practical experience.

GEO. BENNETT, 46, Wenlock Street, Luton, Beds. Judge of Canaries and Cage Birds. 30 years experience. Terms moderate.

TWITTERINGS.

Mr. George Brown, sec. of the Leith O.S., writes that his address is now 1, Coalhill, Leith.

Whilst searching for eggs in Aberdeenshire, a farm labourer fell a hundred feet from a cliff and was instantly killed.

A brown Rook, with pinkish tint, is reported to have been taken from the rookery at Benton Hall, near Newcastle-on-Tyne.

An aviary, we hear, has been built in Alexandra Park, Oldham. The birds are being provided by Mrs. C. E. Lees, of Werneth Park.

A Spotted Eagle, measuring five and a half feet across the wings, has been found dead at Downham, Essex. The bird is a rare visitor to England.

We have engaged Mr. A. Wellings, in addition to Mr. H. Tams, to judge at our show on November 20th and 21st, writes Mr. W. Ridge, hon. sec. of the Wigan and Dis. C.B.S.

Our show date is fixed for November 13th and 14th, writes Mr. J. Netherwood, hon. sec. of the Wakefield and Dis. Roller C.C. Messrs F. A. Lester and T. W. Walton will judge.

Kindly inform all who answered my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS that I had 26 offers by the Sunday morning, writes Mr. J. Hollker (Westhoughton). I could not reply to them all.

Kindly note that I have been elected secretary of the Rochester, Strood, Frindsbury and Dis. Fanciers' Society in place of Mr. W. E. Miller, writes Mr. W. Hurdman, 28, Horsley Road, Rochester.

A printer's error last week gave Mr. H. Stevens as judge of cage-birds and cats at Harpenden show on Whit-Monday, whereas that gentleman takes cats only, our section being in the hands of that well-known fancier Mr. C. E. Silk, of Emsworth.

Will those who intend taking part in the N.B.B. and M.C. "Ramble" on Saturday next, May 30th, meet at Waterloo station for the 9.35 train, at the bookstall south station, or the 1.37,a No. 3 platform, main line, writes Mr. J. P. Carr, joint sec.

Mr. Hopper (Keswick), has been appointed to judge the Border Fancies, and Mr. J. W. Bancroft (Cheshire), the remainder of cage birds at the Egremont (Cumberland) show on November 27th and 28th, write Messrs. Woodburn and Lucas, hon. secs. of the Egremont C.B.S.

At the last meeting of the Sunderland C.B.A. a very interesting discussion took place, we hear, concerning the merits of the four winning articles in our recent Essay Competition. In view of the voting now proceeding, we prefer not to say which way the favour of the meeting went.

We are having an open young bird show on July 1st, writes Mr. F. Easterling, sec. of the Battersea and Dis. C.B.A., when Mr. Robson will judge. The judges at our open show to be held on October 14th and 15th are Messrs. A. Patrick (Yorkshire Canaries), and J. Robson (the remainder).

We have engaged Messrs. W. Mundell, W. Vardy, and C. Houlton to judge at our forthcoming open show on November 6th and 7th, write Messrs. Metcalfe and Hillmen, hon. secs. of the Liverpool O.S. We have also taken St. Martin's Hall—one of the finest in the Kingdom for a cage bird show.

Ramsden's Specials.—Notice.—These special prizes are offered for competition amongst exhibitors who have colour-fed their exhibits on Ramsden's Pure Peppers only and solely. In reply to several correspondents, special precautions will be taken next show season to protect the interests of bona fide competitors. —(ADVT.)

I have been advertising in CAGE BIRDS since No. 1 appeared, writes Miss M. Hall, and have sold over 50 Yorkshires, the stock of the late David Hall, my brother, in three weeks. I am keeping a few pairs, as I feel I cannot lose my interest in the Fancy, and would feel lost without my CAGE BIRDS on Fridays after having taken it for so long.

At our monthly meeting held at headquarters, writes Mr. W. H. Manley, the hon. sec. of the Bristol C.B.S., Mr. Brown's lecture on "Colour Feeding and Rearing of Young" was much appreciated by a crowded attendance. Mr. W. G. Bull will give a lecture on the Yorkshire on June 3rd at headquarters, City Hotel, Wine Street.

I am glad to say that the birds I advertised in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. W. Symes (Chilcompton), were sold very quickly. It will not be the last time I shall advertise in your valuable journal, as I had letters from all over England and Wales. Those who did not receive a reply from me will please accept this intimation of my best thanks.

Owing to an error on the part of our printers, the advertisement of Mr. W. Rudd, Norwich, last week stated the price of Norwich hens to be 2s., instead of 3s. Will readers please note? This well-known specialist has also recently executed orders for birds and goods from many foreign parts, including India, Canada, Cape Town, Rome, New Zealand, Trinidad, Madeira, Punjaub, France, Egpyt, and Belgium.

Members of the Lewisham and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. H. Thos. Lucas, the sec., are requested to refer to Rule 3 of the club's rule card, and to remit unpaid subscriptions to me before June 1st. Any recently nominated new members are also referred to Rule 8, and are kindly requested to conform with same with regard to entry fee.

The members and friends of the Leeds C.B.S., writes the sec., Mr A. Wilkins, purpose going for a trip to Monk Fryston on Saturday, June 30th. Names of those who intend going should be given to me on or before June 14th. All intending visitors to the private grounds must obtain tickets (one penny each) of admission; children will be admitted at half-price.

Will members please note that Mr. Sandiford has again promised the Northern Norwich Plainhead Club a handsome cup, writes Mr. Anthony Hay, the sec., on the same conditions as last year, viz., for most points in Norwich Plainhead classes over all shows held under the club's patronage. Only users of Sandiford's Colour-feed are eligible to compete for cup.

A fire, the cause of which remains unknown, occurred at Mr. W. Vale's well-known hospital for birds and animals in the Manor Road, South Norwood. A number of the birdie inmates are said to have been burned to death, and the hospital itself was completely destroyed. Fortunately, however, the inmates were not so numerous as during the holiday season.

We have received from Mr. A. B. Forse, the hon. sec. of the Walthamstow F.A., a copy of that society's manual for 1908-9. It is really nicely got up, and contains a list of the officers, the rules of the association, and the names and addresses of members. Fanciers desirous of joining are invited to communicate with the sec., at 29, Thornhill Road, Leyton, N.E.

HAVE YOU VOTED?

Readers should Remember that the last day for receiving voting papers in connection with our Essay Competition is Tuesday next, June 2nd. Coupon and full particulars will be found on page 495 of last week's "Cage Birds."

Vote Early, and see that your friends Vote Early.

The Yorkshire Union are open to receive advertisements for insertion in the Year Book, to be issued shortly, and as every one of the 1,250 members will receive a copy gratis, advertisers can rest assured of good results. The price is 7s. 6d. per page and pro rata; breeders' cards are 1s. each. Specimen advts. on application to the sec., Samuel Dean, 6 Ash Mount, Great Horton, Bradford.—ADVT.

I am instructed to inform you that the British Roller Canary Club has withdrawn from the C.B.U., writes Mr. J. W. Norris, the hon. sec. At the same time we should like to ask those Roller Fanciers who have stood aloof from the B.R.C.C. because we were affiliated, to kindly send their names and addresses in at once, to be in time for this year's rule book, which is now in hand.

Kindly mention that through an error on my part, writes Mr. A. B. Forse, hon. sec. of the Walthamstow F.A., the names of the cage bird committee were omitted from the list of officers contained in the manual which we have just issued. They are as follows: Messrs. B. Forse, F. R. E. Handscombe, A. J. Marley, and A. J. Watcham. A slip containing this list of names will be sent to every member with the half-yearly balance-sheet to be issued shortly.

The Manchester and Northern Counties Ornthological Society have received a very kind invitation to join the Altrincham Society in a ramble, which they are holding on Saturday, May 30th, writes Mr. E. Jones, the assistant sec. The meeting place is Hale Station and the time 3 o'clock. The destination is Castle Mills, as before, but we shall go by a different route. Tea has been arranged to be had on our arrival. We shall be pleased to see members and friends in good numbers, and can assure them of a very pleasant time.

Kindly announce, writes Mr. Ernest Woodhead, the hon. sec. of the Hartlepools C.B.S., that owing to the deplorable strike in our town it has been found necessary to cancel our nest feather show, fixed for June 13th. We contemplated holding a second show in July, but are afraid that this also will have to be deferred. We are, however, proceeding with the arrangements for the open show on December 6th and 7th, and have engaged as judges, Messrs. W. Vardy and E. Brunskill.

An excellent little treatise dealing with the different varieties of Rabbits is sent us by the publishers, Messrs. Madgwick, Houlston, and Co., Ltd., of London. It is written by F. Townend Barton, M.R.C.V.S., and is priced at 6d., or 1s. bound in leather. For this moderate sum a mine of information, concise and eminently practical, is offered keepers of Rabbits, while many very good illustrations of hutches, appliances, noted winning Rabbits, etc, appear within the covers. This handy little volume is entitled, "Everybody's Book of the Rabbit."

A HIT.

There is one volume the publication of which bird-keepers have annually, for the past five years, awaited with eagerness and pleasure. It is recognised by old fanciers and by young fanciers as absolutely indispensable to everyone who desires to get the maximum of pleasure and success out of the hobby of bird-keeping. That volume is

and this year it has made

THE BIGGEST HIT OF ITS CAREER.

Such Marvellous Value has never before been offered.

See what You Get for Your Money.

Coloured Plate.
An exquisite portrayal of the noted Bramble-finch-Chaffinch Hybrid, bred by Miss Reeves.

Calendar.
A monthly calendar and diary, with novel table for ascertaining when eggs are due to hatch.

"Work of the Year."
A splendidly useful article, in which is set out the work amongst your birds for each month of the year. Perusal of it will enable the bird-keeper to anticipate his future wants, and be always ready to do whatever is needful and beneficial for his stock. Full of practical hints.

"Washing and Preparing Birds for Exhibition."
Fully illustrated with sketches from specially-taken photographs, this is the finest article on the art of washing birds ever published. By following the clear instructions, and studying the diagrams, the veriest beginner can successfully compass the washing of his own birds.

"The Breeding and Rearing of Canaries."
A very practical and thorough contribution from the pen of an old fancier, who gives many excellent "tips" as to the best ways to proceed. An article that will teach you something.

"Pairs Matched for Breeding."
A contribution from the pen of a well-known judge, which will make the fancier think.

"The Breeding of Hybrids."
An article on the fascinating pursuit of Hybrid breeding, by one who has made it a considerable study, and devoted much time to it. There are hints and advice in this contribution which may bring you profit and fame.

"The Keeping of British Birds."
A concise and practical article dealing with the mistakes of fanciers, and the keeping of birds in show condition, and giving valuable "tips" on feeding.

"Some Easily Obtainable Foreign Birds."
An account of some pretty and hardy species, with information on their caging and feeding.

"Review of the Exhibition Year."
Every breed of Canary, together with Hybrids, British and Foreign birds, has its progress on the show-bench during 1907 dealt with by leading judges, specialists, and experts, and the names of the principal winning exhibitors are given.

"The Diseases of Cage-Birds."
A feature in itself worth the whole cost of the volume. Diseases and accidents are described, and the best medicines and methods of treatment stated in simple language, and very fully and completely. It will save you many valuable birds.

"Glossary of Terms."
The curious terms used by fanciers are fully explained. Reference to the alphabetically-arranged columns will at once tell you the meaning of such expressions as jonque, leafy feather, mooning, rowing, and the like.

In addition to these features will be found a

Directory to Cage Bird Clubs, Associations and Societies, with particulars of subscriptions, etc., list of Officials and Secretary's name and address.
Directory to Prominent Breeders and Exhibitors of Cage-Birds.
Directory to Judges of Cage-Birds.
Standards and Scales of Points for Canaries and British Birds.
Useful Postal and other Information.
Directory to the Bird Trade.
Ruled Cash Account, etc.
Six full-page illustrations on art paper, and numerous other drawings.

TYSON v. CARL.

At the request of many friends we have decided to publish in booklet form a verbatim report of the case Tyson v. Carl—the recent lawsuit in which the question: What Is A Headline? was thrashed out. This account is a transcript of the shorthand notes of the hearing supplied by an independent reporter on the staff of the London News Agency, who vouches for its accuracy in every detail. The evidence makes a bulky little volume of 51 pages, and we will send a copy post free to any interested reader on receipt of three penny stamps.

Address your order to the Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

The May number of "Bird Notes"—the journal of the Foreign Bird Club—contains a particularly interesting article entitled, "Bird Keeping." It is written by Mr. Henry Gray, M.R.C.V.S., and constitutes the first part of an enquiry into the cause or causes of mortality among freshly-imported foreign birds. "The Yellow Hangnest" is the subject with which Mr. Wesley T. Page deals, and there is an accompanying excellent photograph of that bird. Miss C. Rosa Little writes on "The Breeding of Swainson's Lorikeet," Mr. Ivan D. Murray on "The Air Sacs of Birds," and Mr. O. Millsum tells of "A Visit to the Little Zoo, Bath." Other notes, equally interesting and instructive, go to complete the current issue.

The merits of Britain's great bicycle, the Rudge-Whitworth, are borne eloquent testimony to by the recent wonderful ride of T. A. Fisher, of the Unity Cycle Club, who started out on Monday, May 18th, on an attempt to break the thousand miles' record, concluding his effort in 91 hours and 1 minute, this being no less than 12 hours and 40 minutes better time than any previous record. He rode the same Rudge-Whitworth right through, to which, in a great measure, his success was due, for we may add that at the end of the ride the machine was in perfect condition, and Fisher just as fresh as possible. Yet during his marvellous performance he had only eight hours sleep in two stretches of 4 hours each, with hot baths and massage from time to time.

The "Excelsior" color-foods sold by Mr. W. Rudd, the well-known fanciers' specialist, of Norwich, have acquired a remarkable reputation as goods of the highest quality and efficiency Samples of this season's peppers have just reached us, and they should serve to keep this reputation right up to high-water mark, for they are chock-full of color, ground to just the right degree of fineness, and guaranteed to contain nothing injurious to the birds. It is put up in two shades, the "Excelsior" Red Feed and the "Excelsior" Yellow Feed, the latter being also sold as "Norwich Orange Blossom," which is a food ready to give at once to the birds, only requiring the addition of a few drops of water, and being a highly nutritious and reliable food during the moult as well as a coloring agent.

The Bristol C.B.S. have received an invitation to visit the woods of P. Napier Miles, Esq., writes Mr. W. H. Manley, the hon. sec. This will constitute our ramble on Saturday next, May 30th. Kindly notify fanciers (members and friends) of the change of arrangements. The party will meet at the car terminus, Black Boy Hill, at 2.45 prompt.—Mr. C. E. Brown, of Kingsweston, also writes: I would suggest that our friends come over the Downs, across Stoke Bishop Hill (not the Bristol to Avonmouth Road), and I will meet them at Stoke Bishop Fountain, where we immediately enter the private woods of the Kingsweston Estate. Through the kindness of Ivor A. Forestier-Walker, Esq., after leaving the woods, we shall visit the Kingsweston House, where the head gardener, Mr. F. Taylor, has promised to meet us. He will then take us through the gardens and houses; from one of these gardens one gets a grand view of the new dock at Avonmouth. There are also numbers of birds in and about the gardens. So there is a jolly time in store.

Lancashire C.A. Patronage.

All societies catering for Lancashires, and desiring the patronage of the Lancashire Canary Association should communicate with me as early as possible, writes Mr. W. Adams, the sec., as at our next meeting, to be held at Littleborough, on June 27th, we intend going into the matter, and we hope to have applications from some shows outside Lancashire. Address, 17, Baron Street, Rochdale.

THE POULTRY PRESS, LTD.

Be in Time: Subscription List Closes Tuesday, June 2.

WE take this final opportunity before the closing of the subscription list to draw the attention of readers of CAGE BIRDS seeking a medium for the investment of spare cash to the issue of Preference Shares in the "Poultry Press, Ltd.," as per the advertisement appearing on the back page of this number. The said issue affords fanciers a splendid opportunity of actively participating in the financial welfare of that popular poultry journal, "The Poultry World," and of furthering the educational work initiated in its columns—work which has already met with such striking appreciation from those interested in all branches of poultry-keeping.

Reference to the back page will show that this is an issue of preference shares of £1 each, which carry a cumulative preferential dividend of 6 per cent., guaranteed for the first two years by Messrs. Watmough and Carl, and, subject to the payment of a 10 per cent. dividend to the holders of ordinary shares, these preference shares will carry a further possible non-cumulative dividend of 5 per cent., making a total possible 11 per dent. in all.

Of the ultimate exceeding prosperity of the company there can be little question. It has now fortunately resolved itself into merely a matter of time and money. All the forces that make for success are at hand, and it will depend solely upon fanciers as to whether the desired degree of prosperity will be reached sooner than the promoters anticipate, and into the hands of the Fancy may safely be placed the future destinies of "The Poultry World."

The subscription list will close on Tuesday next, June 2, and applications for prospectus, etc., should be sent at once to Mr. Avis, the secretary, at the company's offices, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Readers who have not yet got their copy of CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL should send along a sixpenny postal order at once, as the supply is now very limited. The ANNUAL is absolutely indispensable to all who desire to get the maximum of pleasure and success out of the keeping of birds. It contains up-to-date articles on the breeding of Canaries and Hybrids, and the keeping of British and Foreign birds, while the chapter on diseases and their treatment is full of practical advice, and by itself more than worth the charge for the whole book.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

(1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side only of paper, and must conclude with either the correct name of querist, or a pseudonym, or initials.

(2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper and enclosed with the query. In no case must the address appear on the query.

(4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.

(5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated in bold letters on the left-hand corner of the query.

(6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired, queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. Queries will be dealt with in the order in which they are received, and only as space permits. The earlier queries are received the better attention they are likely to have.

(7)—Queries relating to illnesses of birds, except enquiries as to cause of death (for which see Post Mortems) will be answered by return of post on receipt of a postal order for sixpence and an addressed stamped envelope. Queries of an ordinary nature will be answered by post, if desired, on receipt of a postal order for one shilling and a stamped addressed envelope.

(8)—All who require letters of complaint written to ndvertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence to pay postage expenses, &c., otherwise their letters will not receive attention.

(9)—All queries must be addressed the Editor, "Cage Birds." 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Only queries so sent will be answered. Postcards are not admissible.

Queries will be answered under the following conditions:-

NOTE.—Readers are requested to carefully study past numbers and current issue before submitting questions. By doing so they may save trouble and unnecessary repetition.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in un case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc. of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his question for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Young Birds Dying.

C. Collard.—Sorry I cannot venture to assert what was the cause of the young birds' deaths from the specimen sent, as I do not undertake post-mortems. I can only speculate upon the absence of all traces of food in the crop that the old birds had ceased to feed them, but as the lower bowel was in quite good order the cessation must have been of short duration. The body was well grown and nourished. The eyes being glazed over was quite natural up to this age; they would have opened in a few more days. When the other young are hatched, treat as follows: On the evening when the young are due to hatch give half a teaspoonful of finely-chopped yolk of egg—without bread; next day two similar quantities, and after that add an equal bulk of crumbs of sponge cake to the egg yolk for the next day or two, finally adding an equal bulk of bread crumbs. Thus after the third day your egg-food will consist of equal parts of egg yolk, sponge cake, and bread crumbs. Well mix all together. On fourth day give a scrap of lettuce or tender young ground-sel, and after that a little green-food daily—chickweed, groundsel, or lettuce preferably. When the young are a week old give a supply of hemp in a separate vessel, and a few days later you may add a supply of soaked rape seed, fresh every day, if the old birds care for it. After this no further alteration need be made in diet until young are ready to leave parents. Do not give large quantities of food at one time. It is much better in every way to give small scrappy bits, and to give it fresh so much the oftener.

More Trouble with Young.

Disappointed.—I cannot determine with any degree of certainty what your birds died of from the description you give. But I should imagine they died from the effects of constipation. Next time young are hatched substitute bread crumbs, or equal parts of bread and sponge cake, for the biscuits to mix with egg-food. Also give a supply of two parts Canary and one part rape in the hoppers instead of all Canary seed, and give green-food. Do I understand you rightly to say that you mix the crushed hemp seed with your egg-food? If so, this also is wrong. You should give the hemp separately, and only just crack it, not crush it. Even cracking need not be done unless the birds have a very large brood to cater for. See reply to "C. Collard" in this issue.

Disappearing Feathers.

G. Oxley.—If the feathers have been gone for the last eight months it is almost a moral certainty that they were not reproduced when the old feathers dropped out at the last moult. This might have been caused by a chill which stopped the moult prematurely, or to a generally weak condition of the bird. In either case the probability is that the feathers will not be reproduced until next moult. Meantime, all you can do is to reserve her strength, and try to get her in the best of health and condition in readiness for next moulting season. Do not mate her this year. Feed plainly on a staple of Canary three parts, and rape one part. Twice a week give a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it. Give a spray of green-food daily, and add fifteen drops of chemical food to the drinking water twice a week. Regulate bowels, if necessary, by giving an occasional pinch of Epsom salts in the water. Give baths frequently, but be careful to avoid chill afterwards. Keep bird on this treatment until moult commences; then place it in an evenly warm temperature, and get it through the moult quickly, when its plumage should be perfectly restored.

Three in One.

A Y.—It is likely that one trouble alone affects all your birds, viz., over-feeding. The evidence all points that way. 1. You did quite right to separate this hen. Her trouble when about to lay was a mild form of egg-binding, which is often due to hens being blocked up with fat. The swollen condition you now describe is due either to fatness, or dropsy, most likely the former, judging from the general look of things. Keep her on a spare diet of Canary seed only, with green-food daily, as much as she likes to eat. Twice a week give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with five drops of sherry in it and a pinch of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it. Two or three times a week give twenty drops of sherry, ten of glycerine, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence in the drinking water. Keep in a good-sized cage, where she can get plenty of exercise. 2. The two Yorkshire cocks are probably also blocked up with fat. Treat same as above for a fortnight, or longer, if necessary. 3. As all your birds are probably in an overfed condition, if this cock is active and vigorous, and has fertilised the eggs of the other two hens, there could be no objection to keeping him employed by mating him with a third hen. The extra work may keep him from going the same way as the others.

A Little Outcast.

G. Burrows.—The one young bird in a breed of four, which is the smallest of the flock, and squeaks long after the others have been fed, is not being sufficiently fed. The other three being the strongest monopolise the parents' attention whilst feeding, so that this little "rinklin'," as the country folk would call it, gets only half fed upon the few crumbs that are left. The best way out of the difficulty is to hand-feed this little one two or three times a day for a few days until it has gained a little size and strength to compete with its fellows more successfully at feeding time. Give it a square meal last thing at night for a few nights. I expect this bird was hatched a day or two after the others, and has consequently not been able to get its proper share of food from the start. Such cases are very often seen when the eggs are not removed as they are laid for the first three days, and then returned on the third evening, so that all the eggs start incubation and hatch out within a few hours.

Lost Use of Legs.

Crackey.—I am afraid the bird's legs are paralysed, and that it was caused either by a slight injury to the back, which might have escaped your attention at the time, when you washed it; or to getting a severe chill in the drying process. In either case you had best leave the repair to Nature. To prevent the bird being soiled give a shallow nest in a wooden nest box for her to sit on. This can stand on the floor of the cage, and the floor be strewn with sawdust round it to absorb any moisture. Feed on plain Canary and green-food whilst the bird is so inactive, and give on alternate days in its drinking water twenty drops of whiskey one day, and fifteen of chemical food the next. I would not advise you to attempt any other interference, but if there is no sign of improvement after resting in this way a week or two I would advise you to have it chloroformed.

Young Birds and Seed Samples

E.D.G.—1. As your old birds do not seem to care for egg food, and yet eat the prepared food you mention readily, by all means use latter when the young are hatched in lieu of egg food. There is no reason why they should not rear their young successfully with it, as almost as much depends upon a bird's taste for any particular food in this matter as the nature of the food itself. For other details of rearing see reply to "C. Collard," of course substituting food you name for the egg food named therein. 2. Neither of the samples is German rape. There is a very decided difference between them. No. 1 is probably all wild mustard, hot and biting, and contains a large proportion of dirt. No. 2, not so dirty, appears to be more like cabbage than anything else; it certainly is not rape. I would not use either myself, but if compelled to choose I should prefer No. 2.

A Bird Bald.

No Name.—There is probably something wrong with your dietary. If I am right in assuming the bird is kept singly, feed on a mixture of two parts Canary to one part rape seed as a staple. Give in addition separately a half teaspoonful each of hemp and inga, and a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, each once a week, and on different days, not altogether. Give a spray of green-food daily. Allow the bird to bathe as often as it likes, but see it is not exposed to draughts. In drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a threepenny-piece, the same quantity of chlorate of potash, and six drops of lemon juice every third day for a fortnight, and every second day give twelve drops of chemical food in the water for three or four weeks. Twice a week very slightly anoint bare skin with sulphur ointment. Do not soil the feathers by putting on too much. You will probably not see much, if any, improvement until moulting season proper arrives.

Canaries in Outdoor Aviary.

E.W.—Your aviary appears to be very well placed, and should prove quite suitable for Canaries, or any kind of half-hardy birds—to use a gardening term. Cinnamon Canaries would be quite hardy enough to keep in it, and would probably thrive well, if you only took the precaution to stock it with birds that have been accustomed to a cold room. But do not put in hot-house creations; that is, birds bred in artificially heated rooms, or the result will be failure. As regards second query, I should say the hens you refer to are beyond all hope of cure. They may be regarded as incorrigibly bad feeders, and your best plan is to get rid of them—dispose of them as pets, nothing more: or give them a dose of chloroform—and fill their places with others with a higher moral sense of their obligations as parents. Stick to your good feeders as you would to a golden treasure.

Withholding His Merry Note.

"Stamps."—It is not at all unlikely that the breeder of the first bird was mistaken respecting its sex, and that it is a hen after all. These errors cannot always be avoided. If you hung the undoubted cock beside the doubtful one at this season, in such a position that they could see and reach each other, the sex would probably not long remain in doubt, as the cock would soon be seen calling to the hen and feeding her between the wires. The conduct of the second bird in refusing to sing in the presence of the other bird is one of those individual idio-syncrasies which cannot be explained. The fact that the first bird has begun to drop feathers shows that it must be exposed to some chills or draughts, or to great variations of temperature. Either of these causes must be removed before any cure can be effected. For proper treatment see reply to "W.D.S."

Swelling Around Eye.

W.R.M.—Unless the swelling around your bird's eye has come up quite rapidly, and shows a "ripe head" or core like a boil it is probably a tumour, and I would not advise you to interfere with it at all. You would probably only make matters worse. If the bird is a common one have it chloroformed, but if valuable enough to be worth it, show it to a veterinary, who could doubtless remove the swelling quite easily. If it is really a "boil" with a head as described, then you may just open the top of the core with a fine clean needle, press around it very gently to expel as much of the contents as will easily come away, and add to the warm water with which you bathe it a teaspoonful of liquid extract of witch hazel to each cupful of water.

Birds Not Breeding.

J.C.C., Locheilt-side.—Your birds must be very much out of condition not to have made any attempts at breeding yet. There is not much the matter with your feeding which could account for it. Leave them together now, and treat them as follows for a few weeks, or until they go to nest and have laid their eggs. As a staple food give a mixture of two parts Canary and one part rape in the hopper. In addition to this give separately to each pair the following extras: Each day three leaves of dandelion, every second day a teaspoonful of hemp, and on alternate days a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with five drops of sherry mixed in it, and a pinch of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it, and give a pinch of inga seed in the corner of the egg drawer. In the drinking water for the first three days give ten drops of syrup of buckthorn daily, and afterwards twenty drops of whiskey every second day for a week, and four drops of tincture of steel on the intervening days. If you persevere with this treatment the birds should soon be going to nest.

The Same Old Trouble.

"Try Again."—The chief cause of your trouble was that you commenced giving crushed hemp too early and thus brought the hen into breeding condition much too soon. Read reply to "C. Collard," and you will see where you went wrong in the feeding. On the Thursday when you began to give hemp you should just have finished decreasing the proportion of egg in your soft food, and be commencing to give green-food. Of course, you may now return the cock and let them go to nest again. When the next brood are hatched treat as is here intimated, and you will not probably always meet with this sort of disappointment. Also treat the brood of young Mules when they appear in the same way. There is no reason why you should not succeed all right. The Scotch have a saying that "the best laid plans of mice and men, gang aft agly."

Not "Puzzled" Now.

"Hopeful."—Am glad to hear you are no longer "puzzled," as you were when you sought advice a few weeks ago. 1. The time at which a hen Canary with a brood of young wants to go to nest again depends upon the manner in which she is fed, and upon her individual temperament. Many hens begin to think about nesting again when the young are a fortnight old. This is a little too early for safety. The best time is when the young are from twenty-one to twenty-eight days old, because at this time the young are able to do without the warmth of the hen, and if either of the parents maltreats them, may be placed by themselves in a nursery cage and hung on the front of the breeding cage, when the cock, or both cock and hen, will continue to feed through the wires, whilst arranging for a second brood. 2. If the cock had been left with hen whilst sitting, and the hen began to want to nest again when the young were about twelve days old, you would do no good in removing the cock then; the probability is she would "go on strike" at once, as far as feeding was concerned. The cock would be the most likely to continue to feed them. Give a mild aperient in the water, and cooling green-food. Then if she seems bent on nesting, give her a new nest box and moss, and if she takes to that for the new nest, and does not pluck the young, leave latter alone; but if she starts to pluck, place the young, nest, and all in a nursery cage in such a position that the old birds can feed them comfortably. Return to original position in the cage at night to see if the hen will brood over them. If so, allow her to do so each night until they are old enough to do without her, and be up betimes each morning to remove back to the nursery for the day. If she will not cover them at night, leave them in the nursery and cover them up snugly with a bit of soft flannel or wool, and be true to your present pseudonym.

Brevities.

Not Nesting (Boots).—The most obvious reason for the birds not nesting is that they are not well matched—in short, you have put together two hens. This, of course, is assuming the birds are in good general health, and that neither sings much, if at all. As you say nothing about the condition of the birds I cannot venture on a more definite reply. If you think this suggestion "far off the mark," you must write again, and say what condition the birds are in. There is not much the matter with your feeding.

Going to Nest Again (A. Fordham).—The hen should have the cock taken away from her when she commences to sit this time, and be left to rear the young by herself. Feed plainly whilst she is sitting, giving a mixture of two parts Canary and one part rape, with a small spray of green-food daily, and a half teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake or egg food (whichever you prefer) once a week only. See reply to "C. Collard," and also get back numbers of CAGE BIRDS for April, and read up the Novices' Notebook page.

Bird Moulting (W.D.S.).—You did quite right to separate the birds when the cock started moulting. He was not in good condition when mated. Give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge-cake every second day with five drops of sherry in it, and on alternate days the same quantity hemp seed. In the drinking water give twelve drops chemical food daily for a week, and for another week every second day, and on intervening days four drops tincture of steel. The spots are where the new plumage, unaffected by colour food, is showing through. You cannot get rid of them without putting bird on colour food and plucking them out—a course I do not advise you to adopt. Wait until general moult.

Occasional Asthma (M. E. Palmer).—As these attacks occur two or three times a week it points to some rational explanation. Take particular notice when they occur, and see if anything has occurred the day before to cause the bird to get a slight chill or to occasion any draught to which it might have been exposed. As the bird is feeding young I would advise you to mix well together 60 drops each of glycerine and sherry, and ten drops of oil of eucalyptus, and give two drops of this direct into the beak from a quill or a medicine dropper each night when the attack comes on. Shake mixture thoroughly to mix in the oil each time before using. When you discover the cause take the necessary steps to remove it.

A Doubtful Pair ("Sexton," Cardiff).—Your suspicion is the correct one. Both are undoubtedly cocks. Occasionally a hen will make a very fair show at singing, but it will not behave as your supposed hen did. No, it is not too late to pair up now for a single brood, and there will be plenty of time to get a brood. Try to get a healthy young hen of last season that has not been mated up yet.

Does Not Lay (Mercedes).—You should have given particulars as to feeding, what condition birds are in, and whether the cock sings. It is possible you have got two hens mated. See reply to "J.C.C., Locheilt-side" for the way you might treat them, to bring them on to nesting properly. If, however, you have an undoubted cock, give the hen a clutch of common eggs to hatch and rear, which would very likey start her off properly on her own account. Is the hen an old one, or a last year's bird? If the former, I would discard her without further effort on her behalf, and replace her with a vigorous young bird.

A Mating Query (W.E.D.).—Yes, any extreme of heat and cold is apt to cause a loss of feathers such as you describe. It is just possible, however, one of the hens is responsible for the bareness. See reply to "No Name" in this issue for a suitable course of treatment whilst you have the bird alone. There is no reason why you should not mate him again as soon as No. 1 hen is again ready for him. When he is alone you should feed him a little more plainly. Cut off the inga, gold of pleasure, and most of the egg food.

Siberian Goldfinch with Diarrhœa

Polsyh. You are certainly committing a grave error in not letting your Siberian Goldie have any grit. I advise you to give him a supply at once, but start with a pinch only, and see that it is really "gritty," which can be attained by sifting out the dust, if any. Most of my own birds like a piece of cuttlefish to peck at, and it is undoubtedly beneficial. Your feeding is good, but you ought to put a liberal allowance of sound ripe teazle seed in the stock mixture. Under the circumstances, the little milk sop (I assume he eats it) should benefit him. For medicine, get one ounce of crystals of citrate of iron from a chemist, and dissolve as much as just lies on a sixpence in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water, using a glass or pot vessel. Continue this for five or six days, when you will, I think, find the bird's excreta of normal character, and the bird itself much tighter in condition. If the bird is very queer, then try five or six drops of chlorodyne (well stirred up) for a few days.

Thrush Not Singing.

Greenhorn.—You seem to be feeding the bird very well indeed, and I assume it is in good condition. This being so, then I am afraid the explanation of its songless state lies in its being a representative of the gentler sex. Song is the only true test of the sex of hand-reared Thrushes. You might keep it another fortnight, and try giving it a feed or two of "blackbeetles" daily. If it does not sing then, I should say it is hopeless.

Contest Singing Cages.

Dum-dum.—The cages used for singing contests are those known as "back cages," and these are to be obtained from most large cage makers. They vary slightly in size, width of wiring, etc., according, I suppose, to individual taste, and most have a metal plate (running through a slot) to cover over the seed supply at will. The explanation of the other matter is that some have a drawboard (a tray to pull out for cleaning purposes), while some have a turn-rail only.

What Weed?

Marker.—Your letter made me smile. My description of shepherd's-purse must have been a very bad one, for that which you send as this weed is in reality chickweed, which bears very little resemblance to it indeed. Shepherd's-purse has heart-shaped seed-pods running up the stem, the latter being crowned with a bunch of very tiny white flowers. An illustration, and full description, appeared in CAGE BIRDS for September 7th last.

Siberian Goldfinch's Bare Eye.

Dennistown.—I have never heard before of whiskey mixed with the liquid a beetroot has been boiled in, being used as a cure in a case where a bird is going bare of feathers round the eye. Therefore I cannot, of course, say anything either for or against the same. If the eye of the Goldfinch is in a healthy condition (no discharge, or anything), personally I should not trouble my head in the matter. Evidently it does not detrimentally affect the bird, or he would not be singing so stoutly, and be in fine plumage otherwise. And if it appeared to be irritating the bird (evidenced by its rubbing the eye continually on the perch), I should, if it were mine, apply a little boracic ointment to the place daily, with the tip of a finger. If muling operations are going along nicely, however, you would be wise not to interfere with him unnecessarily.

Jackdaw's Scaly Legs.

Constant Reader.—It is evident from the bird's behaviour that the scales pain him, and you should remove them by the method advised when answering a querist last week. He will then give up the habit of pecking at the scales and making his legs bleed. After the operation is over, wash the legs in warm water, dab dry with a soft cloth, and paint over any raw or bleeding places with "New Skin," an extremely useful liquid preparation sold by chemists at sixpence the bottle. It only takes a few moments to dry on, and the bird should be held until it is well set, for it "stings" a little when first applied. Any pain is merely momentary, however, and the bird's health will be benefited immensely afterwards. Your feeding is excellent.

"Cock Eggs and Hen Eggs," etc.

Bill Bailey.—I could almost think you were having a little joke. No one can "tell cock eggs from hen eggs." If this were possible, then breeders of Canaries would no longer have any excuse for now and then popping a cock bird into a hen class, or selling young birds with inaccurate statements (I ought, no doubt, to say forecasts) as to their sex. It is the same in Mule and Hybrid breeding—no one can tell from the egg what sex any youngster which may hatch out of it will be. Your other questions are not easy to answer briefly. Fertilisation is assumed to take place at about the time the yolk (carrying the germ spot) is ripe—that is, about to break from the ovary (or "egg-chamber") of the hen, and fall into the oviduct (or "egg-passage") to commence its journey to the outer world. While en route the yolk is coated with the white and the shell, and the process of hatching commences, though the changes that then take place in the cell (or germ) are invisible to the naked eye. "Hatching" ceases once the egg is expelled from the vent, to recommence when the hen begins to sit. The first visible signs of fertility (to the outside eye, so to speak) are streaks of blood, as fanciers term them, forming within the egg after it has been sat on a day or so. A practised eye can detect these "blood streaks" at a very early period, by the well-known process of looking through the egg when holding it against a strong light. After three or four days of incubation, the egg begins to get quite opaque when so viewed, and at the end of a week the merest tyro can with certainty judge of the fertility or otherwise of the same—hence the term "clear egg" denoting an unfertile one. I trust this answer clears up your doubtful points.

A Hybrid Pair.

P. Felce.—A cage, 3 ft. long, 2 ft. high, and 2 ft. from back to front, makes a rattling good cage to try to breed either British birds or Hybrids in, the good width affording seclusion. Give them an ordinary nest-bag and a supply of charpie for nesting materials. If you get out into the country at all, you can supplement these with dried grasses, bents, and an old Blackbird's or Greenfinch's nest pulled to pieces. My own hen Britishers were often very fond of charpie, and one or two have built a fine, clean-looking, cosy nest practically entirely of it. Some use an earthenware nest pan, but the majority of hen British birds prefer wooden nest-boxes, or Roller travelling cages with the end (or top) and inside fitments removed. Some like an old Blackbird's nest to re-line, and some will lay their eggs in simply a hole made in dried grasses strewn on the cage floor. They are very variable. They will rear the young (or attempt to do so, I should say, for few succeed, the usual plan being to put the eggs under foster parents) on the ordinary seeds, but must have unlimited seeding shepherd's-purse, groundsel, chickweed, and the like. In addition, mine also relished soft foods, and egg food.

A Muling Matter.

A. E. Jones.—Your Goldfinch may be run with another hen as soon as ever she is ready to commence domestic duties. When he should be again put with hen No. 1 must depend on how that lady comports herself. If she favours you with a clutch of clear (unfertile) eggs only, she will be ready for another trial after a rest of seven or eight days, during which period she should be well fed, a little egg food being given daily. If she hatches, then don't begin to think about a second nest until that brood is safe—a bird in the hand, so to speak, is worth two in the next round of eggs. Young Mules are more precocious than young Canaries, and can usually feed themselves a day or two earlier. It is always the best plan, however, to let the hen keep steadily on feeding them until they show signs of picking up for themselves. This will happen somewhere about the twenty-second day after hatching. Round about this time young Mules can be safely transferred to nursery cages, or shut off from their mother by means of a wired slide. But if she shows no impatience to commence with the second nest (by plucking the young, or in other quite unmistakable ways) don't hurry to separate them. If necessary, it is possible to part the hen and her young for an hour of a morning or evening, while the Goldfinch is run along with her. It is best not to trust the Finch with the young unless you know him well. Oft-times they are spiteful, and "chivy" them about.

Brevities.

Identity of Bird (A.A.).—The bird you have is a Ring Ouzel (Turdus torquatus). One local name for it is "White-throated Blackbird." Sorry to dash to the ground your hopes of a Thrush-Blackbird Hybrid.

Wild Seed (Goldfinch).—To me the sample looks just the ordinary wild seed mixture. A very similar sample reaches me this week from another querist, who says his own Goldies like it very much, and thrive upon it. Give your birds some mild saline medicine (sulphate of soda).

Wild Seed (Hardbill).—I will try and give you a full answer next week. If your Goldfinches are fond of it, as you say, then obviously it is worth while giving it to them.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

Parrot with a Cold.

A Parrot Lover.—Get from your chemist the following mixture: Ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills and glycerine in equal parts. Take one teaspoonful of the mixture to two tablespoonfuls of water, and let the bird have this only for drinking (offer it three or four times a day) till the trouble yields. Bathe its nostrils with diluted glyco-thymolino two or three times daily; use a camel-hair brush for the purpose, well cleansing same, and use a fresh portion of the solution for each occasion. Continue this till the exudation ceases. Diet: Use a mixture of Canary seed, wheat, dari, maize, oats, hemp, and sunflower seeds. Half the bulk of the mixture to be Canary seed, the other half to consist of equal parts of the items named; well mix, and keep a supply continuously in the cage. Also supply so as to vary the diet; ripe fruit, plain biscuits (dry), nuts (shelled walnuts are best), green food, and keep a piece of cuttlefish continually in the cage. You must continue to give boiled maize till you find it is eating freely of the dry seed mixture. As soon as this occurs, gradually wean it from the boiled maize. For one day only soak one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia into the boiled maize, repeating the dose in a week's time. Do not give table scraps, slops, or animal food of any kind.

Not a Gifted Speaker.

W. J. Kent.—Your bird is the Roseate or Rose-breasted Cockatoo, not notoriously gifted in the way of speech, though many of them are good screechers. However, by patience and kindness you should overcome this, and if you keep it where it will hear conversation going on and talk to it, pet it, etc., it should ultimately speak, at any rate, a few words. Correspondents have described in this paper talented birds in their possession. If the bird eats heartily of crushed maize, oats, and Canary seed this will suffice. Tempt it with various ripe fruits, and let it have a little daily of such as it fancies, also plain dry biscuits, nuts, green food, and cuttlefish, and till it is in good feather again make its drinking water the colour of pale port with Parrish's Chemical Food. Do not give table scraps, tea, coffee, or milk slops, nor any kind of animal food.

Whydah Not in Full Plumage.

Mario Cammino.—The principal diet of this bird is white and spray millet and Canary seed as well if it will eat it, with green food (lettuce, etc.), cuttlefish, grit, etc., and a few live insects daily, such as mealworms, spiders, ants' eggs, smooth caterpillars, various plant bugs, etc., as procurable. Of course, grit and water for drinking and bathing must also be supplied. Make its drinking water just saline with Epsom Salts for one day only. Follow this by making the drinking water the colour of pale port, for the next month at least, with Parrish's Chemical Food. If there should appear any signs of constipation, you give a dose of salts as required. The change from winter to nuptial plumage is a severe strain on the bird's system, and your bird was evidently rather low when it commenced; but unless it has gone farther than your letter indicates it should soon pick up.

Green Parrot Shivering.

Mrs. Hanmesser.—If the bird does not actually eject the food before eating it again, it is perfectly natural; many species bring the partly-digested food from the crop up into the mouth again and then re-swallow it, and, apparently, it assists their digestion; but, of course, if your bird actually ejects the food it is some digestive trouble, and the symptoms you give point to this fact. It is not wholesome for any Parrot to live entirely on sunflower seed, and I'm not surprised at its picking itself. Give it three or four doses of Dinneford's Magnesia, with a two days' interval between each dose—one teaspoonful of the magnesia in two tablespoonsful of water. Take away the drinking water over night, and offer the magnesia water to the bird every two or three hours, this being its only drink for that day. On the days you are not giving magnesia (and continue it for a month at least) make the drinking water the colour of pale port with Parrish's Chemical Food. Diet as follows:—Seed mixture—Canary seed, wheat, maize, dari, oats, and hemp (omit the sunflower seeds entirely for a time), well mix, and always keep a supply in the cage. Also supply ripe fruit (such kinds as it favours), plain biscuit, nuts (shelled walnuts are best), cuttlefish, and grit; a little green food is very wholesome, such as fresh lettuce, cress, green peas (uncooked), etc., as in season being usually much appreciated.

Breeding Ruficaudas.

Gargle.—The data you give practically answer your own query. The Ruficauda, Pectoral, and Yellow-rump Finches are equally likely to breed in such cages as you mention as the Long-tailed Greenfinches, and their treatment is practically the same. Your success, if not unique, is certainly most uncommon, and I'm sure an account of your success would interest many CAGE BIRDS readers, as well as myself. Of course, it is a well-known fact that luck enters largely into such cases, and that under similar conditions three or four will fail where one succeeds. At the same time, I'm convinced that more might be done in the way of breeding of Foreign Birds in cages if those having roomy indoor cages would persevere with same. Shy and retiring birds should have, say, one-third of the cage front screened with canvas, and the nest-box fixed in the back corner of cage behind it. Hope to hear of further successes.

Keeping Cordon Bleus Outdoors.

E. W.—Cordon Bleus are very delicate, or rather in a very fragile condition, when they first arrive in this country, but the weather is now fairly settled, and if you provide them husks, etc., to sleep in, such as survive will be comparatively hardy by the time the cold weather is here again. The difficulty with Cordon Bleus, Fire Finches, etc., is to get them hardened off, or acclimatised, as we term it. Once this is accomplished, they are not any more delicate than the majority of small Foreign Finches, but in this process, even with experienced aviculturists, the mortality is very great. Striated and Sharp-tailed Finches are much less difficult to harden off, and your losses with these should be comparatively small. If you are in a rural district, and can command a supply of blighty (non-poisonous) foliage and herbage and living ants' cocoons (so-called eggs), your task should not be a difficult one. The beauty of these small avian gems, as well as the difficulty of the task, only enhance the pleasure of ultimate success.

Budgerigars and their Eggs.

M. E. Palmer.—(1) Till Budgies are a good size the noise they make is only a faint hissing, and is not readily heard a little distance (a few yards) away. Take the opportunity when she is feeding of lifting down the husk and examining it; possibly you may find young therein. If not, put in another husk in another part of the cage. It would hardly be wise to clear out the husk, as possibly the earlier eggs may be infertile and that the later ones may yet hatch out. It often occurs with these birds, they will incubate on the first clutch the full period with no result, then lay another clutch without clearing out the previous one, and go on incubating. (2) See reply to "E. W." re Cordon Bleus. As you can have them on "appro.," they should certainly be worth having, and as the weather is now fairly warm and settled there should be a reasonable chance of acclimatising at least some of them.

Breeding Moustache Parrakeets.

Newport, Mon.—It is almost impossible to say what the actual species of these birds is, the popular name being used with several of the Ring-necked and Alexandrine groups. Turned out at the present time they are quite hardy, and will winter quite safely out of doors. They are not Plum-heads. They are almost certainly immature birds, a good condition to secure them in, but at this stage with most of the species, the sexes are almost indistinguishable. They do not breed till they are adult. Nest boxes, or small barrels, are generally used for Parrakeets of this size. Suitable nest-boxes with concave bottoms are advertised in our columns. The diet (not the drugs) given in our reply to "Mrs. Hanmesser" in this issue will suffice for this species also. Several distinctions are only of value as regards adult birds; such as they are, I will give them in our next issue.

Java Sparrows Breeding.

Anxious Learner.—As regards the general principle of breeding Foreign Birds in cages see reply to "Gargle." White Java Sparrows are free breeders either in cage or aviary; in fact, they are one of the easiest of Foreigners to breed in cages, but the wild Grey Java is very uncertain in this respect, and is usually in the cage or aviary more than a year before attempting to do so. A good method of getting a free breeding strain of the Grey variety is to procure a pair each of White and Greys and cross-mate them, and then again cross-mate their progeny, and you will thus have unrelated pairs. However pied the progeny of the White and Grey crossing may be, the result of the cross-pairing of their young will be 90 per cent. of pure Greys. I should say what pied specimens do turn up are usually very handsome birds. Diet: Canary, white and spray millet seeds, a few oats, "paddy" rice (rice in the husk), green food, grit, cuttlefish, and water ad lib for drinking and bathing.

British and Foreign Finches.

"Avifauna."—It all depends on what Britishers you have got. Chaffinches, Brambles, Buntings, and Greenfinches I have found very hostile, and frequently murderously inclined to their foreign relatives. The other British Finches are fairly friendly, and, at any rate, tolerant towards their foreign cousins. The Weaver and Whydah groups are all handsome birds, and should do well in such an aviary and series, as also should Diamond Doves. These are very small and pretty, and are free breeders, making a pleasing variety. Pekin Robins could also be kept, and any of the following: Ruficauda, Pectoral, Long-tailed and Masked Greenfinches, Zebra, Ribbon, Diamond, Spice, and Saffron Finches, White and Grey Java Sparrow. Silverbills and a pair of small Quails, such as Chinese, or African Harlequin. These and the Doves being mostly ground birds are specially welcome on this account, and if there is a little cover will breed. Supply a hopper of Canary and white millet in separate hopper, in addition to seeds you are now supplying; also spray millet, a saucer of good, soft mixture, a little ripe fruit, and green food in variety, lettuce, etc.

Cockatoo with Bad Feet.

Cockie.—When a bird has got into a bad condition, especially as regards plumage, and such is the result of either plucking or disease, recovery cannot be rapid; the bird must be got into a generally healthy condition, and gradually the plumage will become more normal, and ultimately possess the bloom of health when the bird is completely restored. Continue the treatment already advised, with this proviso—that if Parrish's Chemical Food was not advised, make the bird's drinking water the colour of pale port with this tonic, and continue same for a month or two. Get a few (say three) pellets of sponge cake, soak them in tasteless castor oil, and see that the bird takes them. Let them be about the size of pills. Bathe the bird's feet in hot (of course, not scalding) whiskey and water for a few minutes at a time several times daily, dry them, and till the bird's feet are easier cover the perches with baize and the sand tray with white blotting paper, which, of course, must be renewed as it becomes fouled with the bird's voidings. A little grit can be mingled with its seed mixture while you are using the paper over sand tray. You had better report progress a fortnight hence, with fullest details.

Brevities.

Moustache Parrakeets (Abb).—See reply to "Newport, Mon.," in this issue, and also look out for supplementary reply in next issue.

Young Grey Parrot (A Young Grey).—Get some half-inch mesh wire netting, and fix over cage grating; keep this very clean, and do not remove it till the bird is broken of the habit. The bird is possibly feeling the lack of soft, moist food; you can supply this with soft, over-ripe but not rotten fruit. Try several kinds, and let it have a little each day, as well as plain biscuit, just dipped in water, but not made soppy; a few nuts (shelled walnuts are best) can also be given. Keep a piece of clean cuttlefish continually in cage. Mix a little grit with seed mixture while you have to keep the grating netted over. For a time give Parrish's Chemical Food in drinking water. See replies to other correspondents.

Budgerigar's Overgrown Beak (Avis).—The beak must be shortened back to normal size, care being taken not to cut back too far or split the beak by taking off too much at a time. Keep a piece of cuttlefish and a lump of hard mortar rubbish in cage; this should prevent a recurrence of the excessive growth. Many Budgerigars are moulting just now; it is the case with those in my aviary. Let them have a few oats daily, with Canary, white, and spray millet, and a liberal supply of grass in flower, fresh and tender lettuce, etc. Of course, the probability is they will not breed till in good feather again.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Cinnamon Yorkshire (J. Bean).—Liver disease, inducing feverishness and pneumonia.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Article (J.B.).—We have to thank you for an interesting contribution. Pleased to hear from you at any time.

Breeding Results (W. Smith).—We are always glad to know how our readers have fared, and especially if any experiences out of the ordinary have fallen to their lot.

Address (Prestonite).—The address of the C.B.U. secretary is, Mr. G. W. F. Lythgoe, 25, Stamford Street, Old Trafford, Manchester.

Bird Diseases (Novice).—We think you will find in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL all that you want to know about the diseases of birds and their treatment. It will only cost you sixpence to see, anyway, and you will get a heap of other information thrown in.

The Egg Collector in Ireland.

Ireland appears to be now the favourite hunting ground of the egg-collector. He has done his level best to exterminate rare species in England and now turns his attention to the sister isle. There is a certain spot, which is the last great stronghold of the Chough (a fast-diminishing species; if this is not carefully protected these birds will soon be extinct. It is recorded that an English collector took up his quarters there last season, and raided within miles every nest that had any market value. It is a difficult matter to protect any well-known nesting place of any rare bird. These collectors are generally men of substance, or work for those who are.

A Lecture reprinted from CAGE BIRDS, delivered by this leading judge and expert before the London and Provincial Ornithological Society, and pronounced by all experts to be a most valuable pamphlet concerning the breeding of the variety.

BREEDING CAGE LABELS, 1d. doz., 7 doz. 6d
A boon to all breeders. Neatly printed in sets of twelve, on perforated gummed paper. They can be torn off, and affixed to the breeding cage in a moment, and prevent all confusion. Useful alike to both small and large breeders of birds.

CARD BREEDING REGISTERS, 1d. each, 4 for 3d., 9 for 6d.
For hanging up in the birdroom. Printed on suitable stiff card, they are ruled to hold a complete record of the breeding results of six pairs of birds; invaluable for future reference, to ensure that knowledge of one's stock essential to accurate breeding.

LIVE BIRD LABELS, 24, 3d.; 50, 6d.; 100, 1/-.
For use when despatching live birds on journeys by rail, or to the shows, etc. Printed in red ink and gummed on back. The simplest, neatest, and best on the market.

NOTE PAPER & POSTCARDS, 250 for 2/-; 500 for 2.6.
Until further notice we have decided to supply below cost price artistic Memorandum Forms and stout postcards, with name, address, twelve words of particulars, and blocks of any special variety of bird at half cost for cash Carriage paid to any address in the U.K. Our latest style of note-head and postcard has been universally admired, and we will gladly send specimens to anyone enclosing stamped addressed envelope.

BLOCKS OF BIRDS, 1/6 each, 5 for 6/-, or 9 for 10/-.
For inserting in advertisements and for printing memorandums blocks of all kinds of birds at above low prices can be supplied. Larger blocks to order at cheapest possible rates. These dainty little blocks immensely enhance the appearance of note paper, postcards, and advertisements.

PICTURE POSTCARDS, 1d. each; set of six, 6d.
The most delightful and appropriate postcards of Canaries, British Birds, and Hybrids on the market, executed in colours by Mr. H. Norman. Ideal for Fanciers' correspondence. All represent exact and correct show types and have accompanying descriptions. State which bird or birds are required, or whether a mixed selection is preferred.
The latest set is entitled, "Pairs Matched for Breeding"; very educational art postcards. Price 3d. set of 8.

ORNAMENTAL PLATES, 1/- & 1/6 each.
The following coloured plates of Cage Birds can be obtained mounted on stiff card and gelatined. This process makes them washable and gives them the handsome appearance and all the durability of framed plates under glass:—Bullfinch, Blackbird and Robin, Border Fancy Canary, Bullfinch Hybrids, Cinnamon Canary, Cinnamon Marked Yorkshires, Foreign Finches, Goldfinch and Bullfinch, Hybrids (popular), Lancashire and Lizards, Mules (popular), Norwich (Yellow), Parrakeets, Yorkshires. Price 1s. each. Crests, Desirable Aliens (Foreign Birds), Larks and Pipits, Norwich (Blaze of Colour), Wagtails and Stonechat. Price 1s. 6d. each.
Also a padded plate of KINGFISHER having all the appearance of a hand painting executed on ivory. A most charming ornament for brackets, occasional tables, etc. Price 1s. All are post free.
Why spend large sums on decorating the house with other pictures?

FANCIERS' PRINTING.
Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work.

WATERHENS BREEDING IN TREES.

SIR,—On Sunday, May 17, I saw, or rather heard, a large bird fly out from some ivy-trees. On going up I found a Water-hen's nest which contained four eggs then and seven when I went again to get a look at the bird for the purpose of making sure it was a Water-hen. Although I have been used to these birds all my life I have never known one to be ten feet off the ground before.

F. N.

WHAT BIRD IS IT?

SIR,—There is a peculiar bird which we have seen during the month of May. It has come regularly for the last three years. It is about the size of a Blackbird and has a black tail and white above its tail. It appears to have a little white about its neck, and also a remarkable "crake" or "snore." Nobody round here (Cumberland) has ever seen or heard of such a bird. It is very wild, too. It chiefly haunts the woods and flies high among the branches. It can be heard quite 300 yards away. Some people have said it might be a Nightjar. Can any reader say what it is likely to be?

G. SKELTON.

AN EXTRAORDINARY CASE OF EGG-LAYING.

SIR,—Seeing the letters in CAGE BIRDS re egg-laying, I thought the following might be of interest. My Plainhead Norwich hen was paired to a Crested Norwich cock (both Buff) on May 8th. She laid one egg on May 15th, two on the 16th, two on the 17th, two on the 18th, and one on the 13th, making eight eggs in five days. There is no mistake about this, as I have only the one pair and the cock is in full song. One of the two eggs laid on each of the three days was in each case very small and speckled and the other large and of a pale green colour with hardly any markings. They have already had one nest of clear eggs, which I think were caused by the cold weather in the beginning of April. (MISS) B. GORDON.

SIR,—I notice in this week's CAGE BIRDS an account of an extraordinary case of egg-laying, written by G. Newman. I may say that I have had a case very similar to his, and would be glad if any of your readers could account for it. My hen laid eight eggs in eight successive days. I caught her off feeding this afternoon (May 24) and saw there was one young bird which is out to time. S. BAYLEY.

THE WHITETHROAT IN CAPTIVITY.

SIR,—This bird arrives at about the middle of April, and is a refined, delicate-looking bird. It has a very pleasant song, but nothing like that of either the Blackcap or the Nightingale. It is also very pugnacious; it refuses to allow any male of its species to get within its domestic area. When in full plumage it makes a very attractive cage pet and show bird. It can easily be distinguished by its white throat, and is generally found in gardens and pleasure grounds. It is a very useful bird to horticulturists, as it destroys no end of insects, flies, and aphides; at the same time it plays sad havoc with any ripe fruit; for it appears to live on fruit during the summer. The bird can, however, easily be taken in the nets which protect the fruit trees and strawberries, and one thereby stands a good chance of getting a few nice, young birds. I have never hand-reared above two or three nests, as I could nearly always get young birds in the way I have stated. I have also caught them in trap cages and under sieves baited with ripe strawberries, which had been "forced" under glass. At the time I had some of these birds there were no shows near to my home; if there were, they did not cater for the likes of them. So I soon got tired of them and did not keep them long, as one could then neither sell them nor give them away; I used to let them have their freedom after I had learnt a few lessons from them and had studied their ways. They soon settled down to cage life and quickly became nice, engaging little pets. Their nests are generally built in a low bush or on pea-sticks, old rubbish heaps, underwood, etc. They are made of dry grass, moss, hay, etc., loosely put together and lined with horse-hair and sometimes feathers. The clutch of eggs consists generally of five—all of a greenish grey and spotted with reddish brown. If the female is startled from the nest, it is very amusing to watch her as she affects lameness; or an injured wing, so that she cannot fly, until she gets you away from the nest. You then soon discover that she is alright. As the young of these birds are raised on small insects, such as moths, caterpillars, flies, beetles, and aphides, it is always as well to give them some of these when hand-rearing them, also a little ripe strawberry with scalded bread and milk, ants' eggs, and a little yolk of egg mixed into a thin paste so that it may readily slip from the feeding-stick. Any good kind of soft food will do for these birds when they can feed themselves, varying it with ripe fruit of different kinds in summer and shop currants in winter, with a few spiders, flies, beetles, mealworms, etc., daily. The birds, like all other soft bills, must be kept scrupulously clean, or they will soon smell, besides getting their plumage into a mess. In the use of shop currants for either these or Nightingales, or even Blackcaps, it is as well to vary them. Some should be soaked in cold water only (never hot), and some in golden syrup, and honey and water, or even honey. I have also used soft, ripe apple soaked in honey. Some of the birds were very fond of it, whilst others would not touch it. Perhaps, after reading these notes, some young fanciers may like to keep these birds; if so, they may be glad of a few ideas from one who has kept these birds.

A CUCKOO IN CAPTIVITY AND A THRUSH'S SAGACITY.

SIR,—A lady living in the Manor Park district has in her collection of British Birds a Cuckoo, which she has had for three years. It is in splendid plumage and very tame. She keeps it in an ordinary medium-sized Thrush cage. I think this is the first time that a Cuckoo has been reported to have lived so long in captivity. The same lady has got a Thrush's nest which was built by a hen which was allowed to go where it liked about the house. The first nest was built over the window and rested on the blind, and, of course, fell down when the blind was drawn down. The nest was replaced in the morning, but Mrs. Thrush saw there was danger where it was, so she pulled it to pieces again and rebuilt it on the kitchen dresser. This nest was built of pieces of ladies' lining and dress cuttings and pieces of cotton. She laid two eggs. The nest and eggs are still in the lady's possession, and she would no doubt be pleased to allow any fancier to see both the Cuckoo and the Thrush-nest. W. C. H. WYTHE.

A BIRD LOVER FROM CANADA.

SIR,—Having been a lover of cage birds from a boy, and having had great success with my aviary in Canada, I now, living in London, keep up my hobby, only on a much smaller scale. My collection comprises three English Goldfinches (two cocks and a hen), a cock Siberian Goldfinch, which is a splendid songster, two cock Chaffinches and a hen, a pair of Yorkshire Canaries, a pair of Hartz Mountain Rollers, and two cock Linnets. The birds are kept on a special table, about five by four feet, which is placed in front of a large east window. When the morning sun shines upon them, they send forth their charming songs in gratitude, calling me to duty. I am up every morning, Sundays included, at sunrise, and my feathered friends are thoroughly cleaned out, perches washed and dried, given fresh seed, sand, and water. Twice a week a bath is given them if the weather permits. Finding it such an interesting hobby, I would advise all parents to encourage their children to keep different species of birds. It is well worth an hour or so each morning of simple duty to receive such joyous thanks in return from our little feathered friends. In conclusion, I must not forget to mention how I enjoy CAGE BIRDS, the paper which does so much for the Fancy. JAMES A. DOUGLAS.

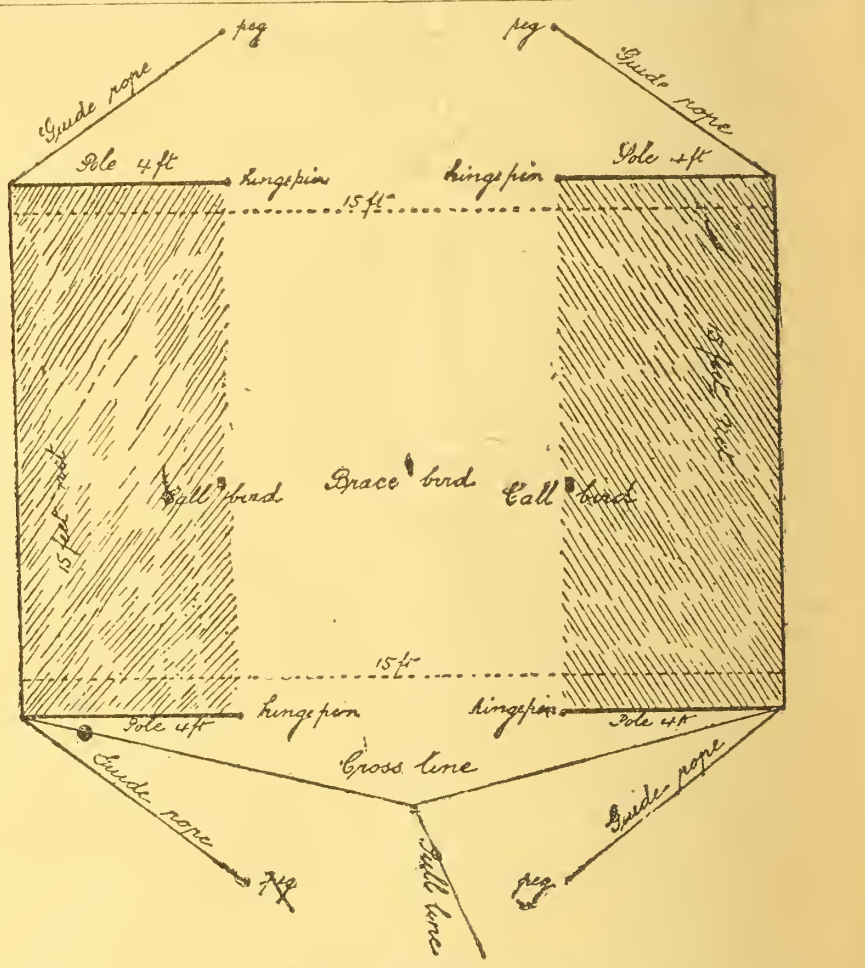
BIRD CATCHING.

SIR,—It would be very interesting to know how "Constant Reader" feeds his fresh-caught birds (Goldfinches, Bullfinches, Linnets, etc.), and what kind of cages he keeps them in. Perhaps he will also be good enough to tell us if he keeps them dark.

A LOVER OF BRITISH BIRDS.

SIR,—In reply to "Amateur" I have pleasure in enclosing a drawing of the nets I use and which I described as being made on the come-and-go principle. Each of the poles brings the net four feet and takes it four feet distance from hinge pin to hinge pin seven feet along dotted line. (Of course the dotted line is only an imaginary one, being for the purposes of measurement.) Each net therefore covers eight feet by fifteen feet, so that there is an overlap of one foot along the centre—total blank space five yards. On the ordinary system the only vacant space would be that between the four hinge pins, as the nets would cover the space between each pair of poles. Tie the cross-line to the pole tips where the nets are fixed, afterwards again tying it half way down the pole, to keep the cross-line from slipping towards the hinge pins when pulling. By tying half way down you get double speed in nets coming over. Stand straight in front of your net to pull, not straight in the centre, as the farther net will come over first. You will thus prevent bridging—i.e., both nets meeting when coming over and propping one another up instead of dropping flat. Tie the pull-line to the cross-line, so that it cannot slide along it. Of course, two corners of each net are pegged to the ground and two tied to the pole tips. When the line is pulled the folded nets will spread out and cover the whole space. A single net is worked in the same way, but instead of the cross-line being tied to two poles, it is tied to one pole and the other end to the peg driven in the ground. You can then stand anywhere you like when pulling, except behind the net.

CONSTANT READER.



Clap Nets Set Ready for Use.

In this illustration the nets are shown extended on the ground, and not folded up at the outer edges (expanding only when the pull takes place), as described by "Constant Reader."

DANDELION AND YOUNG BIRDS.

SIR,—Perhaps my experiences of the dandelion question would be of some interest. I am strongly in favour of dandelion at all times (except in cases of diarrhœa) for both parents and young Canaries; but it must be the right sort of dandelion leaf—young leaves, with as few serrations or points as possible, something like a lettuce leaf. It must be given the birds as fresh as possible, not too much stalk and quite dry. I give this ad lib with what I may say is fair success. Last year nothing suited my old birds so much as quantities of dandelion. It brought them into breeding condition, and in the case of one pair I had four nests. The young birds fed on dandelion (in addition to egg, of course) from the date when hatched, and were a deep yellow—an intense colour—partly due, in my opinion, to the dandelion, both the leaf and petals of the flowers. This year, although it is still early in the breeding season, I have had from four to five eggs per nest and only one egg in 30 proved infertile; all the others hatched out. Within three weeks of their being hatched I had 15 in a flight cage, all being fed by two pairs of parents; but yesterday (May 24), when only four weeks old, they were put into a larger flight cage, and picking up egg, crushed hemp, scalded rape (getting on to hard seed) and last, but not least, dandelion. At the age of five days a nest of four promising youngsters were killed through my giving the parents watercress, by way of experiment. Lettuce is recommended, but one fancier told me last year he had only reared one youngster from 12 pairs through giving lettuce. My opinion of dandelion is that it is an excellent tonic and food. There is some nutrition in the milk in the stalk and leaf. It helps to impart yellow colour and so do the petals of the flower; and it rallies the old birds to go to nest again and to lay fertile eggs. One of my hens has to-day laid her eighth egg in nine days, and I have little doubt but that they will all be fertile. There is one feature about the outward appearance of my youngsters this season as compared with that of last season, and that is they are not so tight in feather as formerly. Last year they were particularly sleek and close in feather, this year they are rather loose and fluffy. Will one or other of your readers give me some remedy or advice? I should say that most of my youngsters are Yorkshires, bred from last year's birds—all cold-room bred, with plenty of fresh air, the window being frequently open. They are now in a large flight cage 6ft. by 4ft. C. M. B.

TWINS TWICE OVER IN ONE NEST.

SIR,—I noticed in CAGE BIRDS that a reader had two birds in one egg; well, I can beat that record. Last year I had a Norwich hen which laid three eggs—two large ones and one small one. I got five birds from these three eggs, four in two large eggs; but, as my friend says, they were dead, but they were fully formed. Another reader says he has a Thrush's nest in a well. Well, I have a house in my garden where I keep lumber, and I have some cord on a shelf in the house. On this cord a Thrush-nest is built and contains four young ones, all a week old.

IDEAL BRITISH BIRDS.

SIR,—You did well in calling Mr. Chick's attention to the fact that "the possession of a single fault does not by any means debar a bird from taking a prize," especially if it excels in all the other points. Take, for instance, the Hawfinch. He may be rich in plumage, close in feather, with excellent head and correct shape, size and position, and yet may fail somewhat in bib. But surely this one defect is not sufficient to put him out of the money altogether?—although, as you say, it may prevent him from taking premier honours. The same thing applies in reference to the Goldfinch. He may have a rich-coloured, well-formed blaze, rare body colour, be well buttoned, of nice size, and in lovely condition. Because he has one or two black stripes on his blaze this is surely not sufficient to disqualify him from even winning, providing, of course, there is nothing else in the class to beat him in all the points? The fact is, it is no easy matter very often for a judge to give his decision, as he must of necessity judge a bird "all round." But there are many of us, I am afraid, so conceited as to imagine that we could have done the job a great deal better. Personally, I always endeavour as far as possible to fall in with the judge's opinion and to examine the bird from what I consider may be his standpoint, and if this plan were more generally adopted, we should hear much less than we do about the "disappointed exhibitor."

J. C. WILMOT.

THE CAGE BIRD UNION AND CLASHING OF SHOWS.

SIR,—Kindly allow me a small space in reply to T. Keegan. I was never more surprised than to hear him say, "We should be better off without the C.B.U." When, at the annual meeting in February of the Bristol Cage Bird Society, it was proposed to withdraw from the C.B.U., he was the very man who spoke against it. He says, also, that members of a non-affiliated society can show where they like. My word—Mr. Keegan can turn like the wind! Now, Mr. Editor, the reason for all this chatter is because the Bristol Cage Bird Society clashes with Weston-super-Maro Fanciers' Society. I believe it came about in this way: The secretary of the B.C.B.S. wrote to the secretary of the C.B.U. and told him the dates that had been selected. The latter wrote saying that this particular date had been fixed upon by another society in the same district, and asked for further dates, which were given as October 22nd and 23rd. Mind you, the B.C.B.S. knew nothing of the W.-S.-M. date. After waiting some little time, the secretary of the C.B.U. wrote to the B.C.B.S. confirming the dates selected. The secretary of the B.C.B.S. then wrote to CAGE BIRDS and had the dates put in the "Show Dates Fixed" column. No announcement from the Weston-super-Mare secretary was to be seen. When he saw the dates fixed on by the B.C.B.S., however, he wrote to the secretary of the C.B.U. explaining that he had given the same dates to another society in the same district. He had a reply to the effect that the secretary had made a mistake, and that the Weston Society's date being chosen first, they must make arrangements with the Bristol Cage Birds Society and get them to alter their dates, which they absolutely refused to do. They said the W.-S.-M. Show wouldn't hurt them; they would clash. The excuse was that arrangements had been made with the printer. Could they say what printing was put in hand? I want to know what about Weston-superMare? They will get hurt, as theirs is only a small show. I think if Weston-super-Mare was an old-established society, holding a large show, instead of giving a few classes, the Bristol C.B.S. would take particular care that they should not clash. I don't blame the C.B.U. in the first place, but I blame the secretary of same for not being more particular in confirming dates. Both societies are affiliated to the C.B.U. ONE WHO KNOWS.

SIR,—I think it is quite time the C.B.U. were asked to prove what good they have done for the Fancy, and if they cannot prove any good to their credit, surely societies will ignore them. Your correspondent "Fair Play" says if societies have not the common-sense to keep from affiliating, they should stand by their rules. Let "Fair Play" remember, one fool makes many. I do not think one society in every ten, when it affiliates with the C.B.U., does so because it is in favour of same; far from it. I think it does so because the Fancy at the present time seems to be in such a tangled mess, with affiliated and non-affiliated societies, that between the two it is impossible to know where we are. I always consider the backbone of every Fancy is the working man, and the average working man is unable to send his birds any great distance on account of the enormously high railway rates. He has therefore to content himself with shows within his reach. Suppose he is a member of an affiliated society, then the great and mighty C.B.U. step in, and declare that this fancier shall only send his birds to such shows as are affiliated. Therefore, to gain his entire freedom he must sever his connection with his local society. Is it just, is it English, to be thus dictated to? It seems to knock the heart out of the Fancy. I have never seen where the C.B.U. have even tried to persuade the railway companies to reduce the rates, or done anything else beneficial to the Fancy. If they offered cups or trophies of some description to be competed for by affiliated societies, it might be some trifling inducement, but I see no excuse or reason for their existence at all. We can surely manage our own affairs without the interference of the C.B.U. I notice in your valuable paper this week an appeal from a society in distress (the Camelon C.B.A.). I am always sorry to see this, but I fear there will be more societies in the same fix. Societies will suffer from loss of members. However, seeing the large balance to the credit of the C.B.U., and thinking it might be overlooked by them, I have mutilated my paper to the extent of cutting out this appeal, and am forwarding the cutting to the secretary of the C.B.U., hoping he may bring the matter before his committee. They may like to be charitable, and I feel quite sure that out of all the societies who have subscribed to the C.B.U. balance, not one would dislike to see a small item thus spent.

S. A. DICKEN.

CURING WASP GRUB, GENTLES ETC., FOR WINTER USE.

SIR,—I have been much interested in the article by Mr. J. Jeffrey upon the Nightingale, as it gives evidence of considerable careful and original research respecting the natural diet, and also the mode of living in confinement. Perhaps I may be allowed to add that it would give me pleasure if Mr. Jeffrey (or someone else) would just state how the wasp grub, beetles, gentles, and ant eggs may be safely cured in summer, so as to be kept good when stored for use during autumn, winter, and early part of spring.

[A request for similar information also reaches us from Mr. W. H. Turner.—EDITOR.]

"SWEATING" THE YOUNG, AND ITS CAUSES.

SIR,—I picked my CAGE BIRDS up this morning and was reading the notes of "Straight 'Un" when I was struck by one passage which seemed to aim straight at me. It was the one about sweating hens. Now, I have kept repeating my belief that there are none, but being only a novice with four years' experience (albeit four good years as regards young birds) I did not think myself capable of confuting old fanciers. But here I am at last. Well, perhaps some brother fancier may also take my standpoint, make investigations and give us the results. I once read a book which told me that a bird's skin was made in such a way that for a bird to perspire was utterly impossible; please notice that my firm belief is that the trouble is due to nesting, diarrhœa. I do not mean by this, however, that the hen is troubled with it. We find that sweating takes places during the first seven days after the young hatch. Every fancier knows that the mother for the first few days removes the droppings from the nest. Well, suppose those droppings are too thin for her to remove, what is the consequence? With the mother keeping the young warm, the unremoved excreta becomes sticky, and gets all over the nest. The mother bird does not seem to know what is wrong, but keeps on trying to dry the youngsters off, like she does when they hatch, and so naturally makes things worse. So much for the subject itself. Perhaps I may set the ball rolling by trying to give a few of my own ideas as to the causes of it. First of all I will say that I have 25 young birds now on the sticks, with 23 feeding themselves; these are from 10 hens and five cocks. I have had no sweating hens this time yet. (1) Giving dandelion. I believe dandelion a good thing to give to the birds when they are being paired up, at the rate of three or four small leaves per cage. After first egg I give no more all that season. Of course, during the moult and after, for as long as possible, I give shepherd's purse and rat's tails (Plantain) liberally. Whoever heard of a wild bird feeding its young with dandelion? (2) Feeding at the wrong time of the day. I believe the food should be fresh morning and night; not given about 11 o'clock, or 3 o'clock, and left till the same time next day. (3) Making egg-food too wet. It should be crumbly not sticky. (4) Neglecting small things, such as tonics in the drinking-water. I vary them myself; chemical food, dandelion juice, essence of gentian, etc. (5) Leaving the cage with the droppings in which accumulated during sitting. They should be lifted out with a card, and so give the birds a clean cage. (6) Forgetting insect powder when putting off and thereby breeding red mite. (7) Keeping on filling up the seed hoppers, instead of ridding their contents once a week. (8) Not washing out the food pots and drinkers often enough, which leaves them sour and slimy. I believe if I tried hard I could write out a bit longer list, but I do not want tearing to bits just yet. Perhaps, however, older fanciers will bear with this, my first effort, so I remain, A Young Novice—

DURHAM'S RECORD LINNET-SINGING CONTEST.

SIR,—I notice in your isue of May 23rd a report of a Linnet singing contest held at Gilesgate, Durham, when sixty-two birds were entered. The reporter states that this is the largest entry ever known in the county of Durham. I beg to say that this is not correct, for in 1895 there was a contest held at the "Lord Clyde," in Gateshead, when there were a hundred and twenty-four birds entered! It took two days to get through them! A bird called "The Talking Doll," belonging to J. Maddison, won first and second.

The Martin's Revenge.

A saucy cock Sparrow had got into a Martin's nest whilst he was abroad. When he returned the Sparrow put his head out of the hole and pecked at the Martin with open bill as he attempted to enter. The poor Martin was sadly provoked at this injustice, but was unable by his own strength to right himself. So he flew away and gathered a number of his companions, who all came with a bit of clay in their bills, with which they plastered up the hole of the nest and kept the Sparrow a prisoner. The Sparrow died miserably for want of food and air.—Sent by Emily Carter (aged 12), 19, Edward Street, Stoke-on-Trent.

*Cockatoo with a History.

An Indian Mutiny veteran has died at Leith Hall, Aberdeenshire. It was a cockatoo—part of the loot of a fortified place in the hands of the rebels. Colonel Leith Hay, of the 93rd, took charge of the bird, and it was carried through the stirring time of the mutiny, on one occasion the head of its carrier being knocked off by a shell. It is said the bird on that occasion was guilty of much Hindustani profanity. The bird was brought home by the late Colonel, and has during the past half-century occupied a favoured corner in Leith Hall.—Taken from the "Glasgow Weekly Herald," by Wm. Jamieson (15), 621, Dumbarton Road, Partick, by Glasgow.

*Our Caged and Wild Pets.

My brother has an outdoor aviary in the garden, in which he keeps Canaries. Many a time this winter he has had to break the ice in their drinking vessels before they could get any water. The other day when he went to feed his birds he found a dead Robin, which had died because of the frosty weather, or very likely had been killed by some cruel cat which had caught it when it was feeding from the wash-tub. We have all kinds of birds, such as the Thrush, Blackbird, Linnet, Greenfinch, etc., in our neighbourhood, and many of these come to feed from the wash-tub when the ground is covered with snow.—Sent by Doris Tilley (aged 14), 84, Station Road, Gorsty Hill, near Halesowen.

I have had several near shaves of success in past seasons, but this year victory has crowned my efforts (1898), or rather those of my Pekins. Last year we got as far as a completed nest; this year we have gone two better—eggs and young.

My Pekins began operations early in May, by building a beautiful little nest of roots and fibre, lined with horse-hair, in a box tree. The nest is really a work of art, and very cunningly hidden. The hen laid three eggs—very large for the size of the bird, and a bluish white in colour, heavily blotched with chocolate at the big end.

The parents take it turn in turn to sit; the hen takes the day watch and the cock relieves her at about 6 p.m. The time of incubation was about fourteen days. On looking into the nest very casually as I passed, I was delighted to see two youngsters and an addled egg. This disappeared in about three days, but whether eaten or broken, I can't say.

Feeding the Young.

At first the youngsters were fed from the beak. I saw the whole operation through a knot hole close to the nest. The old birds do not carry out the excreta, but eat it. After a few days they began to feed on meal-worms, and "clocks," too, which, however, they first killed; this did not fortunately prove "too stimulating" as the youngsters evidenced by their hearty enjoyment of them.

Of course, I had the good sense and taste not to go poking about the nest. I did all observations through a knot-hole, where I could see all, myself unseen. To-day (June 12th), the young have flown. They are queer little things—dark slate colour all over, with hardly a trace of eye-markings, no tails, a tiny yellow edging on the big wing feathers, short legs and horn-coloured beaks.

When just hatched (I forgot to say), they were perfectly naked. At about the eighth day they got a sort of bluish colour where the feathers were coming through, and when next I saw them they were nearly full-feathered. I say pink and naked when hatched, for this reason, that in the account of hatching in the Report of the U.K.F.C.B.S., the young were spoken of as covered with a hairy sort of fluff, which makes me think that the whole account was apocryphal. Besides, the extraordinary things the old birds were asked to feed on are wonderful. What would they give the young? I quote the writer—"Egg? No! Biscuit? No! Bread and Milk? No! Crushed Hemp Seed? No! Meal-worms cut up? Yes!" I wonder what those youngsters did while these experiments were being tried?

There is such a scolding now each time I go into the aviary to feed, and it is quite amusing to see how the old birds will wait about, with their beaks full of meal-worms, until I am gone, lest I should know where their precious babies are hidden.

A Word of Caution.

I might give a word of caution. In sending Pekin Robins on a journey, never forget to put a sponge soaked in water in the pot or the birds will arrive in a moribund condition, and will the next day shuffle off this mortal coil, if they do not do so the same night.

Since writing the above, the Pekins have built another nest high up in an Elder, and have laid three more eggs; but, horrible to relate, in spite of the Regulations of the W.R.C.C., I have taken the nest of eggs, as I have a Virginian Nightingale sitting in the same aviary, due to hatch, and I cannot afford to rear both; so the poor Pekins must go to the wall, as they have already done their duty.

Acclimatizing Pekin Robins.

I have often thought that it would be delightfully easy to acclimatize Pekin Robins. The only difficulty is, that you want a big walled garden and the absence of cats. Given these two requisites, I am sure that Pekins could soon be added to our native birds.

I should keep them for a few weeks in a wire enclosure with some shrubbery. Then I should liberate them, but still continue to feed in the accustomed place. I am confident that the Pekins will not go far afield, and if they are liberated about May or June, you would soon (unless cats are introduced) find plenty of nests full of little Pekin Robins. It is not a very costly experiment. Will not some one with a sequestered garden try the experiment?

Chapter XIII.—My Indigo Buntings

By the Creoles of Louisiana this pretty little bird is known as the Petit Papa-Bleu. It is a migratory bird, and arrives in the Southern States from the direction of Mexico, with the Painted Finch or Nonpareil. They are taken in great numbers by means of traps. It is not a forest bird, but prefers the outskirts of woods, the little thickets along the fields, and is frequently perched on a fence or on some conspicuous bough, whence it utters its really pretty song. The female skulks in the brushwood, where her sober coat renders her still more inconspicuous.

The Indigo Finch is a short and stumpy figure of a bird—what Mr. Poyser would have called "stocky," and though not so gorgeous as the Nonpareil, he has not the latter's vile temper. Indeed, he will agree well with his kind, a thing which the Nonpareil utterly refuses to do; his motto seems to be, "The World for One Nonpareil," and he certainly acts up to it.

A Mistake at the Christening.

I never could understand where the Indigo got his name, as it is quite a misnomer. The colour is not indigo but azure. The cock Indigo only assumes his gorgeous livery as spring advances. During the autumn and winter months he is a sober little gentleman in a drab suit with just a mere suspicion of blue facings. The hen remains the same dowdy little thing all the year round. I have at present ten adult pairs of Indigos in a large garden aviary, which I call "The Wilderness." It is full of shrubs and bushes and long rank grass knee deep, interspersed with thorns and nettles of gigantic proportions—an ideal place from an Indigo Finch's point of view.

In this aviary they have now been for ten years; but till the present season, 1906, they have never made any attempt at nesting, although the Nonpareils gave them a lead last year. One day in the spring of this year, I saw Mrs. Indigo carrying about some bents in her beak—a sure sign of nesting to come. She was very "tickle" about a site, as we say up here, and began on several, but finally abandoned them for reasons best known to herself.

At last, however, she found a site to her liking at the very top of a tall shrub. The nest was composed of the very slenderest material, and was no stronger than a Whitethroat's. It was not built on a solid foundation on some convenient fork, but suspended by the strands from the branches, like a small Oriole's nest. So light and utterly flimsy was the whole affair that I was in despair. I felt certain it could not stand any real work.

Just as it was finished and ready, as I thought, I went to London for the inside of a week, and on my return I found that an egg had been laid, presumably that day. I looked the next morning for No. 2, but it was not there, and I feared that she would lay no more. However, I waited in patience, and the next day there was a second egg, and a third followed, and then Mrs. Indigo settled down to her duties.

HINTS ON THE REARING OF YOUNG BIRDS.

By W. STAFFORD (Secretary of the Stockport B.F.A.)

A Paper read before the Stockport B.F.A. on May 7th.

In what I am about to say there will be nothing fresh—simply my own method of feeding and rearing young birds. In trying to rear young successfully, the speaker said that first of all they should pay attention to condition, as it was unfair to expect birds to fulfil their nesting duties unless they were in a proper condition to do so. One of the chief things in seeking to secure good condition was fresh air. Always let the birds have fresh air in all weathers, except cold, damp days, said the speaker; then, of all times, you must be very careful. Clean water every day was absolutely necessary.

Necessary Seed and Sand.

He liked to leave his birds in good, roomy flight cages until the end of February, all the time feeding them on simple diet—plain seed and fresh water every day. Occasionally he gave a little mixed seed, viz., maw, niger, rape, linseed, and on very cold days a little extra hemp, as he thought this helped to keep up the warmth of the body. He also gave a little boiled carrot or ripe apple now and again. Good sand and cuttlefish were necessary, as he thought that in times past when he had neglected to supply grit, it had been the cause of a little illness among his birds.

He advised fanciers not to forget the bath on nice days. Whilst he liked to get the cock bird into the best condition, he did not forget the hens. His reason for this was that if the cock bird were ready first, the chances were he would be more likely to obtain full eggs.

Preparations for Breeding.

He preferred to transfer his birds from the flight cage into the breeding cage early in March; this gave him time to feed them up ready for pairing. His method of feeding was to give egg-food twice a week during March, and a little green food, but he cautioned his hearers, when giving the latter, to be careful of frost. He also gave a little mixed seed on the days when he did not give egg-food. When you put birds into the breeding cage, continued the speaker, see to their beaks and nails, and trim them if necessary; also trim round the vents of those that are heavily-feathered on that part of their bodies.

The end of March was quite soon enough for pairing up the birds, he thought, but if a pair of birds were ready sooner, he would let them go. He advised having a good, firm perch, level with the nest, whilst the birds were pairing. For nesting material fanciers should use what they found to be the best; he himself was quite satisfied with the usual nest-bag.

He took the eggs away; when he took away the third egg he put dummies in the nest, and at night took them out and replaced the proper eggs in the nest. He gave the nest a good dusting with insect powder, taking care to look for and remove at once any sharp or hard substance that he might find in the nest. He also lowered the perch when the hen was sitting; a bird, he said, generally jumped off the nest on to the highest place, and if a perch were higher than the nest one might expect to find an egg or a young bird on the floor at times. By having the perch lower, one would find that the hen would usually hop on to the edge of the nest, and the chances were that the young or eggs would drop into the nest instead of on to the cage bottom.

It was a good plan to put a ticket on the cage stating when the hen was set and the eggs due to hatch, as it was so easy to forget an odd nest or two unless something of this kind were done.

Careful Attention to the Hen Necessary

Give the hen plain seed whilst she is sitting, continued the lecturer, and dust the nest again the day before hatching takes place. Also clean the cage out, and if very dry weather at the time, dip the eggs into warm water. Give her a bath, also, on the day before the hatching takes place, and if she uses it (or if the weather has been wet) you will have no occasion to moisten the eggs. Also give the hen a little egg-food ready for breeding the young with. I make my egg-food with hard-boiled egg, home-made bread, a pinch of salt, a teaspoonful of fine sugar, and a little Spratt's Food. I have used biscuits, but I don't care for them, and would sooner use home-made bread.

Do not disturb your birds if you can help it; go about quietly. Should a bird leave her eggs, put them under some other hen if possible, even if they seem cold, for they may not be spoiled. I remember quite well going into my room one day and finding a hen dead in the nest. I transferred the eggs to another nest, and got a couple of youngsters from the same.

Feed on egg-food only for the first day; give hemp seed on the second day, and then start giving green food on the third day. I am of the opinion that I get better birds when they are fed well with egg-food, but if a hen fancies green food then I give her green stuff, and let her have her own way. I have also used groats. I generally give hemp seed whole, as it causes the hen to stay off the nest a little longer, thus letting the young have a little more air than they would otherwise have.

In the Early Stages.

If you find a young bird on the cage-bottom, breathe on it, and if it shows signs of life put it in the nest again, and it will be alright in a short time. Just have a look in the nest when the hen is off, and if the young appear fluffy don't interfere with them. Should you find them limp and unable to hold up their little heads, then chew up some food and give them a little in their beak from the point of a stick; but mind you have not been smoking just previously. Or if the hen is by herself, you might try how she fares or acts by putting the cock bird in the cage; some cocks are good feeders. Hand-feeding is a tiresome job, but is sometimes a great help.

For green food I prefer chickweed; I also give dandelion, watercress, and lettuce. A good way to keep green food sweet is to wash it well when gathered, and then, instead of keeping it in water, wrap it in a damp cloth. One of the best ways of getting a hen off the nest early in the morning is to place a sprig of green-food through the wires of the cage overnight, and leave one end of it in the drinking water; you will probably find it eaten up when you go to look at the birds.

Removing the Young.

When the young leave the nest, you must look out for the "plucking" evil, and as soon as you see this you must transfer them to a nursery cage. The cage I used last season is wired on one side, about 2in. deep for feeding purposes; the remaining portion of this side is all wood. This stops the birds from being plucked and the young from climbing. The other three sides are wired all round. This cage answered the purpose very well for me last season. Whilst the young are in the nursery cage see that they have daily fresh egg-food, and hemp seed crushed. I always leave some water for them. A little milk sop is good, and I sprinkle some maw seed on it. Clean the cage out often, and throw the stale food away. Should any of the young keep crying out for food, try to feed them with a stick; or you might put them back with the mother for a short time, and watch if she feeds them; if she does, then take them away again after a little while.

When you see the young picking about in the nursery cage and seeming to get their own fill, you can transfer them to a flight cage. Keep on with the egg-food and crushed hemp, and also give crushed Canary seed, gradually reducing the egg-food. By the time the birds are six weeks old they should be on hard seed. Even then a little egg-food occasionally will do no harm.

Special Treatment.

For sweating hens, the speaker said he tried the effect of giving tasty bits. In bad cases he gave a little Epsom salts in the water. Egg-binding, he thought, was a weakness; he therefore refrained from giving anything that would relax the hen. He gave her rather something that would strengthen her, and also a little maw seed, putting a little warm oil on the vent.

Inflammation, he thought, was due to damp, or to their having cold, wet days. For this he used quinella; he also slightly moistened the bird with turpentine. For diarrhœa he used prepared chalk and diarrhœa mixture. He had also used catechu.

An interesting discussion followed, in which Messrs. Dickenson, Massey, Oldham, Garner, Dean, and others took part. The meeting terminated with a vote of thanks to Mr. Stafford, to which he suitably replied.

The Evolution of the Canary.

By GEORGE PETERS.

A Lecture delivered before the Members and friends of the Coventry O.S. on April 15th.

There is little difficulty in tracing the descent of the Canary to a certain period some 400 years back. To attempt to go back further would be tantamount to going into the question of the origin of all species of birds; so I shall content myself by speaking of its history from the early part of the sixteenth century, which will be sufficient for our purposes.

Domestication of the Canary, with changed environment, has brought about a variation in its colour and shape. It is described by Hernandes, who died in 1587, as "a bird wholly yellow except the end of its wings." But one can hardly believe that the description is a general one of Canaries at that time; it is useful, however, as evidence of the change which was taking place in the colour of the birds. The chief efforts of the time seem to have been with a view to producing songsters. In 1677 (90 years later) it was recorded that "The Canaries in England were generally imported from Germany and were of a green colour." I have no doubt that variation in colour had shown itself by this time and that the Germans were taking advantage of it.

The Origin of the Lizard Canary.

But it seems to have been left to other nations to seize, as it were, on any variation in form or shape and fix it so far as was possible. This would result from the bearing on the birds of the occupations of the Canary breeders. Thus, the Spitalfield's weavers and French clockmakers would soon find out that the rattle and clatter of their looms and the rasping of files, etc., were detrimental to the training of Canaries for song alone, and would therefore devote their thoughts to producing birds of colour, markings, etc.

"There were two species of Canaries, one a native of Madeira and the other of the Canary Islands." This statement was confirmed by Dr. Heinekin who, in his description leads one to believe that the Canary from Madeira differed somewhat from the other in that it was of a less level colour and showed spangling. Taking this for granted, we have the origin of the Lizard and London Fancy tyes of Canary. These Canaries were taken up by the weavers and clockmakers, the Lizard Canary being the more robust and beautiful of the two, and being more nearly like the original stock has survived and become an established variety. The London Fancy Canary, on the other hand, has become nearly extinct.

The Rise of the Different Varieties.

The Coventry weavers and watchmakers were influenced by similar conditions in the choice of a variety, and they appear to have gone in for what are now the Norwich, Crest, and Cinnamon types. Without a doubt they made their mark in those days. Although at the present time there are not so very many Canaries bred in Coventry, and although we do not hold the same foremost position as in the past, owing mainly to the changed conditions in the manufacture of ribbons and watches, there are still quite a number of good birds bred from time to time, as you are aware.

We have now different Fancy types well established. They are known as Belgian, Scotch, Border, and London Fancies, Crested, Yorkshire, Norwich, Lancashire, and Dutch Frill varieties.

Breeding New Types of Canaries.

There are great possibilities even now of establishing new types if only variation is taken advantage of as it has been in the past. One of our members tells me he had a Canary with fourteen feathers in its tail, and you know the usual number is twelve. Now, if this variation had been taken advantage of he might have been on the high road to establishing a "Fantail" variety of Canary.

Be that as it may; one can only notice the remarks of fanciers on the appearance of those birds which were in the course of evolution. I had a try at producing a new variety in the way of markings (a green body with a clear Crest). I paired a Lizard to a clear-capped Crestbred and then a clear-capped young one to a clear-Crested. I bred several with clear Caps and a clear Crest with a variegated body; but the crest was not large, and I thought the change in markings was no improvement on a clear body dark Crest, and so gave up the experiment.

When purchasing a Crest-bred from a noted breeder, and looking at his stock, I noticed a Crested bird that had a habit of holding its head on one side as though to show off his crest. I remarked on this peculiarity to the owner and he said it was bred from some of his best birds. Some two years afterwards, I bred one which was just the same. Now if that variation had been seized on by me I might by now have bred a variety that looked one way and hopped another.

I only mention these cases that are well within our own knowledge and experience in order to confirm my statement that variations in Canaries have not ceased. That all the various types of Canaries should have evolved from a small green bird, first prized as a songster, seems incredible, but if it were not known to be so, the great difficulty there is even now of breeding to the ideal type and the remarkable reversion to the foundation of all varieties that takes place on pairing up two of different types, extremely varying in shape, would prove it to the most sceptical mind.

The Popular Crested Variety.

As all varieties have been established in the same way, I only propose to deal with the Crested Canary which, I think, with all due respect to the opinions of admirers of other varieties, the most remarkable and at the same time most difficult to breed. And this, notwithstanding the probability of its being the first variation in form to be seized on by breeders. That it should be so popular is natural, even if we had not the authority of Bechstein, who says that a "Crested was most admired." A "daisy-crested," or "top-knotted" bird suddenly appearing would not require a fancier with a trained eye to see to admire it and cogitate on the possibility of breeding it.

Among the German Canaries now brought to this country as songsters, we frequently see "top-knotted" or "tufted" ones. That they have not been bred of crested properties must be evident to anyone, as they are too far removed from the present-day Crested show birds. The breeding of a "top-knotted" Canary doubtless caused a sensation among the breeders of the time, and if, as is not at all unlikely, someone else bred one, the opportunity of perpetuating the variety was doubly great.

This having been done, for a time Crested and Crestbred would be paired together, and one shudders to think of the amount of in-breeding that must have taken place until such times when fresh blood was required. There probably being no other Crested blood obtainable, a Plainhead would have to be used, when another surprise would doubtless have awaited the breeder. He would find that a young one was bred with a better-shaped crest than the old ones hand. And so after many trials it was seen that the way to breed good Crests was (and it still is) to select and pair Crest to Crest-bred. This has resulted in the present-day show-birds —a splendid variety.

The Drawback of the Crest.

But along with this marvellous success there is one great affliction, that of blindness, from which this variety suffers. How to avoid this is a problem that has never been satisfactorily solved. Some say that in-breeding causes it, but if that were so the London Fancy would be quite blind long before it becomes extinct, and the Lizard would be groping his way about the cage. Others say that wealth of feather is the cause of this blindness; but that, I think, mostly causes physical weakness, and if this kind of weakness alone affected the sight, some of the Belgian Canaries would want glasses.

Again, others assert that the blindness is caused by the creasted feathers irritating the eye; but this can only be an accidental cause, as Crestbreds suffer from blindness more than Plainheads of other varieties. Neither can it be for lack of using their eyes, for they feed and live just as others do.

My birds have been troubled with this affliction, and it has resulted in a serious loss to me, as, of course, to all other breeders of variety. Strange to say it is always the best birds that go blind. Why? My own theory is that it is a mental weakness that causes it more than a physical one.

The Cause and Cure of Blindness.

Crest-breds are less afflicted in this respect than Crests, and birds with badly-formed crests seldom, if ever, go blind, except by accident. The skin carries the feather, and, conforming as it does to the shape of the skull, it follows that a certain form of head is absolutely necessary if there is to be a well-centred and well-radiated crest. The description of such a head is given as "dome-skulled" or "cushion-shaped." Now, on examining, both externally and internally, the head of a good-crested bird, one finds a "domed" head, it is true, but also a depression slightly concave in the centre, which becomes thickened and is convex on the inside, thus giving less room for the brain. You will see by the skulls of the Crests and Crestbreds that I have here just what I mean.

Now, in selecting for breeding purposes, the best Crests and Crestbreds with the centre in exactly the same spot, neither more forward from, nor nearer to the back, it follows that this peculiarity in the shape of the skull is fixed and becomes hereditary, in common with other desirable points; but this particular part of the skull to which I have referred becomes gradually thicker and more convex on the inside, thus giving less and less room for the brain. It is thus, to my mind, that the optic nerves are in some way affected, causing blindness in apparently strong and healthy birds.

The only way to counteract this distressing tendency is to immediately introduce new blood. This will cause more or less reversion, but it will effectually counteract the predisposition to blindness. The Crest of to-day has been evolved by great care in selection, by extreme perseverance, and by much "in-and-in-breeding"; but Nature resents the last of these means with no uncertainty, and we are forced over and over again back to the first selection.

Let me say before closing that, notwithstanding the great changes brought about by man in the course of the cultivation of the Canary family, the Goldfinch, I consider, has greater possibilities if only it be taken up and treated in the same way as the Canary has been treated. After various questions had been asked and replied to, a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Peters, proposed by the Chairman, Mr. T. Gilbert, brought the meeting to a close.

CORRECTION.

It having come to our knowledge that a great number of fanciers have an idea that is a paste or liquid compound, we wish to point out that this is not so. "Woodland Bird Milk" is in a Dry Powder form, and if kept in a cool dry place it will keep sweet for 6 to 9 months. It is not a food that birds will not touch, for they eat it readily, either in its dry state, mixed with egg, or slightly moistened.

It is not necessary to use eggs with the food as it contains sufficient nourishment in itself. If it is used with eggs however it will mix readily, making a cooling instead of an overheating food.

AN EASY WAY TO SECURE REMOVABLE WOOD FRONTS.

Sent by A. J. Lucas, 33, Little Park Street, Coventry.

Enclosed is a sketch showing what will be found to be an inexpensive way of fixing wood-framed cage-fronts. The idea is to use three ordinary wire staples, such as are used for fixing wire netting with. Put two in the cage-front, ½ in. apart, and one in the cage bottom. Then get an ordinary nail, or a bit of wire, and push it through them; this makes a very secure fixture. At the same time it is a very easy matter to take the fronts in and out. The fastening at the top is the usual projecting wire.—A. J. Lucas.

EGG-SAVING DEVICE FOR MULING PAIRS.

Sent by E. Harrison, 14, Frisby's Buildings, Stamford, Lincs.

As there is difficulty with the eggs of muling pairs owing sometimes to the Finches being so mischievous and sometimes to egg-eating hens, I am sending the following device which should prove useful. Get half a cocoanut shell and line it with cow-hair, or something similar. Then cut a piece of cardboard to fit inside the shell when lined, so as to leave a space underneath large enough for the egg to fall into. Cut a hole in the centre to let the egg pass through, and cover the cardboard that is left with cow-hair, pressing it into the lined shell. It will then be found to form a comfortable nest, leaving the eggs quite safe. When setting the hen, remove the cardboard and put a piece of cow-hair in the bottom of the nest to make it a nice depth for the hen to sit in. The sketch will, I think, explain the idea.—E. Winter Rape.

Winter rape is a seed about double the size of the last, and of a darker or blackish colour. It is of the same shape and general type as the last, differing in outward appearance—in size and colour. It differs also quite as much in flavour, for when a little is chewed or held on the tongue it is of a hot, biting nature, sometimes stinging the tongue almost as much as mustard seed.

Although some fanciers believe in using it in a small way as a change, its value from a cage-bird fancier's point of view may be written down as nil. A few grains now and again may be harmless enough, but for Canaries most people prefer to give it a wide berth. This is more particularly the case when there are young ones about. The only occasions when one might well be tempted to make use of it would be during a spell of great cold, when he might scatter a few grains on the floor, or for the purpose of adding a small proportion to the mixture for British Finches, or as an addition to the diet of a mixed collection kept in a large outdoor aviary.

Some "Unscrupulous" Mixtures.

A variety known as English rape is, I believe, nothing more nor less than Charlock, or Wild Mustard. Judging it by its flavour, the latter term is very descriptive. All that has been said against the use of Winter rape might be repeated here with emphasis. On general principles the fancier will be acting most wisely if he leaves it severely alone.

The similarity of the seed of rape, cabbages, turnips, and many other plants affords vast opportunities to the unscrupulous for mixing up old stocks of vegetable seeds which would be otherwise unsaleable, and working them off as rape. The fancier should, therefore, always make a point of tasting any sample of rape submitted to him before purchasing. He will very often be able to detect a mixture almost immediately by the different flavours he will get out of a single small pinch of seed, which will materially help him to appreciate the truth of the assertion of a bird-keeper, who many years ago planted a small quantity of "rape seed" in his garden, from which, if my memory serves me well, about a score of different species of plants were obtained.

Hemp Seed.

Although sometimes very much abused hemp is without a doubt one of the most generally useful and valuable seeds in the bird-keeper's larder. For Canaries it should be given sparingly during the winter months and after the breeding season is over, and should always be given separately for the sake of economy. If added to the usual seed mixture the birds usually throw out the other seeds to get at the hemp, thus causing a terrible waste, which is avoided by giving the hemp separately. The usual exceptions when it may be used with greater freedom are when the birds are kept in cold rooms, in outdoor aviaries, flying loose in rooms, and during the winter months. In short, at any time when an oily, heat-producing food is required, or the birds are kept in such circumstances as render such a food harmless.

In the rearing of Canaries and Mules it should be given in unlimited quantities after the young are a week or ten days old. Many hens will then feed the young almost entirely upon it, and no young will be found to thrive better than those which are being fed liberally upon this seed. It should, however, be withheld altogether whilst hens are sitting, particularly in cases where the cock is allowed to remain with the hen, as it is apt to stimulate him too much and cause him to drag the hen off the nest and try to drive her to begin nesting afresh before the first clutch of eggs is hatched.

For birds in large aviaries it may also be used freely with advantage, and should form a regular item in the food of all our British Finches. In cases of shy feeders amongst Greypates and newly-caught Finches, diet consisting mainly of hemp is one of the surest means of saving them, whilst for Goldfinches generally it should always form a fairly large proportion of their regular diet. This latter may very probably be taken exception to by many, but, all the same, many others hold to and swear by it.

As an occasional treat for all kinds of Larks, and all the hardier soft-bills, especially those of the Thrush and Tit tribes, it is also invaluable.

Crushed hemp is in all respects the same as that mentioned above, except in the cases of soft-bills, Greypates, young birds, and when hens have a very large brood to rear, when it may be lightly cracked. Crushing is of no advantage, but rather the reverse, as it exposes the oily kernal and causes the seeds to go rancid much quicker.

Niger or Inga.

Niger and Inga are different terms for one and the same seed. Some people even call it Niga. It is of a shiny-black colour, ranging from a jet black to a rusty black, about the same length as carraway seed, but somewhat wedge-shaped, and with a smooth surface. The kernal is white, and the whole is so full of a limpid oil, that in India (where the plant is largely cultivated for the sake of its oil) the oil is said to be extracted and largely used for culinary and lighting purposes. The yield of oil obtained from the seed is said to be as high as thirty-five per cent. It is doubtless this excessive quantity of oil in the seed which, when the seed is properly used, gives it its chief value, and is also accountable for its relaxing properties when given in too large quantities.

Whilst of immense value for use in particular circumstances, it cannot be too strongly impressed upon the novice that it is always most unsuitable for a regular item in the diet of cage birds, and it should never figure largely in a mixture given to any species of bird. Whenever it does do so, that mixture should invariably be set apart for occasional use only, by way of giving the birds a temporary change, and never used as a regular food.

It will very often be found most useful in helping to tempt newly-caught British birds which refuse to eat, and a small amount of this will often stimulate them and give them a zest for more and for variety.

Its Medicinal Value.

Then, almost any seed-eater that is fond of this seed will be greatly benefited by a dose—not a bad term this for a seed, which should in reality be used more in the sense of a medicinal remedy than as an actual food—of half a teaspoonful of this seed. This will be especially noticeable in the case of birds that have gone dull simply through an attack of constipation from feeding too liberally on constipating seeds. If the seed that has set up the trouble is strictly limited in quantity for a day, and half a teaspoonful of Niger given in its place, the effect will be all that could be desired, and the birds stimulated at the same time.

This method of correcting errors of diet by simple antidotes, and also the practice of treating the simplest ailments by a judicious management of the food supply is one that every bird-keeper should cultivate and become a master of.

Its advantages and healthfulness are not to be compared with the habit of pouring down a bird's throat for every simple ailment drugs and nostrums, of which one knows practically nothing respecting their effect upon the feathered creation—a point which is too often overlooked. The effect of any particular drug upon a bird may differ in the most striking manner from its effect upon the human race, or the animal kingdom as represented by the mammalia.

The Great Virtue of Inga.

By far the greatest virtue of Inga from a fanciers's point of view is its undoubted power, when used in the right way, to prevent egg-binding in the early nesting arrangements of Canaries. Of course it is equally serviceable in later nests, but the earlier nests were mentioned because egg-binding is far more common than it is later in the season, for the reason that, when the birds are going to nest the second time, all the conditions—weather, temperature, etc.—are more generally favourable to egg-laying, and as a rule only hens that are of a weakly constitution, or very much run down, will be troubled with egg-binding.

If a pinch of Inga is given to the hens twice a week all through the winter season, and then, when they are mated up, a few grains daily until the eggs are laid, egg-binding will be almost entirely unknown.

But do not overdo it. There are two points where the average fancier generally goes wrong. First, in a proper estimation of the quantity represented by the indefinite term of "a pinch." To many a teaspoonful is but a pinch, and in most cases the birds get a good deal too much, even when the owner thinks he is rigidly adhering to the proper quantity. A teaspoonful would represent about four times the quantity that is here meant by a pinch, so that if one gives a fair teaspoonful of the seed to each four hens twice a week during the winter they will not go wrong. In the second place, in prescribing a few grains to be given daily after the birds are mated until the eggs are laid, we assume that the birds are not going to be mated until ready to set about nesting almost at once, so that the eggs will nearly always be laid within a fortnight from the time of being mated.

Now, if the birds are put together too soon it is no uncommon thing for a month to elapse before the eggs are laid, and this is certainly longer than allows of Inga being given every day. In such a case it will be far better to give it only on alternate days. In advising "a few grains" to be given, about half the above quantity described as a pinch is intended, or not more than a sixth part of a teaspoonful.

We have gone into detail about this question of quantities here that it may be used as a general guide when "a pinch" or "a few grains" of any of the richer seeds is mentioned in future notes.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

The King of Songsters.

May is the month of bird music, the month when every copse, spinney, and hedgerow is crowded with sweet-voiced songsters. This music is not only confined to the hours of sunshine, for after the sun has set behind the hills and the long twilight deepens into darkness, feathered minstrels may still be heard. Upon the marshes the sedge-birds trill whenever disturbed, the melodious Woodlark whistles at the edge of the wood, and in favoured localities the king of songsters sings at the hour of midnight. There is no more conservative bird in existence than the Nightingale. Year after year one may be heard in the same copse, and even in the same bush. The nest is placed within a few feet of the previous year's structure, and where the bird has once been heard, he may with assurance be looked for the following season, unless some local alteration on the one hand, or, on the other, scarcity of the species prevents distribution. These lovely birds appear to be unusually plentiful this year; consequently they are likely to be heard in districts not before favoured. As an instance, we ourselves have several near our village, although it is some years since they were heard so close. We heard one from the house, but so far away that only occasional passages reached us. It was dark and wet, but the bird might be only a passing visitor, and to-morrow be gone; so it was needful for us to face the elements and go in search of the musician. At the top of the road we could hear the singing of birds in opposite directions—one away over the Beeches, and the other across the lavender fields, where a small wood runs down to the railway embankment. We turned our backs to the weather, and, making for the latter place, safely negotiated the hedge and barbed-wire fence and got fairly close to the songster. Now there are singers and singers, and this bird was only a moderate performer. He did a good bubbling note and a nice clear whistle, but had far too many discordant passages. Very different was the bird near the beeches. We were able to get within three or four yards of the bush where he sang, night after night, commencing at about ten-thirty o'clock. Each note was clear and distinct, full and sweet, bubbling with melody; there was no cessation after the other.

The Nightingale's Food.

The Nightingale will eat ordinary earthworms, and is therefore not such a delicate feeder as some imagine.

Increase of Swallows.

Swallows appear to be slightly upon the increase. This is pleasing, for they are undoubtedly prettier and more graceful birds than the more common House Martin.

Passage from White's Selborne.

"The Titlark and Yellowhammer breed late, the latter very late; and, therefore, it is no wonder that they protract their song, for I lay it down as a maxim in ornithology that as long as there is any incubation going on there is music."

Return of the Flycatcher.

The graceful little Spotted Fly-catcher has returned. One was located upon the dead branches of a fir tree. He was a long way off, but the fluttering flight made identification fairly easy. A meddlesome Starling drove him away. We shall no doubt see many of them along the lanes and hedge-rows during the summer.

The Missel Thrush.

In the elm trees at the bottom of my garden a pair of Jackdaws and a pair of Missel Thrushes have set up housekeeping. The 'daws are restless birds and constantly on the move; occasionally one will stray near the home of the Thrushes, when one of the latter instantly dashes out and shows fight, gallantly buffetting the black rascal until he drives him away. It is astonishing how courageous birds become in defence of their eggs or young. Even small weakly birds will do their best to protect their treasures.

THE POULTRY PRESS Ltd.

(INCORPORATED UNDER THE COMPANIES' ACTS 1862 to 1900.)

SHARE CAPITAL - - £9,000

DIVIDED INTO

4,000 Preference Shares of £1 each	£4,000
5,000 Ordinary Shares of £1 each	5,000
	£9,000

Issue of £4,000 Six per cent. Cumulative Preference Shares (the interest on which is guaranteed for two years). Directors, friends and employees of the Company have intimated their intention of applying for 1,250 of these shares which the Directors reserve the right to allot in full. The Preference Shares carry a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of £6 per cent. per annum on the capital for the time being paid up thereon payable by half-yearly instalments on the 22nd August and the 22nd February, and (subject to the payment to the Ordinary Shares of a fixed cumulative dividend at the rate of £10 per cent. per annum) a right to receive out of the profits for each year a further non-cumulative dividend for such year at the rate of £5 per cent. per annum on the Capital for the time being paid up thereon, and rank, both as regards the first mentioned dividend and in a winding up as to repayment of Capital, in priority to all other shares in the capital. The holders of the preference shares may, after the 22nd February, 1913, be required to sell their Preference Shares at 25/- per share pursuant to Article 26.

The 5,000 Ordinary shares above mentioned are to be issued to the Vendors as fully paid up shares, the Vendors thus showing their confidence in the future of the Company by taking their whole payment in Ordinary shares ranking after the Preference shares both for Capital and Dividends.

5/- per share on application. 5/- per share on allotment. 10/- per share on Thursday June 18th, 1908.

The shares may be paid up in full on allotment on or before the 26th day of May 1908, interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum being allowed in respect of the prepayment of instalments.

Applications have already been received from the Directors, their friends and employees of the Company for 1,250 Preference Shares and the remaining 2,750 are now offered for subscription at par.

PROSPECTUS.

The Directors of the Poultry Press Ltd., have decided to give the Poultry Keeping Public an opportunity of acquiring a portion of the Preference Share interest.

They feel that by enabling poultry keepers to participate in the success of the undertaking, they will be expediting that success, and taking a step as advantageous to their own interests as to the interests of poultry keepers themselves.

The bright prospects of "The Poultry World" are so evident as scarcely to need insistance on them at this juncture. The Directors assert without fear of contradiction that no other poultry journal at present on the market can claim so large a proportion of enthusiastic amateurs amongst its readers. No other poultry journal has shown the same rapidity of proportionate increase both in respect of circulation and advertisements, and no other poultry journal has been met at the start of its career with such a wave of general approbation.

In making this issue of Preference shares, the Directors their friends and employees of the Company have applied for 1,250 and the remainder are offered to readers of "The Poultry World" in the confident anticipation that a distribution of a certain proportion of shares amongst poultry keepers themselves, will enable the obviously bright prospects of the paper to materialise more quickly than perhaps would otherwise be the case.

The directors of the Poultry Press Ltd. are all gentlemen who have been closely connected with the publication of similar periodicals, occupying a creditable or noted position in newspaperdom. Mr. Carl, Mr. Watmough and Mr. Berry, have each made big successes of class papers of a similiar order to "The Poultry World." Mr. Carl, the Managing Director, whose experience in conducting Fancy Journals is a large one, is of the opinion that he has never before come across a reading constituency so responsive to any efforts made on their behalf, or so cognisant of the value of practical journalism as the present readers of "The Poultry World." Mr. Carl intends pursuing the same policy in directing "The Poultry World" as that which enabled him to extend the sold-copy circulation of "Cage Birds" from 4,000 copies per week to ten times that number—40,000 copies per week— in that period of six years. The ability that has brought about such results, almost incredible, have been placed at the disposal of "The Poultry World," and Mr. Carl has every hope of being able to show even better results from his management of this Company's property. In fact, the substantial progress made in the period already covered by his management has been highly gratifying to all concerned in the production of the paper. From its first appearance "The Poultry World" was given the heartiest welcome, and has met with such a measure of support as has never before been accorded to any Live Stock Journal. Its circulation and its advertisements have each shown a steady upward growth until now at the present moment "The Poultry World" has a circulation which is 300 per cent beyond that enjoyed by "Poultry and Pigeons" from which paper it was taken.

The services of several highly popular and respected poultry experts and artists have been enlisted on behalf of the company; the names of the Rev. J. N. Williams, C. A. House, W. Hooley, G. F. J. Buvington, E. G. Wippell, standing for all that is progressive, reliable and authoritative in poultry journalism.

The Directors further possess the great advantage of being able to utilise the columns of their successful kindred journals, "Cage Birds," "Pigeons," "Fur and Feather," etc., through which to proclaim the merits of "The Poultry World," and advance its interests amongst prospective poultry keepers.

In order to show the possibilities in respect of circulation and advertisements, a well-known expert has provided the Directors with some interesting figures. According to his calculations, there are in the British Isles alone 35,000 exhibitors of prize poultry, 3,000 exhibitions where poultry is given some measure of representation, 1,000 clubs for people interested in poultry with an aggregate membership of 25,000, 2,000 people engaged in poultry farming on an extensive scale, 10,000 people engaged in poultry farming as a side-line or hobby, 5,000 members of clubs or organisations dealing solely with the utility side.

We have had worked out for us a comparative financial statement of the revenue from poultry advertisements derived by two other poultry journals. The average, so far as we are in a position to judge, comes out roughly as follows:—

Cash received from Advertisements—

	Total per week.		Total per Week.
During Season, No. 1 Journal ...	£120	Out of Season, No. 1 Journal ...	£50
" " No. 2 " ...	450	" " No. 2 " ...	190

These estimates may, of course, be incorrect one way or the other. They are calculated on the face value of the advertisement space. But the wide and great possibilities open to a reputable and well conducted poultry journal must be apparent to everyone familiar with the field.

In fact, the Directors feel such confidence in the success of the paper that Mr. Carl and Mr. Watmough have undertaken to guarantee the dividend on the Preference Shares for the first two years, after which period they feel that there can be no doubt as to the dividend coming out of the profits of the Company.

1. A contract dated the 30th March, 1908, between the Company of the 1st part, Frederick Carl of the 2nd part, and John Edwin Watnough of the 3rd part, whereby in consideration of their respective contracts for services, the Company agreed to allott to the said Frederick Carl, 2,500 Ordinary shares, as fully paid up shares in addition to the salary therein mentioned, and to allott to the said J. E. Watmough, 1,500 Ordinary shares as fully paid up shares in addition to the salary therein mentioned.

2. A contract dated the 30th day of March, 1908, between the Fanciers Newspaper and General Printing and Publishing Company, Limited, of Idle Bradford, of the one part, and the Company of the other part, being a contract for the sale to the Company of the Poultry Section of "Pigeons and Poultry" in consideration of the allotment to the Fanciers Newspaper and General Printing Publishing Company of 1,000 Ordinary Shares as fully paid up Shares.

The Articles of Association provide that the qualification of a Director shall be the holding of at least 100 shares in the Company or the holding of the office of Director of a Limited Liability Company holding at least 500 shares in the Company, and that the remuneration of the Directors shall from time to time be determined by the Company in general meeting, but shall in no way affect the remuneration payable to the said Frederick Carl and John Edwin Watmough respectively under the before-mentioned contract.

Interest of Directors:—

Mr. Frederick Carl is the holder of 1,700 Ordinary shares.

Mr. J. E. Watmough is the holder of 1,500 Ordinary shares.

Mr. William Ewert Berry is the holder of 860 Ordinary shares.

Mr. John Trewavas' qualification is by reason of his being a Director of the Fanciers Newspaper and General Printing and Publishing Company, Limited, which said company is the holder of 1,000 Ordinary shares in this Company.

A copy of the Company's Memorandum of Association is printed in the fold of the Prospectus (or at the foot) and forms part of it.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company and of the above mentioned contracts may be inspected at the offices of the solicitors of the Company at any time during business hours.

The minimum subscription on which the Directors may proceed to allotment is 1,500 shares.

The preliminary expenses including registration fees and fees of the Accountants and Solicitors and the cost of printing, advertising and issuing this prospectus, and stamps are estimated at £200 and will be paid by the Company.

Where no allotment is made the application money will be returned in full and where the number of shares allotted is less than what was applied for, the surplus of the application money will be applied towards the amount payable on allotment and the balance, if any, returned. In case of default in payment of any instalment at its due date the allotment will be liable to cancellation or forfeiture and all amounts previously paid and any interest thereon will be liable to forfeiture.

Application should be made upon the forms accompanying the Prospectus, and sent to the Secretary at the registered office together with a deposit of 5/- per share.

Prospectus and Application Forms may be obtained from the Solicitors or at the Registered office, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Dated 19th May, 1908.

ALWAYS USE OUR

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words, MINIMUM Fourpence. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6 according to size.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.
